A PASTORAL CALL,

And How It Brought Happiness to a Disunited Family.

Written by...
L. M. MONTGOMERY.

MRS. KENNEDY turned from the window where she had been smilelessly watching the golden-red glow of sunset flush with transitory softness and splendor the harsh, bare outlines of the late au- landscape. She was a spare little o- n with a slight stoop, and a quick, r- us step. Her gray hair was drawn -ly back from her lined forehead and twi-d into a hard little knot behind. He- yes were keen and shrewd, her thin, -n lips were tightly, even obstinately -t. Her face was sallow and wrinkled. She looked much older than she was.

"-ere's some one coming up the lane, -inda," she said. "I think it's the -ev minister. If it is go and open the -ar blinds and show him in there. I don- want to see him a mite," she mut- -r vindictively, after Miranda had shuf- -ed out into the hall. "I know what he's -ing for—just to rake those old bones ove again. I haven't a doubt. I'm sick -d ired of it. The last minister soon -u- out I wasn't going to put up with his terference. He learned to hold his ton- e about in the end, I guess. Now I have to be all done over again. I wis folks would mind their own affairs. Wh- business has a man, just because he a minister, to go poking and prying into what doesn't concern him! I'll let tha- oung man know it, too, if he says mu-. He'll think it his duty to rebuke me he's heard of me—and of course he has Gossip and scandal is all that crowd -ov at Pawtucket live on."

She passed her hands over her hair and str-htened her starched, white apron. Th- she listened attentively.

"-es, it is him. I'd kind of hoped it wa- t. Well, he'd better mind what he say to me."

She shut her lips in a way that boded no -od to the young man who was at tha- moment sitting by the parlor window, whe- the warm rays of the sunset fell ov- his boyish face, pale and thin, as if fro- long study. His eyes were large and da- with a singularly earnest and spir-tu- look; his mouth was mobile and sensi-i-. He looked very young—younger -h- he really was, and he was only a little ov- twenty-one. Mrs. Kennedy coming in- -efiant and rigid, felt a sort of protest-ing- anger that this beardless boy should ha- any right to criticise or disapprove o- r actions. She shook hands coldly wi- him and sat down by the other win-do- where the harsh, grey light on her fac- brought out all its hard, uncompro-mi-g lines.

-e young man felt vaguely that she br-ght with her a spirit of hostility. She sa- pright, the angularity and stiffness of -r whole appearance in keeping with the arrangement of the little, square roo-.

-e chairs were set in a prim row alo- the walls; the mats were laid pre-cis-y; some faded photographs in old-fa- oned frames adorned the walls, and ov- the mantel hung a cheap chromo of th- prodigal son. The windows were dr-ed with straight, stiffly-starched, white m- in curtains, so crisp and crackly that on- expected them to snap off at a touch. -e wondered what he should say to her bu- she spoke first.

"-ou're the new minister over at Paw-tu-et, I suppose," she said stiffly. "I'm pl-sed to see you. Perhaps you find it co- in here. These fall days are real ch-y."

"-m not at all cold, thank you, Mrs. K-nedy. I know it is a rather late hour fo- a call, but I wished to visit all the fa-lies along this road to-day, and this is- e last house. You are quite a dis-ta-e from any neighbor."

-e smiled at her as he spoke—a rare, su-len smile that irradiated all his pale, sc-larly face with a warm magnetic glow. T- Rev. Cecil Douglas was still too yo-g to have learned how much that sw-t, sympathetic smile did for him. P-haps when he learned its value its charm would be less potent. People thawed out, unconsciously, under it. Children smiled back to it with the perfect unreasoning confidence of childhood. Hard-working, unsentimental men and women felt their hearts warm to their boyish pastor when he looked into their eyes with that clear smile. Even Mrs. Kennedy felt its influence.

"I do live considerably out of the world, I s'pose," she said less rigidly. "Not that I mind—it keeps me from getting into rows and quarrels with other folks. Pawtucket people ain't angels—I s'pose you've discovered that. I don't set up to be better than others, but I keep to myself. You look kind of young to be a minister."

The young man flushed sensitively. "I look younger than I am," he said, "but I am young—very young and very inexperienced. I often wonder how I dare undertake the responsibilities of such a position as mine. My heart is in my chosen work—I desire to be not unworthy of my high calling. I need all the patience and prayerful sympathy of my people. A minister can do a great deal sometimes, but the means of his usefulness is limited by the spirit of those whom he is appointed to teach and be taught by. I have a great deal to learn—I am willing to begin at the very beginning—I hope—I am sure—that you will all help me in my work."

Mrs. Kennedy was quite silent. She had not expected this, and had no answer ready. The last minister had been in Pawtucket for fifteen years. He was an old man and a good man, but he was very different from this. He had grown a little too dogmatic and severe in his long experience with the contrary-minded in Pawtucket. The Pawtucket people were not easy to get along with. In his own mind he had considered Mrs. Kennedy to be a hard, worldly minded woman. She had felt and resented this. Pawtucket folks heard with relish of certain verbal conflicts between Mrs. Kennedy and the Rev. Dayton—conflicts in which Mrs. Kennedy had held her own with such spirit and energy that the poor pastor was fain to resign her to the dominion of her own evil nature. Mrs. Kennedy herself had grown to have a chronic spite against any and all ministers. She had been thinking with a certain relish, as she sat there, what she would say to her caller if he should try to unlock the door of her skeleton closet. She felt disconcerted that he had taken so different a course.

The young minister looked compassionately at the pinched, discontented face opposite him. He felt instinctively that this woman required help if he were able to give it, or if she would take it when offered.

"You live all alone?" he said. "Yes, you may say so. A servant-girl ain't much company. I'm as good as alone."

"So is my mother now," said the young man softly, "all alone—and I am so far away from her. She misses me, I know, and I miss her more than words can say. She is such a dear, good mother—the best ever a boy had, I think. I suppose every boy thinks that of his mother, though. You have no sons, Mrs. Kennedy?"

Mrs. Kennedy stiffened herself up and looked at him with angry suspicion. She had an odd resemblance to a watchful irritated cat, ready to pounce at any movement. But she saw nothing save kindly interest in the minister's open face.

"Yes, I have one son," she said deliberately, "or I had. I don't consider him as a son now after the way he has behaved. It's a wonder you haven't heard. His name is Walter Kennedy. He lives in that little shanty away down at the corners. You can see the end of it beyond that bush."

She pointed defiantly out of the window behind him. Her eyes were angry and her breath came faster.

"I was there this afternoon," said Mr. Douglas, slowly. He felt surprised and was not sure of his ground. "I did not know you were his mother. He has a very sweet wife and child."

"That ain't nothing to me," retorted Mrs. Kennedy acridly. "I ought to know how sweet she is, I guess. You needn't talk—I've had enough lecturing on that subject already. I don't want ever to have anything to do with them again. I know what it is to have an ungrateful child. Walter Kennedy and his wife can go their own way for all of me. I don't want to hear nothing about them. I haven't no dealings with them and don't want to have."

She paused with a cowering exultation over her boldness in speaking so to the minister. She expected a severe, shocked rebuke, but none came.

"I am sorry," he said simply. "Perhaps things will be better some day."

"You don't know much about the Kennedys if you think that. We mean a thing when we say it. I didn't drive Walter away. He went of his own accord, so I guess I won't ask him to come back again in a hurry."

She stopped abruptly, and looked at him suspiciously. "It's queer you haven't heard about it before this. Ain't that what you came here for—just to lecture me about that affair?

"Mrs. Kennedy, I did not even know you had a son. You need not tell me anything about it if you do not wish to!"

"Ah! I dunno if I care. I ain't ashamed of my part. Somebody else 'll tell you if I don't, and they'll put more to it. Some of the Pawtucket folks have great imaginations. Walter's father died when he was a baby—he was our only child. I brought him up, and I did as well as I could for him. I was a good mother to Walter if I do say it. I worked hard and saved for him. I won't say he wasn't a good son, too—he was; I wouldn't ask for a better. I never heard a cross word from him.

"Then he got married—he married Esther Willis. I was dead against it from the first, but Walter wouldn't listen to me. I hadn't nothing against Esther, but she weren't brought up to be a farmer's wife. She didn't know how to work. She was as pretty as a picture, and just as useless. She was a flighty thing, with a lot of high-falutin' ideas. It was nothing but trouble after Walter brought her here. I ain't saying the blame was all on Esther's side. I s'pose I ain't any too easy to get along with. A woman that's been at the head of a house for thirty years don't feel like knuckling under to any young chit. Esther hadn't no consideration for me. She come between me and Walter—that's what she did. She set him against me—me, his mother that had slaved for him. He always took her part. Everything she did was right. He never made any allowance for me. I wasn't going to stand it—I wonder who'd expect me to! The house was mine, and so was the farm. I told them that one day, but I didn't suppose—well, they just went. That high-stepping wife of Walter's couldn't swallow my saying that. He had a bit of land down at the Corners, and he put up a shanty on it and took Esther and the baby down there. I told him if he went out of my house he went out of my heart and life. He had his warning. And I told Esther I'd never forgive her for taking my son away from me. She made out she was sorry—I knew she was just as glad as could be in her heart.

"That was two years ago. I ain't ever spoke to either of them since, and I don't ever mean to. I've got on well enough since they left, and I've had some peace of my life. I don't know why I'm telling you all this. You ain't like Mr. Dayton, though. He used to make me mad. He said it was wicked and sinful to show such an unforgiving, unchristian spirit. I s'pose it is wicked. Everybody's a good deal wickeder than they let on. Some show it more than others—that's all the difference. I ain't going to be trodden on and then be as meek as Moses, I can tell you. I s'pose you think I'm unnatural and inhuman, too. Mr. Dayton did!"

She threw the last sentence at him defiantly. Her thin little body trembled; her knotty, toil-worn fingers were tightly interlaced. He reached forward and took one of the rough, unsightly hands in his own slender white one. It was an impulsive movement as of a son seeking to soothe his mother.

THE MOODY TRAINING SCHOOL AT NORTHFIELD.

Trained Christian Workers.

Closing Days at Northfield Among the Army of Students Training for the Home and Foreign Mission Fields.

THE students of Mr. D. L. Moody's training school at Northfield, Mass., were reminded that their year's work was drawing to a close, last Sunday, when a most helpful sermon was preached for them by Dr. P. I. Scofield. The speaker began by saying that these words applied equally to the lives of his hearers as to that of King David. He went on to show how the largest life may be led in the narrowest circumstances, and how Jesus of Nazareth lived a large life in the midst of insignificantly small things.

The closing exercises took place on Thursday afternoon, in the dining hall of "The Northfield," which was most tastefully decorated. Some excellent reviews of the year's work were given by the students on the following subjects: "Books of the Bible," "Pentateuch," "Gospel of John," "The Dispensations," "Personal Work," "Physical Culture," and "Nursing," while the more practical side was shown in the exhibitions of cooking, sewing and drawing. One or two extracts from some of the papers may not be out of place here.

The Gospel of John: "While his kingship and service had been clearly set forth by Matthew and Mark respectively, and his perfect humanity by Luke, John makes as real his divinity. He begins not like his predecessors from an earthly starting point, nor in the opening of his human ministry, but in the depths of eternity. 'In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.' On this foundation, 'the Word was God,' was built an imperishable witness by the sevenfold testimony recorded."

Books of the Bible: "'Pauls Photograph.' But this one thing—I; forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus." God still needs people who look like this to carry on his work. When we most resemble Christ we can be used at the court of kings like Daniel, or what is often harder. He can trust us to live patiently and faithfully for him in that small, quiet, unknown place where he puts us, counting not whether the service be great or small so long as he gives it, looking not to ourselves or others, but to Jesus."

The exercises concluded with a farewell address from Dr. P. I. Scofield on "The Trained Christian Worker." The object of the Northfield Training School, which would be more properly called the Northfield Training Home—opening each year on the 1st of October—is not only to fit young women for home and foreign missionaries or for any sphere to which God may lead them, but to help them to yield themselves more fully, as those that are alive from the dead, unto him who loved them and gave himself for them. While too much cannot be said in praise of the splendid teaching, the home life is perhaps one of the greatest factors to this end, and the grateful recognition of this fact by many of the old students, now successful laborers together with Christ, proves that the objects for which the Training School was established have not failed. "To God be the glory."

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Spring Weather and the Garden—Unruly Children and their Management—A Young Woman's Love—Children's Outings.

I SUPPOSE that everybody is conscious of a certain impulse to renewed life in the earlier days of spring. Who can help being glad when the flowers appear again, the birds sing, the trees put on their young leaves, and all the earth is one pulse of joy? I always feel especially glad in behalf of invalids who have been shut in the house during the winter, and to whom the spring brings release. Among our friends there are always old people who have to guard themselves against chilly blasts, and whose freedom of movement is much restricted during the reign of the frost king. The children, too, in these days take up the old games which they can play in outdoor freedom, such as kite-flying, rolling hoops, spinning tops, and all other amusements which children have always played in the bright spring weather. Don't be afraid to let the children romp.

But so many letters have come crowding in upon me since I last sat down among you, dear friends, that I cannot spend any more time to-day in talking with you as I would like to of the robbins and thrushes, the wrens and the bluebirds, the violets and the buttercups. Only I am glad for them, and I must say so. One sweet friend in South Carolina sent me a large box of flowers from her garden, which was highly appreciated.

THE other day in crossing a ferry, I observed a scene which gave me food for reflection. A dear little boy, about three years of age, came on board the boat with his mother. The child was evidently very tired, and I fancied that the mother had been obliged to take him with her on a shopping expedition, or in visits to friends, and that she had been compelled to let him lose his ordinary nap and to drag him about with her until he was extremely tired. At all events, the little fellow was in a very naughty temper. His mother attempted to soothe him, lifting him tenderly up in her arms, and he was a very heavyweight; but he fought her like a little fury, beating her with both hands, kicking, screaming and behaving altogether like a miniature cyclone. It interested me very much to see the attitude of the people around. The incident occurred at an hour when a great many people were on the boat, and when the child's behavior drew the attention of passengers going home at night, who were more or less disturbed by the scene. Several women remarked audibly that if that child belonged to them, they would very soon settle him, and intimated that it was a case in which Solomon's remedy was very much in order. It apparently did not occur to these critics that the place and time were rather inconvenient for the administration of such justice on the part of the mother; that all she could do was to try to soothe the little tempest of a laddie as best she could. One dear lady opened a box of candy and proffered a tempting bonbon; but the small rebel refused to so much as look at it, and rejected it with royal disdain.

FINALLY, his violence subsided into a sort of moaning cry, which he kept up until the boat touched the dock, and the mother dragged him away, her flushed face and wearied look showing how worn out she was by the affair while the child was by this time almost too sleepy to walk. I remarked to a friend that the cause of the trouble was no doubt twofold; partly that the little fellow was not accustomed to obedience, but usually had his own way without check in the ordinary management of the home; the other that he had become tired to the verge of exhaustion, and older people when very tired sometimes lose control of their nerves. It is nothing unusual for a grown person to confess to a state of feeling in which it would be a relief to scream, and many grown up people are only kept from hysteric demonstrations by the fact that they would be ashamed to give way to them. Occasionally, one meets a poor, distraught woman who cries and laughs and behaves most abominably when she loses grasp of her temper and her nerves.

A YOUNG WOMAN writes in a very sweet note that she is in a dilemma with regard to a lady whom she knows but slightly, but who has so strongly attracted her that she has grown to love her very much. Whenever she thinks of this beautiful woman, there is a warm glow at her heart. She would desire nothing more than to be like her, and the thought of her is a very strong influence in her life. She says: "I do not expect her ever to love me; I am content with loving her." I am sure, however, that if the older woman knew how she had attracted this young heart she would be only too glad to pour out love in return. Certainly, my dear child, it is quite proper for you to send a letter or a little birthday gift, if you choose, to this friend who has so won your love.

I WISH I could persuade mothers in general that it is often a mistaken kindness which leads them to take little children about with them on long tramps. Not a great while ago, a dear young mother was talking to me about her two little ones, aged respectively two and a half and four years of age. She told me that she was in the habit of taking these children to museums, menageries, art stores and every place of amusement of which she could think, saying that she did it in order that their minds might be properly developed. "But, dear lady," I said, "such babies are still too young to enjoy and appreciate these advantages. Why do you not wait until they are a little older?" "O," she said, "I wish to sow the seed in the virgin soil and I put off my own work until eight o'clock at night when my babies are asleep, so that I can devote the entire day to them. I often do all my housework between eight and eleven o'clock at night, and my mother, who is very old-fashioned, does not hesitate to say that I am a very silly woman." One could hardly help agreeing with the sensible old-fashioned mother. Children thrive better than most people think on a little wholesome neglect and mothers are often the better for running away for a while from their children. Almost always there is some kind friend or neighbor who will step into the breach and take care of the children for an hour or two, if there is no one else at home to leave them with. Do not take the poor little things with you wherever you go. Let their outings be suited to the length of their little legs. Of course sometimes it cannot be helped. The children must accompany their mother or get no fresh air.

Humors in the Blood

That pimple on your arm, those itching and burning hives, those numerous little irruptions, just as surely indicate impurities in the blood, which should have prompt and careful attention, as do boils, carbuncles, ulcers, salt rheum and the severest forms of scrofula. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures all humors of the blood of every form and degree. The evidence of its cures of the worst scrofula diseases is abundant and conclusive. The greater includes the less. And the peculiar merit of Hood's Sarsaparilla enables it to cure simple as well as serious ailments when all other medicines fail. Acting thoroughly on the blood, its beneficial effects penetrate every part of the system. Thousands of testimonials tell of blood purified, strength and appetite renewed, stomach toned, health perfectly restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"DEAR SIRS:—For eight years I was a sufferer from hip disease. I had three running sores on one of my hips and I could not walk across the room without crutches, which I was obliged to use all the time in getting about. Every winter I was worse and was confined to my bed for six or seven weeks at a time. I finally began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and it has made a perfect cure. I feel confident it saved my life. I am now well and hearty, and have never had any trouble with my hip since being cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. I feel very thankful for this great medicine and earnestly recommend it to all who are afflicted as I have been, or who are suffering from any ailment that is caused by impure blood. It has done a wonderful work for me. The sores are all healed. I have a good appetite, am strong and well and Hood's Sarsaparilla has given me permanent good health." OLLIE L. HELPFUL ANECDOTES

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

SELF-MASTERY.

LIEUT. HENDERSON, of the English army, recently risked his life by going alone into the Sofa Camp, at Wa, in the Gold Coast region in Africa. He was at first treated as a prisoner, and his captors discussed before him with him the manner in which he was to be put to death.

The victim listened awhile till he was tired of it. "Oh, well," he said, "I can't be bothered with your arguments. I am very sorry; let me know when you have made up your minds," and off to sleep he went. His unexpected performance saved his life. His calm indifference persuaded the natives that they had to do with some one of importance. Unwilling to take on themselves the responsibility of his death, they sent him unharmed to the court of their great king Samory. Here again his self-composure saved his life. He found Samory on a throne surrounded by four thousand warriors, yet when motioned to do homage on his hands and knees, he did nothing of the sort. He simply sat on the throne beside Samory, taking that monarch warmly by the hand. Thanks to this, and to nothing else, he was accepted as the representative of a great sovereign instead of a captive doomed to death. He then told to Samory of the Queen of England, and Samory talked of himself. Thus a mission which might have ended, as so many missions have ended, in a terrible silence, and a suspicion of unspeakable horrors, did in fact end in a valuable basis for future relations between Great Britain and a Mohammedan power. We should live in such a consciousness of God and our relation to him, being so assured of his presence and love for us, that under all circumstances we shall be able to sustain ourselves with composure. The world can only be captured for Christ by men and women who consciously represent their divine Lord.

The Peril of Self-Indulgence.

The island of Tahiti, one of the Society Islands, is said to be one of the most fascinating in the world. The climate is temperate and even all the year round, the vegetation is luxuriant, the nights full of perfume and mystical light.

The influence of the dreamy, lazy life is very insidious. It is not necessary to work, as the land furnishes food without the labor of tilling. A number of Americans and French who have gone there for a visit have become entirely captured with the languorous existence and, like the visitors to Lotus land, they lie down and forget friends, home, ambition, and everything. But no great men or women have ever been developed in such a place. Cape Cod, with its storm-swept sands, and thin soil, and its harsh New England climate, is a much better place to grow men and women who are to count in the world's civilization. The road to greatness is the path of self-denial. We are to follow in the footsteps of him who denied himself ease and luxury until he had not where to lay his head. It is the path of the cross, but it is also the road to the crown.

Look Out for the Vultures.

Last summer an enterprising man took a band of sheep to Alaska; he drove the sheep in over the Dawson trail, but before reaching Dawson cold weather came on and he decided to kill his sheep. He sold three hundred of them for twenty thousand dollars, but concluded to hold the remainder for a better market. He killed the four hundred sheep he had left in a secluded place, off the line of travel, and suspended the carcasses on poles far enough above the ground to be out of reach of wild animals. He left two young men to watch the mutton and proceeded to look for a mining claim.

While he was thus engaged, the young men became weary of watching over the sheep, and imagining Dawson to be only a few miles away, started for the city to enjoy the pleasures of the town. It proved to be one hundred miles to Dawson, so their absence was more extended than they had intended. When the owner of the mutton returned from his prospecting tour, he found in place of the carcasses of four hundred sheep, four hundred bleached skeletons. The eagles, ravens, crows, kites, hawks, and other birds of prey which inhabit that region had been feasting on mutton. These feathered thieves had sent the word around, and all the vultures and birds of prey in that region, from Behring Sea to the Mackenzie River, had gathered to the feast. Alas! many a more precious treasure is often left to be preyed upon by the vultures while a man turns aside in greediness to get rich. Many a man neglects the mental and religious training of his family, thinking he can make up for it after awhile, when he has acquired a fortune. When it is too late he finds that human birds of prey have plucked the souls committed to his care of everything most valuable.

The Growth of Influence.

A remark made to one of the Senate sub-committee, while the committee was investigating the Mississippi River, shows very clearly how far the work of building up is carried on by that great stream:

"The Mississippi is to-day," said one of those who testified before the committee, "one hundred miles longer than it was when De Soto first gazed on its muddy rush. Just give her time enough and she will build herself clear on across the Gulf." The growth of this great river suggests the growth of influence, whether it be of a man or an institution; as time goes on a strong character, a great principle, or a vital organization in behalf of a great growth grows with every year, and makes itself felt more and more.

Poisonous Fangs.

Ranging through that section of the United States where New Mexico and Arizona meet, are bands of wild animals whose bites are more to be feared than that of the centipede, and is as fatal as the venom of the rattlesnake.

They are known as the wild dogs of Arizona, and so bold have they become that the residents round about the field of their operations are organizing to hunt them down. These brutes form a species by themselves, and no natural history tells of them. The domestic animals which meet death through these wild dogs are by no means killed by them because food is needed, but die from the effects of the bite, which in every case produces symptoms exactly similar to strychnine poisoning. The poisonous fangs of these wild dogs are like the effects of sin upon a human life, leaves its poison in the blood. It may not kill so quickly as the fangs of these beasts, but it poisons just as certainly the moral nature, and unless healed by the great physician, the soul that is once bitten of sin will surely die.

Tokens of Immortality.*

IF man be immortal, his ideals and aspirations, unfulfilled here, may be realized hereafter. In imagination, every plan is complete and every ideal perfect. Each purpose hangs before the mind's eye like a heavenly vision. But the ideals suffer grievously in the work of embodiment. By the time the plan has passed through man's mind and been formulated, it is crippled and sadly disfigured. Beethoven tells us his polished symphony is but an empty echo of the heavenly music he heard in his dream. The generations have gazed enraptured upon Raphael's Sistine Madonna. But the artist painted it with anxious face and left it with troubled and disappointed heart. Try as he would, the painting, as we see it, is only an attempt to reproduce the vision Raphael saw, but could not fully realize upon the canvas. What poet or prophet ever fully uttered all his dreams? What philanthropist ever realized all his reforms? What statesman ever overtook his ideals? Does not each new discovery open a thousand new and hitherto unsuspected possibilities for the inventor? Dying at ninety years of age, Humboldt was still an eager student. Feeling that he had just begun to learn how to study, the great naturalist exclaimed: "Oh, for another one hundred years!"

But what if there is another life? If Humboldt here thought through gross nerves and brain, what if there he thinks through fine ether? What if Beethoven has completed the chords broken and interrupted here? What if Socrates has finished the argument interrupted by the jailer's hemlock, and justified the ways of God, to Critias? The canvas Raphael painted has endured for three centuries. But has God ordained that the canvas shall be preserved while the artist has fallen into dust? Is "In Memoriam" more than Tennyson? Is St. Paul's Cathedral more than Sir Christopher Wren, its architect? Is the leaf to live, while the tree dies? Reason and conscience whisper, it cannot be. If thoughts live, the thinker cannot die. To suppose that death ends all is intellectually as absurd as it is morally monstrous.

The immortal life furnishes the explanation of the early dying of those from whom society has the right to expect the most of good. The list of illustrious ones whose star sank back to the horizon before it had approached its zenith, is long and sad. At twenty-two, Keats knew that he must die, and wrote his epitaph: "Here lies one whose name is writ in water." And Shelley, his friend, whose soul, rising, poured forth sweet notes, like the skylark of which he sang, died when only thirty. Mozart died at thirty-six; Raphael at thirty-seven; Burns before he was thirty-eight. No man in all his generation had a clearer vision, or promised more for his age, than Frederick W. Robertson. Dying at thirty-seven, the scholar-preacher exclaimed: "It is all a mystery. Man is like a candle blown out by a puff of wind." In a single week after Fort Sumter was fired upon, the colleges of our land stood silent; deserted all their class-rooms. When several years had passed, the rooms had filled again, but not with the old students!

Pathetic, also, is the death of the ten talent minds, to fame and fortune all unknown. Several years ago some one clipped a little poem from an obscure country paper and sent it to a great magazine. Scholars read it with delight. An inquiry for its author was instituted. This poem, bearing the mark of genius, proved to have been written by a boy—a section hand upon the railway; and he was dead. This we know—no more. Why did the harp break after the first song was sung? Why died that noble boy Arthur Hallam, whose genius promised so much for English literature? Young Charles Emerson rose above Harvard College like a rising sun. If that sun perished when it disappeared, what signified its rising? Angels have entered our homes—"their footprints graves." Departing with them have gone our dear ones who were best fitted to live.

HABITS.

A Law of Nature Which Operates for Good or Evil. Prov. 6 : 6-11 ; 12 : 14-25; Luke 4:16.

Life teaches no lesson more persistently or more emphatically than the power of habit. It is not only easier to do a second and a third time the thing that has been done before, but it is difficult to avoid it. The tendency to form habits and to continue them is, as the greatest philosopher of this century has said, "at once our supreme strength and our miserable weakness." To form good habits makes virtue easy; to form bad ones makes it almost impossible. Almost imperceptibly and unconsciously, habits are formed, which enslave a man and bind him to ruin. It is this fact which makes youth so critical a period. The boy at school, the young man in the business house, or the office is invoking forces that will control his whole future life, or which can be eliminated only after a struggle. that wrenches apart his whole nature. To see it seems a light matter to smoke a cigar or drink a glass of wine, or attend the theatre, or go to see a race, or make a bet, or bet in after years, when these things have grown habitual, the victim looks back to his initiation and wonders that he could have entered this course with so light a heart. One of the most heartbreaking experiences of the Christian worker who are striving to rescue the fallen and depraved, is to see the struggles made by men who are striving to get free from the bonds of habit. They are almost helpless when they make the effort in earnest, and the later the struggle is postponed the more hopeless does it become. We seem to give up a certain portion of our liberty of action with everything that we do. The tendency to recurrence enslaves us so that every new departure requires an effort great in proportion to the momentum we have acquired in the old direction. There are habits that circumscribe our action as definitely as would a wall that we might build around us, and these walls rise layer by layer with every action of our acts. Recognizing then the law in our members, which Paul graphically describes, interposes, and hates the things that we would not. The knowledge of right and wrong, we already possess, purchased for us at such fearful cost, but that is not sufficient. There is duty in our own spiritual kingdom, and the elements which should be in subjection and under resolute control have usurped the throne and are themselves in supremacy. We know that this should be so, we know the kind of life we ought to live, but our knowledge only increases our responsibility and our self-condemnation. What we need is that the authority which should rule in our nature should be so reinforced that it will compel obedience and regulate our lives. This is the power that God, through Christ, offers to give. He offers to impart the divine life to us, so that actually Christ shall live in our hearts and give us precisely the forces that we need. This is the revelation which gives hope to the despairing and energy to the weak. We distrust ourselves, and with good reason; but when we have at command unbounded strength, which we can draw upon at will, there is hope. We need, too, power for service. And this, also, comes from the same source. No thing is more remarkable than the character of our most successful soul-winner. We have seen learning fail, and eloquence fail, and have seen success follow the labors of some plain-spoken man, who seemed to have none of the qualities we have deemed essential to the work. This kind of power is a gift, and it comes to the man who forgets himself and trusts wholly in Christ.

GOD'S LONG-SUFFERING.

The Patience of God a Motive to Repentance and Holiness. II. Peter 3 : 9-15.

It is surprising that in spite of all the assurances that have been given us, the character of God should have been so long misunderstood. It is only within the last century that our teachers and preachers have given the fatherly side of his character the prominence that it had in Christ's teaching. Patience, kindness, forbearance, and infinite love are the qualities, as we now see, that he wishes us to dwell upon and wishes the world to recognize in him. That there is another side to his character we know, and that also must be presented; but that should occasion us no surprise. We know that even in the human character the anger of one who is uniformly kind and affectionate is more to be dreaded than that of a man who is surly and passionate. But even this fact feebly indicates the long-suffering of God. He waits and bears with our wrongdoing in the hope that we shall turn to him and love him.

He is not willing that any should perish, but he will force no man into his kingdom. He leaves us free because he would have us choose the right, and he waits for us to turn to him with the patience of love and compassion that our obstinacy will entail, and stands ready to help us. The father who has been pained by the misconduct of a beloved child, in whose welfare his soul is bound up, knows what this yearning means. He shrinks from punishing him, he longs to have him repent. It gladdens his heart when the child repents and reforms. Thus God yearns over men and rejoices when they turn from their sins and seek pardon.

THE GIFT OF POWER.

The Christian Dependent on God for Power. Acts 1:8; 2:1-7; I. Peter 1:12.

A very slight analysis of character is sufficient to convince any one that the supreme need of human nature struggling after higher life, is the need of power. Conscience, when once it is free, may be trusted to point the way, and prefer its directions and its warnings. The law in our members, which Paul graphically describes, interposes, and prevents the things that we would not. The knowledge of right and wrong, we already possess, purchased for us at such fearful cost, but that is not sufficient. There is duty in our own spiritual kingdom, and the elements which should be in subjection and under resolute control have usurped the throne and are themselves in supremacy. We know that this should be so, we know the kind of life we ought to live, but our knowledge only increases our responsibility and our self-condemnation. What we need is that the authority which should rule in our nature may be so reinforced that it will compel obedience and regulate our lives. This is the power that God, through Christ, offers to give. He offers to impart the divine life to us, so that actually Christ shall live in our hearts and give us precisely the forces that we need. This is the revelation which gives hope to the despairing and energy to the weak. We distrust ourselves, and with good reason; but when we have at command unbounded strength, which we can draw upon at will, there is hope. We need, too, power for service. And this, also, comes from the same source. No thing is more remarkable than the character of our most successful soul-winner. We have seen learning fail, and eloquence fail, and have seen success follow the labors of some plain-spoken man, who seemed to have none of the qualities

The Colony for the Education of Liberated Slaves in Africa to Have the Help of a Medical Missionary.

SO encouraging are the latest reports received from Heli Chatelain of the prospects of the settlement near Caconda, and of the opportunities there are there for missionary work that the need of sending more laborers into the field has been impressed on the minds of the managers in America. It has become more and more evident that to get the settlement into a condition to receive the first contingent of liberated slaves within a reasonable time, the force now on the field must be increased. Much work has to be done, and there are opportunities for missionary labor among the neighbors of the colony, which should not be neglected, even if it delays the erection of the homes and the preparation of the land for cultivation. In view of the fact, there has been a call for volunteers to go out. The first to respond was the Secretary of the League, Dr. George Harry Dowkontt, who has been accepted and expects to sail about May 1.

DR. GEO. HARRY DOWKONTT.

Dr. Dowkontt is the eldest son of Dr. George D. Dowkontt, of New York, the famous leader of medical missionary work, whose services to the cause have frequently been mentioned in this journal. Dr. Summers, who gave his life for Africa; Dr. W. J. Hall, who laid down his life in Corea; Dr. W. T. Currie, of Cisamba, Heli Chatelain, and a host of devoted men and women now laboring in the foreign mission field have been indebted to the good physician for help in the medical training, which they are now turning to excellent account in heathen lands. He has now added to the obligations that the missionary cause is under to him, by giving his son to the work.

George Harry Dowkontt is twenty-nine years of age. His parents were residing at Portsmouth, England, at the time of his birth, but shortly afterwards, they came to this country, where their son has been brought up. He was educated at Pennington Seminary, and subsequently went to Princeton, where he won fame both in the class-room and on the football field. In the atmosphere of his father's home, it was inevitable that his thoughts should be turned to the fields of labor which were being occupied by the consecrated men and women, who were being trained under his father's supervision for service as medical missionaries. The Dark Continent especially seemed to beckon him. As a boy his mother had told him the story of Livingstone's life, of Stanley's journey in search of him, and of the heroes and heroines who counted not their lives dear to them, but had gone out in the spirit of self-sacrifice to win Africa for Christ. As young Dowkontt grew up the desire to give himself to labor in Africa increased, and after his conversion the call became imperative. He set himself to work to obtain the necessary training, assured that his value in the field would be immensely enhanced by medical knowledge. Two years ago he graduated from one of the leading medical schools of New York, and since that time he has been active in religious work in the city, awaiting the opportunity for foreign service. Once a week he has conducted a service in the Judson Memorial Church, has taken a prominent part in the Y. M. C. A., and in the work of the Armitage House, and has taught a large Bible class. When the Philafrican League was organized he became its secretary, and has worked indefatigably to make the claims of the League known to the Christian public of America. To such a young man the need of help in the Caconda settlement was a call to service. The Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, with which he is connected, and its pastor, Dr. Faunce, sympathized heartily with him in his desire to go, and knowing well how valuable his services would be, gave him cordial godspeed. We understand that arrangements are in progress in the church to defray Dr. Dowkontt's expenses out and to support him while he is in the field.

As Dr. Dowkontt and Heli Chatelain have long been friends, and were brought into close association during Mr. Chatelain's student life, we may be sure that a hearty welcome awaits the young man at Caconda, and his coming will be hailed with delight by the over-worked laborers in the settlement. Other volunteers have signified their wish to go, and it is probable that if similar arrangements can be made to those which the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church contemplates there will be other accessions to the little group of self-sacrificing workers at Caconda. This fact is very encouraging, for there appears, from Mr. Chatelain's letters, to be a rich harvest of souls ripening there, which, in the near future, will demand the services of a large force of reapers.

A Forty-Year Clock.

Accounts have been recently published of a very remarkable clock made by a Chicago jeweler. He calculated that at the rate of two minutes a day, it would take about sixty days out of his remaining years to wind up an ordinary clock. This set him to thinking, and he spent his odd moments in devising a clock that would need to be wound but once every forty years. He claims that he has produced the wonderful piece of mechanism. His time-piece, fifteen inches in diameter, weighs seventy-five pounds. The movement is geared so that the barrel-wheel containing the main-spring revolves once in two and a half years. When this wheel has made sixteen revolutions somebody will have to give the key seventeen turns. The clock will then be wound up for another forty years. The first wheel from the barrel-wheel crowds around at the rate of one turn a year. The dial plate is six inches in diameter.

Red Eagle, Missionary.

According to a Western paper, Red Eagle, a French Iroquois Indian, who was present at the death of Sitting Bull during the Sioux uprising in the winter of 1890, has been recently describing that tragedy at the Volunteer Barracks in Omaha. Red Eagle is a young man, tall and rather handsome, in feature giving little token of his Indian descent. He dresses in an Indian costume of some soft material resembling buckskin, plentifully beaded and fringed about the edges and covered over with fangles and bangles that set off by their glister the red and yellow of his coverings. His long, black hair, falling loosely about his shoulders, has a picturesque effect to his general make-up. Red Eagle has a remarkable command of English. His talk is bright and flavored with a rough and ready wit that seems to take immensely with his hearers. He is a type of the traditional Indian orator in that he possesses a certain simple eloquence coupled with a power of putting things that hold the attention of his audience throughout. For the last seven years he has been engaged in missionary work, chiefly among the Indians. Now he is traveling in the interests of the Volunteers of America. It is occasion of joy to Christian people when they hear that Indian eloquence, once used to excite war, is now spent in declaring the Gospel of peace.

Missionary and Mandarin.

Dr. Allen, who has been a missionary in China for forty years, is on a visit to this country, having crossed the ocean to attend a general conference which meets in Baltimore in May. In 1858, when Dr. Allen first went to China, there were 1,000 converts to Christianity in the Flowery Kingdom; now there are 80,000 church members in China. "The Christian influence," says Dr. Allen, "has extended immensely beyond that. The natural character of the work reaches far beyond the church establishment." The effect of the war with Japan, he says, has been to open China to missionary influence. China could not but recognize that the superiority of her antagonist was due to western civilization. He declares that China was never so ready to receive the benefits of the work of Christian missionaries and to develop herself as at the present time. Dr. Allen is well qualified to speak on this subject. He was at one time, in an educational way, in the service of the Chinese Government, has translated over one hundred volumes into the Chinese language, and has founded a number of educational institutions in China, among which are the Anglo-Chinese College and the Anglo-Chinese Girls' High School, in Shanghai, where he resides. He received his title of Mandarin as a mark of literary distinction, and his educational and literary work is coined under imperial sanction. His Chinese name, Ling Sien Sun, which is the best the Chinese can do to say, Young J. Allen. An important event which is to be celebrated at the conference which he comes to attend is the semi-centennial of the establishment of the mission in China.

"The Queen Butter Maker should be callled 'The Dairy Maid's Friend.' Our experience with the one now in use at our farm at Ashburn, Va., near Washington, D. C., is that it makes butter quickly, of as fine grain and quality and really more of it than made in any other of our churns, and this method of butter making, compared with the old one, is as the lightning express of to-day compared with the stage coach of olden times. We value highly the beautiful Butter Maker we received and are glad to recommend it as a first-class churn."

Bronchitis

Or Incipient Consumption.

A New Method of Curing this Disease.

Recommended by Thirty-eight Hundred Physicians.

Bronchitis is an inflammation of the mucous membrane lining the air passages, and is manifested by hoarseness and irritating cough, sometimes accompanied by fever and soreness in the chest. In its more advanced stages, there is hectic fever, emaciation, loss of voice and other symptoms of consumption.

Treatment and Cure.—Bronchitis, in the beginning, is purely a local disease of the air passages, and cannot be reached by stomach medicines or liquids in any form. The use of sprays, douches and atomizers only serve to cause further irritation, and are not only useless, but positively dangerous. Air is the only thing that can reach the parts affected. It must be dry air at that. Herein lies the secret of the great success of "HYOMEI" in all bronchial troubles. The air you breathe through Booth's Inhaler is dry, freed from all microbes and laden with nature's own antisceptic; this air reaches every part of the bronchial tubes and lungs, kills at once the germs of disease, allaying the irritation caused by their presence and healing the inflamed membrane with astonishing rapidity; all this without any irritation to the patient, as the inhaler can be carried in the pocket and used at any time or in any place.

Note.—In cases where there is soreness of the chest, "HYOMEI" Balm, the wonderful healer, should be used in connection with the Inhaler.

"HYOMEI"

Cures by Inhalation.

It is Nature's own remedy given through the air you breathe. There is no danger, no risk. Your money is refunded if it fails to relieve.

"Hyomei" Outfit, $1.00. Extra Inhaler, 50c. "Hyomei" Balm, 25c. Sold by druggists or sent by mail. Write for story of "Hyomei." Free.

A Winged Sailor.

Sunday afternoon, March 20, there alighted in the yard of Mr. Melville J. Pride, Stroudwater, Maine, a beautiful buff-colored homing pigeon. It was almost exhausted and was easily caught. On one leg, Mr. Pride found a small plate, inscribed, "7136, U. S. N." On the other leg he found the small tube that is the carrier pigeon's mail pouch, and in this a note, saying that if the bird alighted on board ship the master would confer a favor by feeding and watering; if he alighted on shore, the finder was requested to forward him by American Express to Portsmouth Navy Yard, with which request Mr. Pride complied. The novel little Government employee, judging from his condition, had come a long distance over water, after being released from a United States ship.

WALKING WITH JESUS.

DEAR Saviour, I would walk with thee,
Wilt thou not come and walk with me?
And lead me with thy mighty hand
Across this dreary, desert land.

With manna feed my hungry soul,
And thus to me thyself unfold,
And talk with me along the way
Till burns my heart with thee to stay.

And when arrives the eventide,
Wilt thou not still with me abide,
And let me lean upon thy breast,
And give me sweet, refreshing rest?

Thus, day by day, till life shall end,
My life with thine in union blend,
Until with thee I'm made complete,
And for thy use made wholly meet.

FOUR SUPERB TYPES OF DAHLIAS.

Cactus and Decorative This section has revolutionized dahlia culture during the past few years and is the most useful and beautiful of the entire family. Flowers medium to very large size, of most exquisite finish, soft, delicate, and graceful. Colors extremely delicate and rare, the blending of shades and tints being surpassingly lovely. Flowers perfectly double, loosely arranged, irregular in outline, and borne on good stems, well supplied with buds and foliage; are most valuable for cutting and general decorations, and embrace such popular types as Clifford W. Bruton, Iridescent, and Nymphæa.

Fancy Most popular everywhere, owing to the lovely combination of colors in the same flower. Are splashed, penciled, margined, and variegated in every conceivable manner and form. Flowers large, beautiful, and of regular form; plants strong, vigorous growers and free bloomers. General favorites and usually planted in garden collections and as specimen plants.

Pompon or Bouquet Flowers of perfect form and of every color, shade, and tint found in dahlias, very highly colored, while many are tipped and variegated. Plants of dwarf compact growth, and being continually covered with a mass of flowers are very effective for bedding and borders. Flowers largely used for bouquets and decorations, lasting a long time after being cut. Especially valuable for pot culture and for planting on small grounds where large collections are desired, as they can be planted closer than the larger sorts.

Show Highly prized for a beautiful show en masse. Very large, of strong, compact form, and double to the centre. In many cases the outer petals reflex to the stem, forming a perfect ball. The oldest form of the double dahlia, and best known and most universally grown. Some are unsurpassed for vases and for large decorations, being of immense size with long stems; embrace the full range of colors except blue. Flowers are a leather solid are self-colored, or edged and shaded darker than the ground color. Invaluable for banking or massing.

The only American variety ever awarded a medal by the National Society, and only English varieties have ever received a silver gilt medal.

It was named "Philadelphia" in honor of the "City of Brotherly Love" by Mayor Edwin Stuart at the Academy of Music amid a great social demonstration. Never before had such magnifice blooms been seen, and the greatest enthusiasm was aroused over the immense fluffy cream-colo globes, flowers of a perfect globe, in color a beautiful clear cream tinted lemon changing to crea white as the flower ages. A great prize winner.

Farmers Break the Buggy Monopoly.

It is claimed that for years buggy manufacturers have secured exorbitant prices for their goods, but recently through the combined assistance of the farmers of Iowa, Illinois and other States, SEARS, ROEBUCK & Co., of Chicago, have got the price of open buggies down to $16.50; Top Buggies, $22.75; Top Surries, $13.75 and upwards and they are shipping them in immense numbers direct to farmers in every State. They send an immense Buggy Catalogue free, postpaid, to any one who asks for it. This certainly is a big victory for the farmer, but a severe blow to the carriage manufacturers and dealers.

"THE LORD WILL GO BEFORE YOU."

"Who that leans on His right arm was ever yet forsaken?"

NO evil thing near us can come,
If we still trust the Lord;
Hold fast in loving prayer each day,
Rest in his covenant word;
"The Lord will go before you."

All things for good shall work for those,
Who rest in his dear love;
The cloudy day, the starless night,
But veil the light above;
"The Lord will go before you."

The darkest path cannot be drear,
If He that path prepare;
He knoweth still the way I take,
Leading my footsteps there;
"The Lord will go before you."

So, though I walk through death's dark vale,
No evil do I fear,
Thy rod and staff they comfort me,
The Shepherd's voice I hear;
"The Lord will go before you."

The earthly shadows as they fall,
Point ever toward the dawn;
Signal the way to heavenly light,
The sweet immortal morn;
"The Lord will go before you."

Malden, Mass. —PHEBE A. HOLDER.

Dr. Hunter's Book on Weak Lungs.

Dr. Robert Hunter of New York, extracts from whose lectures on the lungs have been published in this paper from time to time, has a book on the nature, causes and cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Asthma and Catarrh, examining their differences, and pointing out the curative treatment of each disease.

Dr. Hunter is one of the oldest Lung specialists living, having devoted his life since 1858 exclusively to the study and treatment of Lung Complaints. The first inhaling instruments ever employed for the cure of the lungs were of his invention, and the only known germicide having power to kill and expel the germs of Consumption from the lungs was discovered and successfully applied by him. His antiseptic air inhalations is the only scientific treatment for Lung Complaints. It brings the remedy to the very seat of the disease in the lungs in the only common-sense way. Its success is shown by hundreds of grateful patients whose lives it has saved.

Dr. Edward J. Raynor says: "I had hemorrhage after hemorrhage, and was utterly broken down in health, coughed up yellow purulent matter, had fever and night sweats, and was brought to my bed, from which I never expected to rise again. Now I am strong and able to do my work, all blood spitting and shortness of breath are gone. I have gained in flesh back, and eat and sleep as well as ever. From a perfect wreck I have been robust and restored by Dr. Hunter's medicated inhalations. I owe my life to this wonderful treatment and believe every one ought to know of it. All who wish to do so can call or write to me at my place of business, Walsh & Co's, 157 Market St., Newark, N. J."

Any subscriber of The Christian Herald who is interested, can obtain this book free by addressing Dr. Hunter at 117 West 45th St. New York.

We direct special attention to the following remarkable statement.

In 1869 I had typhoid fever which left me with Catarrh and totally destroyed my hearing; for 25 years I could not understand a word, or hear a steam whistle, and had to carry a slate so that people could talk to me. In '94 I obtained Aerial Medication and in a week surprised my friends by throwing my slate away. In two weeks could hear loud conversation, in three months could sit by the church door and fully understand every word that was spoken. The wonderful cure astonished my friends as well as myself. For three years my hearing has been perfect and I am entirely free from Catarrh.—EDWARD E. WILLIAMS, Lead, S. D.

We have reliable assurance that the above statement is genuine and that Dr. Moore is a reputable physician.—Cincinnati Christian Standard.

J. F. M., ——. If a Christian man is the owner of a large peach orchard and finds on Sunday that the peaches are ripe and will spoil if they are left on the trees until Monday, is he justified in picking them on Sunday?

Probably diametrically opposite answers to this question would be given by eminent Christian authorities. It is a question of conscience, and we do not believe that the conscience of one man can be a guide for another. The Apostle Paul explicitly advises his readers and John with the effect of the teaching of the scribes. The earnestness and importunity of the publicans and sinners led to their salvation, while the self-satisfied Pharisees, who were indifferent and careless, missed the blessing.

Reader, Batesville, Tex. Who are the Christadelphians and what was the origin of the church?

The name means, "brethren in Christ," and is appropriate to the principles of the organization, as it contains no ministers, bishops, or any person exercising authority. It dates back to 1843, but it had no recognized legal standing until 1864, when Dr. John Thomas, whose preaching originated the movement, formally accepted the name of Christadelphian. He was an English physician who in 1832 came to this country and became associated in religious work with Alexander Campbell, the founder of the Christian or Campbellite church. A difference of opinion as to the necessity of re baptizing persons of the Baptist faith on their joining the Campbellites, led to a separation of the two friends in 1834, but Dr Thomas continued to speak in Campbellite churches for several years afterwards. His views, however, differed increasingly from year to year from those of Campbell. He taught that man is not immortal, but may become so by faith in Christ. Without that he perishes at his death. He though that Christ was not God, but that the spirit of God dwelt in him and that he is the priestly mediator between God and those who come to God through him. There are no authoritative statistics of the numbers of Christadelphians, but it is estimated that there are in the United States about sixty three churches or groups of believers with an aggregate membership of about twelve hundred. In England there are also many large groups.

L. S., Sumner Ia. 1. Of what was the laying on of hands symbolical and why is it not practised now? 2. Why is so much stress laid on the Lord's Supper and so little on foot washing for which there is direct command? 3. Why are the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper called sacraments.

1. It was symbolical of the imparting of a gift, or as a benediction, and is of very ancient origin (see Genesis 48: 14). In Apostolic times the gift of the Holy Spirit was so communicated (see Acts 8: 17). It is practised now in some churches in confirmation and at the ordination of the clergy, but it is now an empty form. 2. Because people have come to hold the spirit in more reverence than the letter. In Christ's time foot-washing was a common act of hospitality performed by a servant. In doing it himself for his disciples, he took the servant's place. The command is obeyed by any one who is willing to render a humble service to a brother for Christ's sake. The words about the Lord's Supper "ye do show the Lord's death till he come" (I. Cor. 11: 26) sufficiently explain why this loving memorial has survived. 3. The word simply means a sacred obligation, and is quite appropriate, though it is not used in Scripture.

G. H., Philadelphia, Pa. Do you think it is my duty to give a tenth of my income to the church when my father is out of work and needs all the help I can give him?

We presume you reserve some of your income for your own use, and it seems to us that if you give a tenth of that sum to the church, you are doing all that can reasonably be required of you. It is certainly your duty, and your religious duty, to help your father in his need.

T. H. R., Central City, Col. 1. Why did Moses quit Egypt? Was it for the reason given in Exodus 2: 14, 15, or for the reason given in Hebrews 11: 25-27? 2. How many survived the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava, which is celebrated in Tennyson's poem? 3. Where can I get the works of Josephus?

1. The reason mentioned in Hebrews operated first and that in Exodus later. They are two stages in the same process. If he had been ashamed of his race and without faith in God, he would have kept away from the Hebrew quarters and posed as an Egyptian. He went to look after his brethren, though he must have known how deeply it would exasperate the Pharaoh. The writer of Hebrews is fully justified by the account given in

The Gospel . . . in the Army

The Spiritual Shepherds of Our "Boys in Blue"—Duties of the Army Chaplain—A Great and Rapidly Growing Field for Spiritual Work.

POST CHAPLAIN. O. J. NAVE.

AT this moment, when talk of war by sea and land is rife, the thoughts of Christian America are naturally attracted to the chaplains of the United States army. During times of peace this rath of military service has, perhaps, not received the attention it merits. The perils which threaten the soldier are not merely those of shot and shell. There are many dangers that confront him in time of peace as well as in time of war. Changed from post to post, far removed from home influences, and doubly exposed to evil ones, the soldier has little stood alone but for the influence of the army chaplain. Since the black shadow of war began to threaten our land the thought of the army chaplain has doubtless comforted many a distant mother's heart.

A post chaplain's simple obligation to hold one service a week, and visit the sick and prisoners," is capable of an indefinite extension of pastoral and social service. If a post is blessed with a library and reading-room, that comes under the chaplain's care. The creation of such adjuncts at a post have often, if not always been the result of the chaplain's labors, and the distribution of wholesome literature among soldiers in the barracks usually rests entirely with him. To show that the chaplain's office is not a sinecure in this direction, we quote John Harrison Macomber, Post Chaplain, U. S. A.: "It is not the policy of the War Department to furnish Bibles, hymn-books and religious reading matter for the army. Chaplains are directed to solicit them from parties interested. I have about 350 volumes that I have gathered up by solicitation from friends all over the country and purchased with my own money, with some contributed by the soldiers themselves." The American Bible Society, the U. S. A. Aid Association, Young Men's Christian Associations, Ladies' Aid Societies, and various Christian organizations, have remembered the army's needs of spiritual literature. This need is not so widely known, however, as to have met the abundant recognition which otherwise it would have received, for the Christian world loves the soldier, and his soul is dear to Christian hearts. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has good reason to know the high esteem in which remembrance is held by army chaplains and their comrades, especially those at frontier posts. Six years ago Chaplain Bateman, writing from the post at Fort Assinniboine, Mont., presented to our readers the army's need of the best possible facilities for mental and moral improvement, urging that it were well if its one hundred garrisoned posts could be put in possession of appliances, similar to those of Young Men's Christian Associations, in that each post should at least be provided with suitable chapel and reading-room. We are happy to know that through Chaplain Bateman's energy this boost has become possessed of a cosy and inviting reading-room for the "Boys in Blue."

The work of the army chaplain cannot be judged by that of the pastor of an organized church. He is without the invaluable assistance, sympathy, and encouragement which such a body affords. His congregation is drawn from a changing population. In the natural order of military mutations, few soldiers remain at a garrison more than three years. Regiments are transferred, officers leave by promotions, details and retirements, and just as the chaplain begins to feel that he has won the hearts of his people, his people go, and new faces take the place of familiar ones.

There is very seldom time for the seed of his sowing to gladden his eyes with even the promise of blossom or fruit. More than most religious workers, perhaps, must he, in doing his best, trust God for the increase. The most discouraging feature of an army chaplain's work lies in the well-known fact that military life is not conducive to religious sentiment. Gambling and drink, the bane of idle hours, fasten habits upon the soldier which follow him to the camp-fire and battlefield; and the peculiar temptations incident to the migratory life of men without family ties, beset the soldier's path. In spite of ready salute, the "parson" does not always receive that recognition of value from worldly comrades, to which, as a soldier of Christ, he is above all soldiers entitled. This disposition is on the decrease, however, under the influence of a number of brainy, devoted chaplains, thoroughly in love with their work for the elimination of sin.

It must not be thought that the army chaplain's life is altogether one of hardship and discouragement. It can be a very easy one if he chooses to have it so or it can be one of unremitting toil and wide and effectual activity. Post Chaplain George W. Simpson has described the successful army chaplain as "the true and manly" exponent of cheerful Christianity, a man of devotedness, earnestness, faith, and of infinite prudence and tact. In his visits to hospital and guardhouse he must act in unison with commanding officers and surgeons in charge if he wishes to command their sympathy. The testimony of our chaplains showing that they usually have kind and courteous co-operation from commanding officers is a proof in itself of their own faithfulness and discretion. As an illustration of this disposition on the post of commandants, Post Chaplain Macomber cites: "Col. Shafter, commanding this post, will not allow open-air concerts by the band on the evening on which I have service at the chapel—and this of his own motion." He adds: "I am inclined to think the chaplain, who is judicious and faithful, will be appreciated and respected by the garrison." He is, indeed, appreciated when some poor fellow, far from home and kindred, lies prone and helpless on the hospital cot, or waits, hopeless and disgraced, in the precincts of the guardhouse. Then the grasp of the chaplain's hand, the chaplain's kind word, the chaplain's prayer, the letter of farewell or of penitence which the chaplain is ready to write to home and friends, are doubly welcome. And the chaplain's path is often brightened by the fruits of such ministrations; as when a mother's letter tells him how glad she is that he stood by her boy's side and led him to God in that last hour; or when years after he knelt in prayer with a wayward man in a guard house, a letter comes saying that that man is Christ's soldier as well as the Union's.

In the truest sense of the word, the army chaplain is a missionary, especially at the frontier post. Perhaps he holds services in the dance-hall; there is often no other place. Unless he has thought to bring hymn-books along in his trunk, his service may be without song for a season. But he prays and labors, and presently a frontier church springs up to stand as a monument to his faithfulness long after the post is moved elsewhere.

Major John B. Ketchum, an officer who takes the deepest interest in the spiritual welfare of our soldiers, has prepared the following short article on the subject for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

The general public has but slight knowledge of this important department of our army; perhaps because the chaplains are, in the main, located at far western stations; and, also, because their work is being done quietly and without ostentation. The existing law provides for the appointment of a chaplain for each regiment of colored troops (four in all), and thirty post chaplains. As a rule, their services are appreciated, as is evidenced by the frequent applications from commanding officers at posts where no chaplains are stationed for the assignment of a member of the corps, so that their garrisons may be supplied with religious ministrations. The present Inspector-General of the Army has recommended to the War Department that the regimental system should prevail throughout the chaplain's department, to the end that each regiment shall have its own permanent chaplain, and the good results already attained be augmented by a continuity of labor on the part of the chaplain, and a feeling of regimental ownership and identity of interest on the part of the men.

In former years there was neither regulation, nor law to limit the age of a chaplain at appointment; but, more recently, it has become the custom to insist upon the most rigid physical examination, and the Adjutant-General has recommended a limitation of the age to 35 years, as in the navy, and a thorough professional examination, in which suggestions the chaplain as a body most earnestly concur. The chaplain ranks as Captain of Infantry, and, excepting in the matter of promotion, has precisely the same status as all other commissioned officers, including retirement, pensions, quarters, mileage, etc. His pay at entrance into the service is $1,500 per year, with an increase of ten per cent. for each five years of service until forty per cent. of increase has accrued.

While a chaplain is not permitted to select his quarters, he is suitably provided for; and, when once located, cannot be "ranked out" by any other officer, a privilege which many other military men would be glad to enjoy. His uniform is distinctly clerical, without any insignia of rank, the object being not to degrade him, but to designate the ordinary garb of a clergyman as the most distinguished he can wear, and to make more easy his access to the enlisted men, with whom any mark of rank is a bar to familiar intercourse.

Aside from his clerical functions, which may be performed as fully and freely as in civil life, he is subject to military duties, such as superintending post schools for soldiers and children, serving upon Boards of Survey, Courts of Martial, Councils of Administration, etc. Frequent calls are made by communities adjacent to military posts for the ministrations of an army chaplain, and many of those now in service are responsible for the very existence of churches, that could not have been maintained but for their generous aid. The work and personal habits of chaplains have, of recent years, been the subject of rigid inquiry by inspecting officers, and the encomiums officially passed upon them by the same have been so general and emphatic as to dispel any idea of their general inefficiency.

It is safe to aver that no other grade of officers are rendering more efficient and faithful service than the chaplains. An illustration of this is seen in the case of Post Chaplain C. C. Pierce, who recently received a commendation and recommendation to the Chaplaincy of the Seventh United States Cavalry, signed by 31 prominent officers of the regiment, the same being in recognition of his long and honorable service in the army. Another instance is seen in that of the devoted services of Post Chaplain I. Newton Ritner, at Fort Keogh, who received the thanks of the entire garrison for his successful labors for several years at that post. Still another in the case of Post Chaplain C. C. Bateman, who received the most hearty endorsement from a large number of the officers of the army for the chaplaincy at West Point, N. Y.; and in that of Post Chaplain John H. Macomber, who has scarcely missed a service, or taken a sick-leave in his active duty of seventeen years as a chaplain.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPT

A LISTENING GOD.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Psalms 94: 9, ... { He that planted the ear, shall he not hear?

ARCHITECTURE is one of the most fascinating arts, and the study of Egyptian, Grecian, Etruscan, Roman, Byzantine, Moorish, Renaissance styles of building, has been to many a man a sublime life-work. Lincoln and York cathedrals, St. Paul's and St. Peter's, and Arch of Titus, and Theban Temple and Alhambra and Parthenon are the monuments to the genius of those who built them. But more wonderful than any arch they ever lifted, or any transept window they ever illumined, or any Corinthian column they ever crowned, or any Gothic cloister they ever elaborated, is the human ear.

Among the most skilful and assiduous physiologists of our time have been those who have given their time to the examination of the ear and the study of its arches, its walls, its floor, its canals, its aqueducts, its galleries, its intricacies, its convolutions, its divine machinery, and yet, it will take another thousand years before the world comes to any adequate appreciation of what God did when he planned and executed the infinite and overmastering architecture of the human ear. The most of it is invisible and the microscope breaks down in the attempt at exploration. The cartilage which we call the ear is only the storm door of the great temple clear down out of sight, next door to the immortal soul.

Such scientists as Helmholtz and Conte and De Blainville and Rank and Buck have attempted to walk the Appian Way of the human ear, but the mysterious pathway has never been fully trodden but by two feet—the foot of sound and the foot of God. Three ears on each side the head—the external ear, the middle ear, the internal ear, but all connected by most wonderful telegraphy.

The external ear in all ages adorned by precious stones or precious metals. The Temple of Jerusalem partly built by the contribution of earrings, and Homer in the Iliad speaks of Hera, "the three bright drops, her glittering gems suspended from the ear;" and many of the adornments of modern times were only copies of her ear jewels found in Pompeiian museum and Etruscan vase. But while the outer ear may be adorned by human art, the middle and the internal ear are adorned and garnished only by the hand of the Lord Almighty. The stroke of a key of yonder organ sets the air vibrating, and the external ear catches the undulating sound and passes it on through the bonelets of the middle ear to the internal ear, and the three thousand fibres of the human brain take up the vibration and roll the sound on into the soul. The hidden machinery of the ear by physiologists called by the names of things familiar to us, like the hammer, something to strike—like the anvil, something to be smitten—like the stirrup of the saddle with which we mount the steed—like the drum beaten in the march—like the harp-strings, to be swept with music. Coiled like a "snail shell," by which one of the innermost passages of the ear is actually called—like a stairway, the sound to ascend—like a vent tube of a heating apparatus, taking that which enters round and round—like a labyrinth with wonderful passages into which the thought enters only to be lost in bewilderment. A muscle contracting when the noise is too loud, just as the pupil of the eye contracts when the light is too strong. The external ear is defended by wax which with its bitter ness discourages insect invasion. The internal ear shielded by what is far the hardest bone of the human system a very rock of strength and defiance.

The ear is strange a contrivance that by the estimate of one scientist it can catch the sound of 7370 vibrations in a second. The outer ear taking in all kinds of sound, whether the crash of an avalanche, or the hum of a bee. The sound passing to the inner door of the outside ear halts until another mechanism, divine mechanism, passes it on by the bonelets of the middle ear, and coming to the inner door of that second ear, the sound has no power to come further until another divine mechanism passes it on through into the inner ear, and then the sound comes to the rail track of the brain branchlet, and rolls on and on until it comes to sensation, and there the curtain drops, and a hundred gates shut, and the voice of God seems to say to all human inspection: "Thus far and no farther."

In this vestibule of the palace of the soul, how many kings of thought, of medicine, of physiology, have done penance of lifelong study and got no further than the vestibule. Mysterious home of reverberation and echo. Grand Central Depot of sound. Headquarters to which there come quick dispatches, part the way by cartilages, part the way by air, part the way by bone, part the way by nerve—the slowest dispatch plunging into the ear at the speed of 1,090 feet a second. Small instrument of music on which is played all the music you ever heard, from the grandeurs of an August thunderstorm to the softest breathings of a flute. Small instrument of music, only a quarter of an inch of surface and the thinness of one two hundred and fiftieth part of an inch, and that thinness divided into three layers. In that ear musical staff, lines, spaces, bar and rest. A bridge leading from the outside natural world to the inside spiritual world; we seeing the abutment at this end the bridge, but the fog of an unlifted mystery hiding the abutment on the other end the bridge. Whispering gallery of the soul. The human voice is God's eulogy of the ear. That voice capable of producing seventeen trillion, five hundred and ninety-two billion, one hundred and eighty-six million, forty-four thousand, four hundred and fifteen sounds, and all that variety made, not for the regalement of beast or bird, but for the human ear.

About fifteen years ago, in Venice, lay down in death one whom many considered the greatest musical composer of the century. Struggling on up from six years of age when he was left fatherless, Wagner rose through the obloquy of the world, and ofttimes all nations seemingly against him, until he gained the favor of a king, and won the enthusiasm of the opera houses of Europe and America. Struggling all the way on to seventy years of age, to conquer the world's ear. In that same attempt to master the human ear and gain supremacy over this gate of the immortal soul, great battles were fought by Mozart, Gluck and Weber, and by Beethoven and Meyerbeer, by Rossini and by all the roll of German and Italian and French composers, some of them in the battle leaving their blood on the keynotes and the musical scores. Great battle fought for the ear—fought with baton, with organ-pipe, with trumpet, with cornet-a-piston, with all ivory and brazen and silver and golden weapons of the orchestra: royal theatre and cathedral and academy of music the fortresses for the contest for the ear. England and Egypt fought for the supremacy of the Suez Canal, and the Spartans and the Persians fought for the defile at Thermopylæ, but the musicians of all ages have fought for the mastery of the auditory canal and the defile of the immortal soul and the Thermopylæ of struggling cadences.

For the conquest of the ear Hadyn struggled on up from the garret where he had neither fire nor food, on and on until under the too great nervous strain of hearing his own oratorio of the "Creation" performed, he was carried out to die, but leaving as his legacy to the world 118 symphonies, 163 pieces for the baritone, 15 masses, 5 oratorios, 42 German and Italian songs, 30 canons, 365 English and Scotch songs with accompaniment, and 1,536 pages of libretti. All that to capture the gate of the body that swings in from the tympanum to the "snail shell" lying on the beach of the ocean of the immortal soul.

To conquer the ear, Handel struggled on from the time when his father would not let him go to school lest he learn the gamut and become a musician, and from the time when he was allowed in the organ loft just to play after the audience had left, to the time when he left to all nations his unparalleled oratorios of "Esther," "Deborah," "Sampson," "Jephthah," "Judas Maccabeus," "Israel in Egypt," and the "Messiah," the soul of the great German composer still weeping in the Dead March of our great obsequies and triumphing in the raptures of every Easter morn.

To conquer the ear and take this gate of the immortal soul, Schubert composed his great "Serenade," writing the staves of the music on the bill of fare in a restaurant, and went on until he could leave as a legacy to the world over a thousand magnificent compositions in music. To conquer the ear and take this gate of the soul's castle Mozart struggled on through poverty until he came to a pauper's grave, and one chilly, wet afternoon the body of him who gave to the word the "Requiem" and the "G-minor Symphony" was crunched in on the top of two other paupers into a grave which to this day is epitaphless.

For the ear everything mellifluous, from the birth hour when our earth was wrapped in swaddling clothes of light and serenaded by other worlds, from the time when Jubal thrummed the first harp and pressed a key of the first organ down to the music of this Sabbath day. Yea, for the ear the coming overtures of heaven, for whatever other part of the body may be left in the dust, the ear, we know, is to come to celestial life: otherwise, why the "harpers harping with their harps?" For the ear, carol of lark and whistle of quail, and chirp of cricket, and dash of cascade, and roar of tides oceanic, and doxology of worshipful assembly and minstrelsy, cherubic, seraphic, and archangelic. For the ear all Pandean pipes, all flutes, all clarionets, all hautboys, all bassoons, all bells, and all organs—Luzerne and Westminster Abbey, and Freyburg, and Berlin, and all the organ pipes set across Christendom, the great Giant's Causeway for the monarchs of music to pass over. For the ear, all chimes, all tickings of chronometers, all anthems, all dirges, all glees, all choruses, all lullabies, all orchestration. Oh, the ear, the God honored ear, grooved with divine sculpture and poised with divine gracefulness and upholstered with curtains of divine embroidery, and corridored by divine carpentry, and pillared with divine architecture, and chiselled in bone of divine masonry, and conquered by processions of divine marshalling. The ear! A perpetual point of interrogation, asking How? a perpetual point of apostrophe appealing to God. None but God could plan it. None but God could build it. None but God could work it. None but God could keep it. None but God could understand it. None but God could explain it. Oh, the wonders of the human ear.

How surpassingly sacred the human ear. You had better be careful how you let the sound of blasphemy or uncleanness step into that holy of holies. The Bible says that in the ancient temple the priest was set apart by the putting of the blood of a ram on the tip of the ear, the right ear of the priest. But, my friends, we need all of us to have the sacred touch of ordination on the hanging lobe of both ears, and on the arches of the ears, on the Eustachian tube of the ear, on the mastoid cells of the ear, on the tympanic cavity of the ear, and on everything from the outside rim of the outside ear clear in to the point where sound steps off the auditory nerve and rolls on down into the unfathomable depths of the immortal soul. The Bible speaks of "dull ears," and of "uncircumcised ears," and of "itching ears," and of "rebellious ears," and of "open ears," and of those who have all the organs of hearing and yet who seem to be deaf, for it cries to them: "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

To show how much Christ thought of the human ear, he one day met a man who was deaf, came up to him, and put a finger of the right hand into the orifice of the left ear of the patient, and put a finger of the left hand into the orifice of the right ear of the patient, and agitated the tympanum, and startled the bonelets, and with a voice that rang clear through into the man's soul, cried: "Ephphatha!" a the polyphoid growths gave way, and t inflamed auricle cooled off, and that m who had not heard a sound for ma years, that night heard the wash of t waves of Galilee against the limesto shelving. To show how much Chr thought of the human ear, when the ap tle Peter got mad and with one slash his sword dropped the ear of Malch into the dust, Christ created a new exter ear for Malchus corresponding with t middle ear and the internal ear that sword could clip away.

And to show what God thinks of ear we are informed of the fact that in t millennial June which shall roseate all t earth, the ears of the deaf will be stopped, all the vascular growths gon all deformation of the listening org cured, corrected, changed. Every be on earth will have a hearing apparatus perfect as God knows how to make and all the ears will be ready for t great symphony in which all the musi instruments of the earth shall play the companiment, nations of earth and spires of heaven mingling their voi together with the deep bass of the and the alto of the woods, and the te of winds, and the baritone of the thun "Alleluiah!" surging up meeting the leluiah!" descending.

Oh, yes, my friends, we have been lo ing for God too far away instead of lo ing for him close by and in our organism. We go up into the obse tory and look through the telescope see God in Jupiter, and God in Sat and God in Mars; but we could see m of him through the microscope o aurist. No king is satisfied with only residence, and in France it has been Cloud and Versailles and the Tuiler and in Great Britain it has been Win and Balmoral and Osborne. A ruler not always prefer the larger. The k of earth and heaven may have la castles and greater palaces, but I do think there is any one more curio wrought than the human ear. The hea of heavens cannot contain him, and ye says he finds room to dwell in a con heart, and I think, in a Christian ear.

We have been looking for God in infinite—let us look for him in the in tesimal. God walking the corridor of ear, God sitting in the gallery of human ear, God speaking along the a tory nerve of the ear, God dwelling in ear to hear that which comes from outside, and so near the brain and soul he can hear all that transpires t The Lord of hosts encamping under curtains of membrane. Palace of Almighty in the human ear. The on the white horse of the Apocal thrusting his foot into the loop of which the physiologist has been ple to call the stirrup of the ear.

"H planted the ear, shall he not hear?"

When a soul prays, God does n be upright until the prayer travels immensity and climbs to his ear. The Bible says he bends clear over. In more than one place Isaiah said he bowed down his ear. In more than one place the Psalmist says he inclined his ear, by which I come to believe that God puts his ear so closely down to your lips that he can hear your faintest whisper. It is not God away off up yonder; it is God away down here, close up, so close up that when you pray to him, it is not more a whisper than a kiss. Ah! yes, he hears the captive's sigh, the plash of the orphan's tear, and the infant's, "Now I lay me down to sleep," as distinctly as he hears the fortissimo of brazen bands in the Dusseldorf festival, as easily as he hears the salvo of artillery when the thirteen squares of English troops open all their batteries at once at Waterloo. He that planted the ear can hear.

Just as sometimes an entrancing strain of music will linger in your ears for days after you have heard it, and just as a sharp cry of pain I once heard while passing through Bellevue Hospital clung to my ear for weeks, and just as a horrid blasphemy in the street sometimes haunts one's ears for days, so God not only hears, but holds the songs, the prayers, the groans, the worship, the blasphemy. How we have all wondered at the phonograph, which holds not only the words you utter, but the very tones of your voice, so that a hundred years from now, that instrument turned, the very words you now utter and the very tone of your voice will be reproduced. Amazing phonograph! But more wonderful is God's power to hold, to retain. Ah! what delightful encouragement for our prayers. What an awful fright for our hard speeches. What assurance of warm-hearted sympathy for all our griefs. "He that planted the ear, shall he not hear?"

Better take that organ away from all sin. Better put it under the best sound. Better take it away from all gossip, from all slander, from all innuendo, from all bad influence of evil association. Better put it to school, to church, to philharmonic. Better put that ear under the blessed touch of Christian hymnology. Better consecrate it for time and eternity to him who planted the ear. Rousseau, the infidel, fell asleep amid his satirical manuscripts lying all around the room, and in his dream he entered heaven and heard the song of the worshippers, and it was so sweet he asked an angel what it meant. The angel said: "This is the Paradise of God, and the song you hear is the anthem of the redeemed." Under another roll of the celestial music Rousseau wakened and got up in the midnight and, as well as he could, wrote down the strains of the music that he had heard in the wonderful tune called "The Songs of the Redeemed." God grant that it may not be to you and to me an infidel dream but a glorious reality. When we come to the night of death and we lie down for our last sleep, may our ears really be ravished by the canticles of the heavenly temple, and the songs and the anthems and the carols and the doxologies that shall climb the musical ladder of that heavenly gamut.

The Sermon of a Strange Silence.

Can you imagine a silence that is startling? Such a silence fell upon Niagara, March 31, 1848. People living within sound of the cataract woke that morning with a strange feeling that something was wrong. The voice of the falls was silent, the river-bed and precipice were bare. People walked back and forth to Goat Island, from Canada to America, from America to Canada, hardly wetting their feet, and in spite of their alarm and apprehension as to the meaning of this incredible phenomena, they could not refrain, the historian says, from swarming over the dry bed of the river and about the great bared precipice itself, exploring caves and dark recesses. One man drove a horse and wagon across nearly to Goat Island, another his buggy close to the precipices, and sticks of timber near the head of Horseshoe Falls were cut, hewn, and hauled away with four horses. On the morning of April people were glad to hear the familiar thunder of Niagara rushing on its old way. The explanation of this singular phenomenon lies in the fact that strong winds on Lake Erie had driven innumerable small icebergs, with which the lake was packed to the head of Niagara River, where they had formed a temporarily impregnable dam. Perhaps if the troubles and trials of life were to cease we would miss them as these people missed the thunder of their river, and long for the calm, to be broken by the turmoil of endeavor.

The Veteran Laid to Rest.

An Impressive Scene at the Obsequies of the Late George Muller, Who Established the Orphanages at Bristol, England.

By Rev. W. E. Geil.

I WAS in Edinburgh, Scotland, when I learned of the death of George Muller, and determined to attend the funeral. After riding all day I left the train at Bristol about ten o'clock on Saturday evening, March 12. On Sunday afternoon it was my privilege to stand in that East room in Orphan-house No. 3 and look into the dead face of that wonderful man of prayer, faith, and sacrifice. There he lay. His face had an expression of perfect peace. The Bibles were open as he left them. The hymn book was open where he left it, only a few hours before he died. On the open pages was hymn No. 208 in the Bristol collection:

We'll sing of the Shepherd that died—
That died for the sake of the flock;
His love to the utmost was tried,
And immovable stood as a rock.

Our song then forever shall be
Of the Shepherd who gave himself thus;
No subject so glorious as he,
And none so affecting to us.

We'll sing of such subjects alone,
None other our tongues shall employ;
But better his love will be known
In yonder bright regions of joy.

His body, when I saw it, was in a casket (a plain wooden one, made of elm), it was resting right over the place where he was found dead early on the morning of March 10. On the lid was this inscription:

GEORGE MULLER.
FELL ASLEEP IN JESUS
MARCH 10, 1898,
IN HIS 93d YEAR.

The chapter he read the night before he died was Isaiah 6, and his last sermon was preached on the text, II. Cor. 5:1: "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." It was noteworthy that the last of all the thousands of sermons that George Muller preached should have been on the resurrection. Muller, after the age of seventy, preached the Gospel in forty-two countries, and traveled at that age a distance equal to nine times around this planet. He spoke fluently seven languages. This man, who was exact in all his accounts to a cent, handled, in answer to prayer, $7,123,080, taught in his schools 121,683 children, distributed 281,652 entire Bibles, 1,448,662 New Testaments, 21,343 copies of the Psalms, and 222,196 other portions of the Bible in many different languages, and when he died had 2,000 orphans in the houses, requiring $100,000 a year for their support.

Although Mr. Muller never once made an appeal to the public for help, he was more than once in great straits. Sometimes at night he had no food in the house to feed the children on the following day, but he would hold a prayer-meeting, and the funds always came. The buildings alone cost Mr. Muller $575,000, which was all sent to him unsolicited, by people who knew the work he was doing. He used to say that his object was to demonstrate to the world in the nineteenth century the efficacy of faith and prayer.

The conditions of admission to his orphanages have been the broadest. Children are taken from any part of Great Britain without fee or recommendation, the sole provisos being that they have lost both parents, have been born in wedlock and are in need. The boys are kept till they reach fourteen or fifteen, when they are apprenticed to suitable trades, and the girls till they are about seventeen, when decent, comfortable situations are easily attainable. When leaving, each child is provided with a good outfit. There is nothing of the "Institution" air about the inmates. They seem always bright and happy, and on certain days of the week romp about in the public park at St. Andrews just like the children of the ordinary citizen. Up to 1896 ten thousand orphans had passed through the homes, of whom many are occupying good positions in life. That the number is not greater is explained by the fact that numbers of the children are admitted as infants, and remain for fifteen years.

SCENE AT THE CEMETERY, WHERE 10,000 PEOPLE GATHERED.

The tall, slim figure of the philanthropist, slightly bent in his later years, was familiar to every citizen of Bristol, who regarded his homes in their northern suburbs as one of the sights of the city. Every afternoon one or other of the homes was open for inspection, and large parties were generally anxious to be conducted over them. Lord Salisbury, the present prime minister, the late Lord Derby, Lord Hampton and other distinguished persons have been among the visitors who have expressed their admiration at the working of the institution.

At nine o'clock this morning (Monday, March 14), by permission, I attended the funeral service at the Orphanage. Mr. James Wright, Mr. Muller's son-in-law, who has superintended the Orphanages during Mr. Muller's long absences, and who will continue the work, conducted the service; he preached from three texts, Heb. 9:28, Rev. 14:15, and Phil. 4:20, in the order given. He began by saying: "Beloved children (1,000 orphans present), I don't wonder that you are weeping. I could break my heart with you, but we must calm ourselves."

FRONT OF BETHESDA CHAPEL, BRISTOL, WHERE THE FUNERAL TOOK PLACE.

Visible from all parts of the room was the casket, resting on high supports. The orphans as they looked at it wept until they sobbed; and well they might, for it contained the remains of one who had stood to them in the place of father and mother—a man whose character they had learned to reverence, the friend and helper of them all. Such a tearful scene I have never witnessed, and never expect to see again. After the service the orphans—1,500 of them—followed the coffin to the Bethesda chapel, where another service was to be held. As it was carried in they turned and went sorrowfully back to the orphanages, a great family bereft. It was a wonderful sight, never to be forgotten by any who witnessed it.

Then came services in historic Bethesda; then the march to Arno's Vale Cemetery, through throngs that crowded the streets for two and a half miles. Flags at half-mast and the great bells tolling all over the city. A conservative estimate indicates that at least 100,000 people honored George Muller by their quiet, respectful presence at the funeral, either on the streets, at the chapel, or the cemetery. The day's proceedings formed a remarkable end to a unique career; they seemed, at least, to indicate how deeply the great work of the deceased veteran had found its way to the hearts of the Bristol citizens. It was impossible to move among the vast crowds without realizing there was something beyond the spirit of mere sight-seeing. The severe simplicity of the funeral arrangements left little in the way of the spectacular. Mr. Muller was the poor man's friend, and they turned out to honor him. The elmwood coffin, with plain brass furnishings, without a single flower, told out the wish of the orphan's friend, who would have not a penny wasted on himself; he would have it go to support the children, whom he loved so well.

AT ARNO'S VALE CEMETERY.

Fully 10,000 people stood on the slope of the western hill during the closing services. The grave prepared for the interment of the great philanthropist was that in which lay the remains of his two wives. The excavation was between two tall yew trees, under the shadow of a large evergreen, and was carried down through the clayey soil, until the top of the coffin laid there some three years ago was plainly visible.

Thousands looked into the grave and then quietly took their places on the hillside among the graves and waited for the cortege. Nearly the whole concourse belonged to the middle and working classes, the latter predominating. His grave is across the valley from the rich people and the world's great ones. He preferred to lie among the poor.

This evening the church bells all over Bristol are being tolled with muffled hammers; and thus all denominations, Roman Catholic as well as Protestant, are testifying to the respect in which Christian men of every name held the good man who gave his life to the cause of the most helpless of the human family. It was said of him as of one of old: "He was a good man, full of the Holy Ghost, and of faith, and much people were added unto the Lord."

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its proprietor, and also upon those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ, are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

The Triumphal Entry.

S. S. Lesson for May 1. Matt. 21 : 6-16.
Golden Text, Matt. 21 : 9.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THE Lord Jesus, although he was the lineal descendant of David, and the only and rightful heir to David's throne, yet, in his life on earth, "took upon him the form of a servant" (Phil. 2 : 7). His reputed father, Joseph, was descended from David through Solomon (Matt. 1 : 6-16), and his mother, Mary, the daughter of Heli, was descended from David through his son Nathan (Luke 3 : 23-31). The angel Gabriel said to Mary, "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David" (Luke 1 . 32), and Joseph and Mary were officially enrolled as being of the house and lineage of David (Luke 2 : 4), and it is evident from ver. 5 R. V. that Mary was enrolled as well as Joseph. Yet on only one occasion did our Lord allow his claims to be recognized. It was at the time of which our subject in Matt. 21 : 6 16 treats.

Our Lord came on earth as the Word of God, which "was in the beginning with God," and which "was God." This "Word was made flesh and dwelt among us" (John 1 : 14), and being made flesh, he himself tells us that he came not to destroy the law and the prophets (the Word of God of his time), but to fulfill. There was a Scripture regarding him in Zech. 9 : 9, which needed to be fulfilled, and the hour of its fulfilment was come. When, after the multiplication of the loaves, the people had said, "This is of a truth the prophet that cometh into the world", Jesus, therefore, perceiving that they were about to come and take him by force, to make him king, "withdrew again into the mountain himself alone" (John 6 : 14, 15, R. V.). His hour was not come. But Jesus knew the Scriptures, which the Jews of his time read only with the party bias of their own prejudices and ideas; and he knew that the time for the fulfilment of Dan. 9: 25 was come, and that his Father willed that he be acknowledged as Messiah, the Prince.

This triumphal entry of Christ into Jerusalem, in circumstances so lowly that the pageant-loving world would only smile at its simplicity, is in God's eyes, an event so noteworthy that it is described in each of the four Gospels. Two Scriptures, Ps. 118: 25, 26 and Zech. 9: 9 were fulfilled at this time, and the order in which they are mentioned is very characteristic, and brings out very blessedly the truth of God. Each Gospel speaks of the Lord riding upon an ass's colt; the first three [illegible] more or less detail, but in the Gospel of John it is simply mentioned. Bringing out as he does the Godhead of Christ, he mentions the multitude going out to meet Jesus, because they had heard of the raising of Lazarus (John 12 : 18). and how they cried in the words of Ps. 118: 25, 26, Hosanna (same word), "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord," and he said, "even the King of Israel;" and then quotes Zech. 9: 9. All the comment on these things is, that his disciples at the first did not understand, but when Jesus was glorified then remembered they that these things were written of him." And again he mentions that the multitude that was with him when he raised Lazarus from the dead bare witness (John 12 : 17, 18 R. V.). Witness of what? Surely that he who so fulfilled the Scripture was indeed the expected Messiah. Only John tells of the raising of Lazarus, writing when probably the parties concerned were dead.

In the Gospel of Luke which depicts Jesus as the perfect Man, well pleasing to God, there is no mention of Zechariah's prophecy, but in quoting from Ps. 118, he calls Jesus, "the King that cometh in the name of the Lord," and adds "Peace in heaven and glory in the highest," reminding us of the multitude of the heavenly hosts which filled the heavens at the time of Christ's nativity, saying, "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will towards men. (Luke 2: 13, 14.)

In the Gospel of Mark again, Zechariah's prophecy is not quoted. This Gospel shines forth Christ as the Servant and the Sacrifice. In telling this incident the evangelist never mentions Christ at all as King, but he gives every detail about the disciples, the colt and its owners, and both Mark and Luke show how little of earthly glory was in this transient triumph. Jesus rode on another man's colt, and all the signs of rejoicing were improvised at the moment; not one preparation was made, and nothing was left behind after he had passed by but the scattered branches of the palm trees!

But in the Gospel of Matthew, as well as that of John, the fulfilment of the Scripture is especially noted. This evangelist does not go into detail about the owners of the colt, he represents Christ in his Kingship. Drawing nigh to Bethphage, unto the Mount of Olives, "jesus sent two disciples, saying unto them, 'Go ye into the village that is over against you, and straightway ye shall find an ass and a colt with her; loose them and bring them unto me. And if any one say aught unto you, ye shall say, The Lord hath need of them, and straightway he will send them.'" Command and provision against contingencies, but no details. Everything in this Gospel is told in this concise and kingly manner. And this evangelist quotes the prophecy of Zechariah, introducing it thus: "Now this is come to pass that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophet, saying, Tell ye the daughter of Zion, behold thy king cometh unto thee, meek, and riding upon an ass, and upon a colt, the foal of an ass." Some words of the prophecy are left out. "He is just, and having salvation or victory." For through the rejection of the Jews, Christ's victory was not yet.

When he was come into Jerusalem all the city was stirred, saying, "Who is this?" The raising of Lazarus was known to the multitudes, who came out to meet him, was it possible that it was unknown in Jerusalem, from whence they had come to meet him? A prophecy was fulfilled before their very eyes, but they, seeing, saw not, and hearing, they heard not; neither did they understand; they would not have this man to reign over them; they wanted a king, that they might be like the nations." One who was "not of the world," and whose kingdom was not of the world, should not be their king, although he should be God's king, whom he should set upon his "holy hill of Zion" (Ps. 2 : 6).

The multitudes said: "This is Jesus the prophet of Nazareth in Galilee," but not one of them said: "This is the King of Israel, prophesied of by Zechariah." Why? Because they knew not the Scriptures.

HOSANNA TO THE SON OF DAVID! . . . HOSANNA IN THE HIGHEST!

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

PATHETIC in the extreme is the story of the triumphal entry. It is as if Christ desired just for once before he died to have one sign of public recognition. We can imagine how contemptible in the eyes of the Jewish priests and rulers, and the Roman governor and his officers, such a procession must have been. A Galilean peasant riding on a borrowed donkey, and his followers not armed warriors with banners and trophies, but only a band of children and peasants singing and shouting and waving palm-branches. The central figure, too, no king in royal robes, but a sad faced man who in the very hour of his triumph bursts into tears. But how strangely mistaken they were! Of all the distinguished men in that city, no name commands the veneration of mankind in this day, like that of him who entered it in this fashion. They scornfully asked, "Who is this?" In every land, the world over, there are people now who could tell them—men who hold that name dear above every other and who acknowledge him as their king. One may hope that his prophetic gaze which could see Jerusalem compassed with armies, stretched still further and saw the millions who in future ages would love and honor him. That spectacle would give him comfort in his hour of sorrow, in the knowledge that he was not to suffer and die in vain.

And the Disciples went. They had probably been staying with Jesus at Bethany since the previous Friday. This is believed to have occurred on Sunday morning April 2, A. D. 30. Jerusalem and the roads leading to it would at that time be crowded with people gathered from all parts of Palestine and from other lands to keep the Passover. It is estimated on reliable data that there would be two-and-a-half million persons in and around the city at that time. It would gladden the hearts of the disciples to receive the order to bring the ass and the colt. They doubtless thought that at last their Master was yielding to their desire and had chosen this appropriate time for claiming the throne of David. Many a scene of popular rejoicing had those hills witnessed. When David brought the ark to Jerusalem, and when Solomon dedicat the temple there were memorable pa ants. Probably many of the Romans w saw this procession had heard their fath talk of Pompey's triumphal entry i Rome, which had been the world's w der. In that pageant the procession w so long that it took two whole days pass a given point. Twenty-eight ye ago the papers were full of the story the entry of the Germans into Paris. scene never to be forgotten by any w witnessed it. Still later, in 1887, t English people celebrated by a wonder pageant the jubilee of their Queen, a only last year the sixtieth anniversary her accession. But the mightiest pagea the world has ever seen, were of sm significance compared with the scene the lesson, because in it every sinner l a personal interest.

Spread the garments in the way. Pr ably the outer cloak or burnoose whi the Oriental wears to this day. It wa token of honor which still survives. I related of the people of Southern Pal tine, that in 1834, when a number of th were thrown into prison for participati in a rebellion against the Turkish gove ment, that they made an appeal to t English government to intercede w the Sultan on behalf of the prisone While the appeal was still pending, t English consul at Damascus paid a vi to the neighborhood. It was thought t his visit might have something to do w the appeal, and the people were theref eager to propitiate him. When he ca up, one and another stripped his outer robe and laid it bef his horse, so that all the way his stopping-place the hor feet never once touched the ro but were always on the garme laid in the way. One other ill tration is familiar to every sch boy. It is that of the you Walter Raleigh, who see Queen Elizabeth halt at a m part of the road and hesit threw his cloak down, and Queen walked upon it to the ground. Elizabeth gently chi him for his extravagance, was evidently pleased. She b him wear his muddy cloak at reception as a sign of penite until she decided how to with him. The way she reward him is well known.

Them that sold and bought the temple. John places this cl ance of the temple earlier in ministry (John 2 : 13-17), but it possible that Christ may h done it twice. If he cleared th traders out at the beginning his ministry, it is little likely t they would stay out. They wo naturally blame themselves being driven by one young M unaided from so excellent a pl for trade, and as soon as he safely out of the city, they probably turned to their old stands; so that w three years afterwards, he again came to the Passover, the work had to be d over again. "I cannot understand," said business man talking to another, "wh man who thinks as you do, and live you do, should go to church so regular The reply was, "That is easily explain I go because people think better o man who goes to church and trust more on his word." His friend said: not that a kind of advertisement should not like to do that. It is too dently turning religion to profit. I wo not be surprised if you were punished that some day."

Hosanna in the highest. The wor a Hebrew word, meaning salvation, li ally, "Save us we pray." The cry in th circumstances was a tribute to Chri personality and an acknowledgment o divinity. One wonders where those p ple could have been on the following day when, deserted by his disciples, was led to execution. When Napol returned to Paris in triumph from his tories in Italy, the French people shou themselves hoarse in welcoming him. secretary Bourienne remarked, that it n be very gratifying to be greeted with s enthusiastic demonstrations; but Napol said; "the same unthinking crowd wo shout denunciations just as loudly morrow, if their leaders decided to s me to the guillotine."

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

The Congress of Mothers.

Assemble in Washington Next Month —Motherhood the World Over to be Represented—The Programme.

THE Congress of Mothers will hold its second annual convention in Washington, D. C., May 2-7, last- six days, instead of three as at its first meeting in February of last year, of which a full account appeared in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. An indication of growth is the fact that Oriental motherhood will be represented in greetings and possibly delegations from India and Japan. Every section our country from Maine to Florida, ssachusetts to California, will be repre- ted at the Congress. Addresses will be these subjects:

MRS. THEODORE BIRNEY, PRES'T.

H. urber, Dean of the University of Chicago; r. A. Graham Bell, of Washington, D. C.; r. Mary Wood Allen, Pres. Social Purity epartment of W. C. T. U., Mich., and hers.

A letter from Frances E. Willard, ritten not long before her death, and omising to address the Congress, will e read.

Much consideration will be given to the ovement which has been set forth in rs. Birney's pamphlet, "Suggestions for others' Clubs." Mrs. Birney's idea is at many mothers who cannot attend mothers' meetings, and must therefore be debarred from the advantages which interchange of experiences and opinions give, would be able to do so if suitable provision could be made for care and entertainment of the babies while the mothers had a comfortable chat together. To meet this need, it is suggested that those who have homes and are so inclined, can accomplish much good by lending a spare room as temporary nursery.

It is also intended to organize separate State organizations and to convert the National Congress into an international one. A measure, which contains more than a suggestion of pathos, is the Memorial Fund, which is being created through contributions of mothers who send offerings in the names of their little lost ones, to aid in work that is done in the interest of childhood.

RUSSIAN PEASANT WOMEN ENJOYING THEIR NOON REST.

"The Supreme Hymn."

When W. T. Stead was asked what English hymn of all others was most helpful and popular, he replied, "Rock of Ages"; his decision was the beginning of an extended symposium of answers to this question from many prominent ministers. Washington Gladden met the inquiry by declaring the problem insoluble, but added that his choice was Charles Wesley's, "Love divine, all love excelling." Edw. Everett Hale thinks that "Nearer my God, to thee," is the hymn most often used in public worship. Robert Collyer remembers an interesting discussion of this subject between Oliver Wendell Holmes and Ralph Waldo Emerson, in which Holmes' "voice deepened, his eyes shone, as we remember him in his noblest moments, as he said: 'One hymn I think supreme.' Emerson threw his head back, as he always did when his attention was arrested, and waited. Dr. Holmes repeated the first verse:

Thou hidden love of God, whose height,
Whose depth, unfathomed, no man knows,
I see from far thy beauteous light;
Inly I sigh for thy repose.
My heart is pained, nor can it be
At rest till it find rest in thee.

'I know—I know,' exclaimed Emerson. 'That is the supreme hymn.'"

Christadora House.

Christadora House, 143 Avenue B, New York, the youngest of New York's college settlements, has recently purchased a five-story residence at 147 Avenue B, at a cost of $23,000. This building is to be fitted up for the use of working girls, and its purpose will be to provide opportunities for their instruction, recreation, and moral development. As 20,000 live in the neighborhood of the settlement, the field is a promising one. The institution, which provides an attractive place where these girls (many of whom have no home worthy of the name) can spend leisure hours, is a public benefaction in the truest sense of the word. At a recent meeting, which was held in the lecture-room of Dr. Parkhurst's church, Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, Rev. Josiah Strong, Miss Carson, Miss McCall, and others prominent in good works, made addresses in behalf of Christadora House.

Last of New Jersey's Slaves.

Dinah Sutton, who recently died at the home of her daughter in Paterson, at the great age of 106, is said to be the last of New Jersey's slaves. Up to a short time before her death, she sewed with the aid of glasses. She was cheery, a good story-teller, fond of music and was in the habit of singing, "Safe in the Arms of Jesus," every morning when she woke. She was born in 1792 in Conas Kirk Point, Monmouth. George Washington's coachman, she told with pride, had asked her hand in marriage. She moved with Mrs. Hopper, her master's daughter to Ramapo, married a man named Sutton, and became the mother of thirteen children. She had been a resident of Paterson for thirty years. This interesting incident, while it recalls painfully the fact that such an institution as slavery once existed in our country, is also a reminder that it is no more.

A Word in Springtime.

"Dear housewife," writes J. Torrey Conner in a late issue of The Mayflower, "leave all the washing and the baking, the mending, and making and go out into the glad sunshine for an hour. The very mould, freshly turned in furrows, seems instinct with life, the sunshine is a benediction. Can it be there is such a thing as sorrow and death in this beautiful world? Only last week robin came back to the old apple tree. You can hear her cheerful note although you may not see her, for the tree has put forth a wealth of snowy blooms—harbingers of an abundant harvest."

THE GARMOUKAS.

"Wholesome Women."

Perhaps every town and hamlet will claim to have the original of the Mrs. Durrin, of whom Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage writes. If any town has not such a blessing it is a kindness perhaps to make it acquainted with so wholesome a body.

Mrs. Durbin was always present when pleasant words were to be uttered, or kind deeds done. She was any minister's blessing. If the pastor had a cough, she would come right into his house, only half knocking, and in the kitchen over the hot stove, she would stand mixing all sorts of pleasant things to take. From her table often came in a plate of biscuit, or a bowl of berries already sugared. If the pulpit must be upholstered, she was head of the committee. If money was to be raised for a musical instrument she begged it, no man saying her nay. Everybody liked her. Everybody blessed her. She stepped quick; had a laugh that was catching; knew all the sick; had her pocket full of nuts and picture-books. When she went through the poorer parts of the village, the little ragmuffins, white and black, would come out and say: 'Here comes Mrs. Durbin!"

MOTHERHOOD.

MOTHERHOOD must near the portal,
E'er is given
Her the power to pluck immortal
Flowers for heaven.
Children love a bedtime story;
And no other
Tells of Jesus and his glory,
Like their mother.

Teach the little ones the sweetness
Of his favor;
Teach the lowly life and meekness
Of their Saviour,
Who is proof against earth's sorrow
And disaster—
Who can make a glad to-morrow,
But the Master?

Angola, O. —HELEN GRAHAM.

The "Auntie" in the Home.

SHE was a gentle old lady, one of those whom the world once called "old maids." She was on the threshold of another world, and lamenting that she had done so little in this. "You, Polly," to her sister, "think of what influence you have exerted. Your useful life, repeated in your children, will be felt as long as the world lasts. And you," to a busy club-woman, "help everybody. I have done nothing." "Auntie!" sobbed a fine young fellow in a West Point uniform, "think of all you've done for us—for me." "Why, Rob," stroking his head, "what have I ever done for you? I can't think of any thing unless it was to sew on your buttons, and teach you how to spin tops and make kites—and if you were hurt or had been naughty, to comfort you. Spoiled you, Rob. Gave Polly trouble." "Helped to make our childhood sweet, auntie. Saved mamma lots of trouble; helped her with us as nobody else helped her. When the chaplain talked of God's love to us, until I came to Christ, I understood God's love, auntie, by thinking of mamma's—and of yours." The light on the gentle old face looked as if Heaven's gate had swung open for a moment and a ray from within had reached it. How many of such unselfish souls pass from earth without love's acknowledgment of uncounted service. Many homes which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD reaches is blessed with the company of these mothers whom we call aunties. They do not ask much. Let that little—love and acknowledgment of service—be unstintingly rendered before it is too late.

Peasant Life in Russia.

Our illustration on this page presents two characteristic scenes in Russian peasant life; one, of women at rest after labor in the fields; the other, a moment of lighter gaiety where the peasants are very happy over the music of garmoukas (concertinas), an instrument of which they are very fond. Women in Russia share the labors of the men, though not to a greater extent than in Germany, Holland, and some other European countries. The home of a moujik, or peasant, is usually a sharp-roofed structure of logs, its one living room equipped with little furniture beside a table, a bench and stove—the last two doing duty as beds. The Russian stove is a strange affair, requiring little fuel, with a great shelf attachment where the children sit and play, and members of the family sleep. In Russian homes there is nearly always an ikon, which is a pictorial representation of the Saviour, or some saint of the Greek Church, hanging on the wall, and the moujik bows and crosses himself to it when entering. Nearly every village, however small, has its church, a quaint little structure with windows and interior decorations in clashing barbaric contrasts of violent reds, blues, greens and yellows. Usually it is of the orthodox Greek faith. The religious beliefs of Russia are very numerous, however. The Greek Church itself has been torn by sectarian division, and dissent in Russia is on the increase, although the government does not encourage such movements. The largest body of dissenters, the Stundists, are Evangelical Protestants.

War a Last Resort.

THERE are those who intimate that blood-letting is healthful for nations, and that nothing but the lancet can keep them from plethora, and that frequent wars are necessary in order to kill off the useless and bad populations of the earth. That heathenish idea is utterly loathsome to me, especially when I remember that war is indiscriminate and takes down the good as well as the bad. Then I think the time has come when Christian nations ought to substitute arbitration and treaty in the place of wholesale massacre.

A glance at isolated facts will show the waste, the desolation, the suffering, the extermination of war. When Napoleon's army marched up towards Moscow they burned every house for 150 miles. Our Revolutionary war cost the English Government $680,000,000. The wars growing out of the French Revolution cost England three thousand millions of dollars. Christendom, or as I might mispronounce it in order to make the fact more appalling, Christ-endom, paid in twenty-two years 15,000 million dollars for battle. Those were the twenty-two years, I think, ending in 1820 or thereabout.

Edmund Burke estimated that the nations of this world had expended 35,000 million dollars in war, but he did his ciphering before our great American and European wars were plunged into. He never dreamed that in this land, in the latter part of this century, in four years, we should expend in battle 3,000 million dollars.

But what was all the waste of treasure when compared with the waste of human life? The story is appalling beyond everything. In one battle under Julius Caesar [illegible] fell. Under Xerxes in one campaign 5,000,000 were slain; under Genghis Khan at Herat 1,600,000 were slain, at Nishapur 1,747,000 were slain; at the siege of Orleans [illegible], at Acre 300,000. At the siege of Troy 1,816,000 fell. The Tartar and two African wars cost 108,000,000 lives. The wars against the Turks and the Saracens cost 18,000,000 lives. Added to all these the million who fell or expired in hospital in our own conflict. It might seem to some a small addition, but a vast addition it seems to me because it comes so near our own hearts.

There is no room on this continent for any other nation except Canada, and a better neighbor no one ever had. If you don't think so, go to Montreal and Toronto, and see how well they will treat you. Other than that there is absolutely no room for any other nation. I have been across the continent, again and again, and know that we have not a half inch of ground for the gouty foot of foreign despotism to stand on. But I am not so sure that some of the arrogant nations of Europe may not some day challenge us. I do not know that those forts around New York are to sleep all through the next century. I do not know that Barnegat Lighthouse will not yet look off upon a hostile navy. I do not know but that a half dozen nations, envious of our prosperity, may want to give us a wrestle. If foreign foe should come, we want men like those of 1812 and like those of 1862 to meet them. We want them all up and down the coast. Pulaski and Fort Sumter in the same chorus of thunder as Fort Lafayette and Fort Hamilton. Men who will not only know how to fight, but how to die. If foreign foe should come, our old sectional animosities would have no power. Here go our regiments into the battlefield: Fifteenth New York Volunteers, Tenth Alabama Cavalry, Fourteenth Pennsylvania Riflemen, Tenth Massachusetts Artillery, Seventh South Carolina Sharpshooters. I do not know but it may require the attack of some foreign foe to make us forget our absurd sectional wrangling. I have no faith in the cry, "No North, no South, no East, no West." Let all four sections keep their peculiarities and their preferences, each doing its own work and not interfering with each other, each of the four carrying its part in the great harmony—the bass, the alto, the tenor, the soprano—in the grand march of Union.

Private Devotion.

IT is very easy to come into a public assemblage, and, stimulated by the hearty singing and by the cheerful faces of scores and hundreds of good people, to bow our heads and lift our hearts in prayer; but to have some secret place where, day by day, either at morning, or at noon, or at night, we kneel down before God, no one in the whole world listening, and to do that thing day after day, and month after month, and year after year, and for scores of years—that is not so easy a thing to do. It wants some perseverance, some high appreciation of duty, some grand Christian determination, some Almighty help. No one can pray in public his whole prayer. Take the best man in the world, and let him rise up before God in public assemblage, and tell all his temptations, and sorrows, and annoyances, and grievances, and delicits, and he would clear the room in ten minutes. People would say: "We didn't come into the house of prayer to night to have our ears and hearts insulted." We knew an excellent Christian man who had the habit in prayer-meeting of telling the most astounding things of what he used to do and where he used to go. We all believed in him as a useful man; but we all wished he would not go so much into particulars. It edified no Christian head, it advanced no Christian heart. And yet there is a place where a man ought to be able to tell everything to his God, to review all his past life, to count up all the wonderful deliverances, and to take all the annoyances and the grievances of the present moment before God; but if he has no closet of secret prayer, where shall he do this? There is no such thing as a stalwart Christian character except that which grows in private and which starts from secret communion with God, and out and out, unlimited utterance, such as a man cannot give in a public religious assemblage.

A Great Harmony.

WHEN a man knocks at our church door if he comes from a sect where they will not give him a certificate we say, "Come in by profession of faith." While Adoniram Judson, the Baptist, and John Wesley, the Methodist, and John Knox, the glorious old Scotch Presbyterian, are shaking hands in heaven, all churches on earth can afford to come into close communion: "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." We have had enough of Big Bethel fights—the Fourteenth New York regiment fighting the Fifteenth Massachusetts regiment. Now let all those who are for Christ and stand on the same side, go shoulder to shoulder, and the church, instead of having a sprinkling of divine blessing, go clear under the wave in one glorious immersion in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. I saw a little child once, in its dying hour, put one arm around its father's neck, and the other arm around its mother's neck, and bring them close down to its dying lips, and give a last kiss. "Oh," I said, "those two persons will stand very near to each other always after such an interlocking." The dying Christ puts one arm around this denomination of Christians, and the other arm around that denomination of Christians, and he brings them down to his dying lips, while he gives them this parting kiss: "My peace I leave with you. My peace I give unto you."

How swift the heavenly course they run,
Whose hearts and faith and hopes are one.

I heard a Baptist minister once say that he thought in the millennium it would be all one great Baptist church; and I heard a Methodist minister say that he thought in the great millennial day it would be all one great Methodist church; and I have known a Presbyterian minister who thought in the millennial day it would be all one great Presbyterian church. Now I think they are all mistaken. I think the millennial church will be a composite church: and just as you may take the best parts of five or six tunes, and under the skilful hands of a Handel, Mozart, or Beethoven, entwine them into one grand and overpowering symphony, so I suppose, in the latter days of the world, God will take the best parts of all denominations of Christians, and weave them into one great ecclesiastical harmony, broad as the earth and high as the heavens, and that will be the church of the future.

Musical Instruments In Church.

SOME have a great prejudice against musical instruments; and even among those who like them, there is an idea that they are unauthorized. I cannot share in such prejudices, when I remember how God has honored them. I love the cymbals, for Israel clapped them in triumph at the Red Sea. I love the harp, for David struck it in praising the Lord. I love the trumpet, for we are told it shall wake the dead. I love all stringed instruments and organs; for God demands that we shall praise him on stringed instruments and organs. There is in such music much to suggest the higher worship; for I read that "when he had taken the book, the four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps;" and "I saw them that had gotten the victory from the beast standing on the sea of glass, having the harps of God."

You say that all this is figurative. Then I say, prove it. I do not know how much of it is literal, and how much of it is figurative. Who can say but that from some of the precious woods of earth and heaven there may not be made instruments of celestial accord. In that worship David may take the harp, and Habakkuk the shigionoth; and the great multitudes shall, following their own inclinations, take up instruments sweeter than Mozart ever fingered, or Schumann ever dreamed of. There is a cathedral in Europe with an organ in each end. Organ answers organ, and the music waves backward and forward with indescribable effect. Well, the time will come when earth and heaven will be but different part of one great accord. It will be joy here and there! Jesus here and Jesus there! Trumpet to trumpet! Organ to organ! Hallelujah to hallelujah!

BRIEF NOTES.

Dr. John Hall was sufficiently recovered from his recent sickness to be able to preside last week at a meeting of his church.

"Let the whole world know that I die a scientific man, saved by faith in Jesus Christ," were some of the last words uttered to his Christian wife by the eminent Dr. Weigand, of Marburg, German who lately died.

In a recent speech at Cannes, France, the Prince of Wales, the next heir to the English throne, expressed the belief and hope that armies and navies would soon be no longer needed, and that we should have universal peace.

The Welsh Sunday school brings together a strange variety of rank. In a Carnarvon chapel one "class" consists of deputy-mayor, a county councillor, poor-law guardians, lawyers, a doctor, a retired ship's captain, an employer, and three of his workmen.

New York University has announced the programme of its fourth summer session for teachers and college graduates. Thirty courses are offered in eight different departments. The session will be held at University Heights, New York City, July 5th-August 19th.

A convention of members of the Christian and Missionary Alliance was held in the Gospel Tabernacle, New York, during Passion Week. Rev. A. B. Simpson, Rev. F. L. Chappell, of Boston, Rev. F. H. Senft, and Mr. and Mrs. Wear were among the speakers.

The 110th annual meeting of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church (North) will be opened on May 19, at the Winona Assembly grounds, Warsaw, Ind. The sermon will be preached that evening by the Moderator, Rev. Sheldon Jackson, D.D., LL.D.

The Church of the Disciples reports for last year a gain in membership of 47,407. This is five per cent., which is larger than any other denomination in the United States. The total increase in all denominations was 630,951, or about two and a quarter per cent.

It is one hundred years since the death of Schwartz, the first Protestant missionary to South India. A memorial service to mark the event was held recently at Tanjore by the local Christian communities. A striking feature was the presence of a large number of Hindus, who united in the celebration.

Evangelist H. Stafford Smith is holding a series of services in Philadelphia, in the Second Reformed Church. Mr. Smith expects to return to England at the end of this month. During his visit, which has continued over six months, he has been almost continuously occupied and his labors have been blessed to the conversion of many souls.

The remains of the late Miss Frances E. Willard were cremated on April 9 at Graceland. It appears that she had expressed a decided wish for that to be done. Miss Anna Gordon, Miss Willard's secretary, and Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens, her successor in the Presidency of the W. C. T. U., and a few other friends witnessed the sad ceremony and took away the ashes for interment.

The Bible Training School, Toronto, is putting up a new building on College street, which is to cost some $17,000, and be ready for use about the middle of September. The Montreal Witness says that the need for the building has been felt, as the work is extending, about 150 students having been enrolled this year, and classes being held by day and evening. The work is non-sectarian.

The Countess Schimmelmann, the distinguished lady revivalist, who is shortly coming to this country, has been spending some weeks in Italy where she has been giving away Testaments and Bible portions. Along all the country roads the workmen display the greatest deference and gratitude, not only on receipt of the booklets, but subsequently on every occasion of the donor passing them.

An appeal is made for funds to erect a new building for the American Church in Berlin. Dr. J. F. Dickie, its pastor. The Hon. Andrew D. White, our Ambassador to Germany, writes of Dr. Dixie: "The work in which he is engaged is both religious and patriotic. He makes the church every Sunday an attractive and inspiring center for the American colony here, and especially for the large and ever-increasing body of American students."

Rev. Huie Kin, the Chinaman who conducts a mission for the Chinese in New York, brought nine Chinamen to unite with the Presbyterian Church at University place and Tenth street recently. The Rev. Dr. George Alexander baptized five of the young men, who for the first time professed their belief in Christ, and the others also united with the Church, two having been baptized in China, and two being admitted by letter from other churches.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings at Portland, Ore., have been wonderfully blessed. The Marquam Theatre, in which the meetings, for men only, were held, was crowded in every part. Two hundred men at one meeting responded to the evangelist's call for those who would pledge themselves to a new life in Christ's strength. The services in the First Baptist and First Presbyterian churches were very largely attended. Nearly 700 persons have given their names to the evangelist as desiring to accept Christ as their Saviour.

One of the discouraging facts in connection with the Foreign Mission work in Japan has been to come to light. The law does not allow foreigners to hold real estate, so that native trustees hold the property purchased by American contributors. Recently the trustees of the school in Kumamoto, who held the property purchased in that city, sold the property, as it was required by the government for the enlargement of the military garrison, but nothing of the proceeds of the sale has been turned over to those who were the moral owners of the property.

The International Sunday School Lesson Committee, at its recent meeting in Chicago, selected the lessons for 1901, which will be sent to England for examination and revision before being finally adopted. They are partly on the life of Christ and partly in Genesis and Exodus. It is stated that it is the design of the Committee to give greater interest to the Old Testament lessons by making them centre around the Old Testament characters; and it is thought that this will be especially appreciated by the younger members of the schools.

A COLOSSAL DAM.

WORK has been begun on one of the most gigantic undertakings of modern times. It is nothing less than the construction of a dam which shall impound a thousand million tons of water. The ce of operation is Assouan, on the Nile, n wer Egypt. As is well known, the un of Egypt is dependent for its fertility n e Nile, which annually overflows its ars and waters the arid soil. The gptians have already done much with cas to carry the fertilizing waters to dis cts at a distance from the river, but Enish capital is now to carry this work to nuch higher degree of efficiency, by ang a dam across the river which will sto the water and permit of its being ad to a much greater distance. It is est ated that the dam now in course of cor ruction, will cause the filling of a res oir which will suffice to irrigate six hu red thousand acres which re ow unproductive. It will no however, be an easy matter to m a river over a mile wide nd thirty feet deep, especially wh the water is laden as the Ni is with mud and silt. The engineers' plan is to build a wa of enormous strength, pierced ith over a hundred underlues through which the muddy ater will pass, while the up r clear water is held back. W n the right moment arrives, the sluices will be closed by se balancing roller gates. Dur ng he time of flood the dam wi cause the water to rise ab t sixty-six feet above its re ent level and will extend a above the dam for 144 mi s. The London Graphic, wh h gives an exhaustive acco t of the work from which the facts are taken, says that th cost of the work will be ne ly ten million dollars, but th produce of the land which w be brought for the first ti under cultivation, will pay fo t in a very short time. It ha also been arranged that the co ractors shall not receive p nent for their work until af the proceeds of the crops, wh h are expected to result fr it, have come in. It is si ificant that this which is the gr t stupendous engineering feat of modern times should be undertaken in the land of the Pyramids, the greatest work of ancient times. The contrast in the utility of the two is a sign of the change in the spirit of the ages. If, as is generally believed, the sole use of the Pyramids was as tombs for the kings, we see how much better is this undertaking, the design of which is to give more food to the people. It is an anticipation of that glorious time when under Christ's rule the world shall be still further developed, and poverty and misery shall be no more.

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose (Isa. 35: 1).

A New Use for Concrete.

A scientific journal reports an important improvement in the construction of subterraneous pipes and sewers. It consists in the use of concrete, instead of bricks or clay pipes. It is stated that Reading, Pa. was the first city to adopt this method of construction as a substitute for the ordinary brick system, and with results that have proved its value. Not only is the adoption of such a method found to be one third cheaper, but the smooth, even surface of such a kind of wall furnishes no opportunity for the lodgment of sediment, or for the erosion and gradual destruction of the body of the sewer that is sure to develop, in course of time, from defective bricks or joints. Recently a committee of Chicago officials visited Reading for the purpose of thoroughly inspecting the sewers in question, with the result as reported—the plan presenting such adequate points of advantage—that hereafter all sewer constructions are likely to be made of this material. The same principle may be applied to morals. Temptation comes alike to all, but it fails where it finds nothing in a man's nature on which it can rest or take hold. Happy is the Christian, who like his Lord, can say:

The prince of this world cometh; but he hath nothing in me (John 14: 30, R. V.).

To Prevent Fires.

A new system of packing cotton is being introduced to prevent the bales taking fire, as they sometimes do on board ship. The new method—closely compact cylindrical bales taking the place of the ordinary form—will, it is thought, become in time one of general adoption. It has been demonstrated by repeated showings that cotton can be put up in cylindrical bales in so dense a form as to render it a practical impossibility to burn it; the surface can be scorched, but beyond this, through the absence of needed oxygen, fire will not penetrate. Under the ordinary system of packing, notwithstanding the bales are compressed, sufficient oxygen is still retained in and through them to give vitality to a fire. Thus, a spark from a cigar, a match, or a smokestack may fall upon a bale of cotton during the process of packing or shipping and working its way down toward the interior of the package, and, though it may be weeks before any evidence of its presence is felt, it sometimes finds its way at the end of that time, and with greatly added vigor, to the surface of the bale, disastrous consequences perhaps ensuing. This is a liability which the process of cylindrical baling must, it is declared, entirely obviate. An analogous process is sometimes needed in character. One evil proclivity or bad habit may set the whole nature on fire after many years. The prayer of the Psalmist still needs to be offered by every Christian:

Search me, O God, and know my heart; try me and know my thoughts and see if there be any wicked way in me (Ps. 139: 23).

Claimed by Two Suitors.

The Immigration Commissioners in New York had the delicate task last week of settling a dispute between two suitors. In compliance with a request from Anton Sedouski, a Polish mechanic living on Staten Island, they notified him of the arrival of the steamship Karlsruhe from Bremen. Among the passengers was a Polish lady, who said that she had come to marry the Staten Island man. Before, however, the notification could have reached him, a man appeared at the receiving station, who said he was Anton Sedouski, and had come for the young lady who was to be his wife. A few hours afterward another man, who said his name was Anton Sedouski, appeared and claimed her. The two men were asked for an explanation, and it then appeared that they were brothers. Six years ago, when they were living in Poland, the young lady, then a girl of thirteen, was their playmate. They came to America, and a few months ago the younger brother proposed to the elder that they send for her. The elder had already saved enough money to pay her passage over. The younger, it would appear, tried to steal a march on him by seeing her first and marrying her before the elder claimed her. While the dispute between the brothers was being waged, it occurred to the Commissioners that the young lady herself should have a voice in the matter, and she was called in and was informed how things stood. She promptly settled the question by saying that if the elder brother wished to marry her she would accept him, and so the matter was arranged, and the marriage ceremony was performed. The brothers seemed surprised by the importance the Commissioners attached to the lady's preference, but they will doubtless understand it in the future, if they remain in this country. There is little hope of happiness in marriage if the wife has not been allowed a freedom of choice. Even in that higher relation of which marriage is a type, compulsion is excluded. God compels no man to come to him, but pleads with him as a friend.

PROPOSED MAMMOTH STORAGE RESERVOIR ON THE NILE AT ASSOUAN.

There will I plead with you face to face, like as I pleaded with your fathers (Ezek. 20: 35).

Blindness Philosophizing.

An interesting talk with a lady who has been blind for ten years past is published by a Washington journal. The lady said that when she was told by the oculists that she would become totally blind, she was almost heart-broken. Since the calamity has fallen upon her, however, she has been resolved to make the best of it, and she has found unexpected alleviations to her dark lot. Talking with the reporter she said: "Can you understand that the world seems very much more beautiful to me now than it did when I could see? We of the sightless eyes fall unconsciously into the habit, as the time passes, of idealizing everything that presents itself to our notice. I am frequently visited by many women friends whose faces I have never seen. I am told that several of these friends are hopelessly plain as to features, but I have observed that those who, as I hear, are the least attractive, as to their exterior beauty, have the sweetest voices, which in itself is a compensation for them. It is a compensation for me in that I am the beneficiary of that which is the most attractive thing about them—their voices. Again, you know that many fine musicians, vocal and instrumental, men and women, are desperately ill-favored, and the performing manners of some of them are distressing, as I myself remember. But I only hear their music. When I am led through the parks and inspired by the fragrance I cannot see the flowers that are withering." It would be well if some keen-sighted people would take a hint from this blind lady's disposition. Life would be very much more pleasant, if the habit were more general of dwelling on the beauties and good qualities of those with whom we come in contact, instead of on their faults and defects.

Judge nothing before the time; until the Lord come who will make manifest the counsels of the hearts, and then shall every man have praise of God (I. Cor. 4: 5).

False to their Trust.

A sheep-dealer, near Philadelphia, is mourning the betrayal of a trust. The Times, of that city, says that as he has occasionally been robbed in the night he bought two large dogs of the mastiff breed to protect his sheep-pens. For about a year the plan worked well, and he slept peacefully in the confidence that his valuable stock was secure under the guardianship of the dogs. A few days ago, however, he changed his mind. Going in the morning to the sheep-pens, he was surprised to hear none of the usual bleatings. When he entered, he saw a sight that turned him pale. Twenty-nine sheep of a valuable breed lay in the pens, dead and dismembered, while all the others were so badly mutilated that it was necessary to kill them at once. The savage instincts of the dogs must have suddenly overcome them and, once mastered by them, they did not stop till their work of destruction was done. There is reason to fear that in some pulpits there are men who are supposed to be the guardians of Christ's flock, whose work is as fatal to the sheep. Though they do not destroy them themselves they lead them into paths where they become the prey of the enemy of souls. Christ foresaw that there would come such traitors and uttered an emphatic protest against them.

Beware of false prophets who come to you in sheep's clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves (Matt. 7: 15.)

Mortifying the Flesh.

The Hudson Street Hospital in New York received a patient a few days ago who requires two kinds of treatment. He is the son of a grocer in the neighborhood, and is nineteen years of age. He has been for sometime under strange religious influences. He was convinced that his soul was in imminent danger of being lost, and as he was a Roman Catholic, he invoked the intercession of the saints for his salvation. Getting no comfort nor satisfaction, he gradually became deranged, and in this condition raised an uproar in the house that disturbed his father and the family. Finally as he became violent and destructive, they locked him in the cellar to keep him from injuring them or their property. There his prayers and cries became louder than ever, and it was necessary to have him put under restraint. An ambulance was summoned, but when it arrived the young man was unable to walk up the cellar stairs. The ambulance surgeon found the calves of his legs to be in an inflamed condition. On questioning the patient he learned that he had driven a number of needles into them as a means of mortifying the flesh. They are so deeply imbedded and have traveled so far through the muscles that it will be necessary to use the Roentgen rays to locate them. Meanwhile his frenzy continues, and will need skilful treatment to prevent it becoming permanent. What a pity it is that a man so anxious to be right with God should not know that he is not pleased by self-inflicted suffering, but by faith in his Son.

To him that worketh not, but believeth on him that justifieth the ungodly, his faith is counted for righteousness (Rom. 4:5).

A Pause in Cuban Relief Work

PORTS CLOSED AND ALL SHIPMENTS TEMPORARILY STOPPED IN ANTICIPATION OF WAR.

Meanwhile, the Reconcentrados Must Suffer Unaided—Key West and Tampa Crowded With Destitute Peasant Refugees Who Need Help—An International Difficulty that May be Speedily Adjusted and Relief Operations in Cuba Resumed.

FEEDING THE RECONCENTRADOS AT OUR HAVANA SUPPLY DEPOT.

AT this time of writing, all relief work in Cuba has come to a halt, shipments of supplies having been rendered impracticable in view of the unsettled difficulties between Spain and the United States. At no time was the need greater than it is at present, but the international complications have interposed an impassable barrier, for a time at least, to the continuance of the work. Consul-General Lee, our consuls at the various ports, and several thousand American citizens have left the island. Miss Clara Barton, the President of the Red Cross, who, with her staff had only lately returned to Havana, has also been reluctantly compelled to leave, as no assurance could be obtained that Spain would recognize the American Red Cross in the event of war. Large numbers of reconcentrados have lately come to Key West and Tampa, dreading the outlook in Cuba in the event of a war which would close all the Cuban ports and leave the non-combatant peasantry to die of starvation.

Our readers are already familiar with the history of the protracted diplomatic negotiations between our government and that of Spain, which have culminated in the present crisis, and therefore these need not be reviewed here. Just how the relief work will ultimately be affected by the Spanish-Cuban armistice and other recent events cannot now be determined although there is reason to hope for such developments as will again make shipments practicable and safe at no distant date. There were, at last accounts, sufficient supplies in the hands of the various local relief committees in Cuba and in storage in Havana to meet the needs of the sufferers for several weeks.

Looking back at the work that has been accomplished in Cuba, even amid all discouragements, it is found to be full of comfort and encouragement. Our readers have in the highest and most sacred sense "done what they could" to save the lives of the multitudes of famishing peasants; and it is beyond all question that their generous charity has been the means of rescuing thousands from a horrible fate and of averting untold suffering. If the door is to be soon reopened, so that we may continue this Samaritan work to its completion, it will be a cause for distinct thankfulness.

It will be remembered by our readers that the proprietors of this journal, while in Cuba, became the great need of many "silent sufferers" in Havana, Matanzas and elsewhere—those who from a condition of comparative comfort had been reduced to the lowest point of destitution, yet who could not bring themselves to beg or to make their wants publicly known—made an appropriation from the Fund in their behalf. This appropriation was expended through our United States Consuls. Consul Brice, stationed at Matanzas, lately sent a note to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in which he said:

The enclosed is an expression of gratitude from the "silent poor" of Matanzas. I say nothing, it speaks for itself—was handed me to forward to your committee. God is working for poor Cuba in a mysterious way.

BRICE.

This is the letter to which he refers:

MATANZAS, March 25, 1898.

To the Proprietor of "The Christian Herald."

SIR: In my name and in the name of several other ladies, all under similar obligation to you, I take pleasure to address these lines to discharge a duty, which heartfelt gratitude imposes.

Without our solicitation and in the retirement of our desolate homes, the charity of your people comes to surprise us and to relieve pressing wants, teaching us, at the same time, that the American people are the great benefactors of the world.

And our gratitude must also be extended to the Honorable Consul of the United States at this place, Mr. Alexander C. Brice, who has so delicately executed the distribution of your alms, that it may be said his left hand ignores the good work the right has done.

The position we have occupied and the comforts we have enjoyed in life somewhat maintain in us a certain feeling of dignity, or, perhaps, pride, which makes us struggle silently with want in the midst of our households rather than go from house to house imploring charity.

We owe you, therefore, double gratitude, and all we can now return for your humanitarian sentiments is to invoke for you and yours the blessings of Almighty God, and pray that you receive the reward you so richly deserve.

LUISA GONZALEZ DE ARMSTRONG.

Concerning the distribution of the $1,000 for the "silent sufferers," Consul Brice has this to say:

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, MATANZAS, March 28, 1898.

GENTLEMEN:—For want of time, I can only give you a brief detail of the distribution of the $1,000 placed in my hands for relief of the "silent poor" and others of this city and province. Sold draft, or check, for $1,090, Spanish gold. Distributed to reconcentrados and a few negro families in amounts of 40 cents up to $2. This was done in a peculiar manner, and rather secretly. The worst forms of misery and suffering would be singled out, and myself and some of my intimate friends would rapidly pass and slip into their hands a 40-cent piece or other amount, and away before they knew what they had. Their looks of amazement and gratitude were immense. Many would fall on their knees and offer up blessings for Americans. The balance was given to the better class of families, mostly widows and orphans, who are suffering in silence the appalling bitterness of poverty and distress, caused by the inhuman concentration order of Gen. Weyler. One lady relieved was the granddaughter of a former governor of this province. Another, Jenny Baker Dudley, a lady whose grandfather was Gen. James Baker, U. S. A., war of 1812, of Virginia, and her grandmother of the Johnson family, Norfolk, Va. She had old pictures and mementos satisfactorily proving her identity.

One hundred and seven families were relieved — but only temporarily — with this gift of our American people. May God bless them! It is entirely beyond my time and power to write you the expressions of thanksgiving and praise of these people. God be with and bless you all. A. C. BRICE,

U. S. Consul.

Consular Agent Carlos Yznaga, at Trinidad de Cuba, who also aided in relieving the "silent sufferers," writes:

I received your letter of the 24th ultimo with an enclosure of a check for $500 from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund for the relief of the "silent sufferers" in this city. I made a list of those families who are silently starving; but who, only a few years ago, were in plenty. Then I personally went on horseback to all the houses in my list, and from them I learned of a good many more families, which have also been relieved, but as there were so very many, I necessarily had to give small amounts in order to help as many as possible. The horrible state of destitution, misery and nakedness I will not describe.

I cannot help telling of one sad experience. I refer to my visit to the house of Jose Mariano Borrel. This poor man and his wife were in the same room with their six living children, and two little babies, two and four years old, dead on the only bed in the house. They had died three days before. I gave him some money, and at the father's command, "Let us pray for the happiness of these kind-hearted Americans," all knelt by the bodies of their dear ones, and, amid tears, prayed for their benefactors.

I gave some aid in pesetas and dimes to the poor women in the streets, and the great majority of those receiving a small coin had emaciated babies in their arms. Within an hour after I had taken relief to the first house, the news spread that the much-expected rations for the reconcentrados had arrived last, and that the Consular Agent was distributing them; and people of all ages and in stages of starvation sprang up as if fr under the earth, by hundreds and by th sands, and followed me everywhere. It impossible to convince them that I had ceived no rations for the reconcentrac The streets seemed as if a riot of the w kind was going on, all pushing each otl trampling one on another in their fra efforts to reach me before the food (as t believed) would give out, and worst of all their howling, not only imploring by all saints, but yelling "Food from the Am canos! In thanking you in the name of the stric to whom you have contributed so liberall feel that if our people at home knew the character of those who are the beneficiarie their charity, their hearts would not only doubly gladdened, but their donations, h ever liberal, would also be doubled. I h seen and read much of the people inhabi this earth; for pure, simple generosity thorough unselfishness, I do not believe Cubans have a peer. It is not unusua have a poor, half-starved woman, ofttı girls in their teens, appear at the Consulate questing to be inscribed on the relief When asked if they have any children, reply is, "No, except a little orphan I l adopted." Starving themselves, their he go out to these little ones left alone; w they double their efforts to procure foo save them, regardless of the pangs of hu they suffer for their adopted. Again, a r chaste race of women God never gave to world! The victims of Weyler's concen tion were generally of the peasant class— h little education, and less experience wi a corrupt and depraved world. Cast amo a set of unfeeling, unscrupulous, defiled men ing of sheer starvation:—tempted beyond ordeal pure woman ever had to pass thro infirm and broken hearted parents, with dear little ones all dying, when filthy l would have saved them, these Cuban mai escaped temptation to depart from "straight and narrow path," going to graves victims of a cruelty equal to the quisition, but as pure and spotless as held to their mother's bosom.

To these peerless women I gladly pay poor tribute; and beg of my countrym our American women—the "noblest of all," to remember that in succoring these unfortunates—ninety per cent. are women children—they give to a pure and gra people.

God bless you in all your good wor suffering humanity. Faithfully yours,

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

A Blessing Box — Does Obedience Cease at Twenty? — A Pair of Lovers — Shameful Treatment — Sugar Flowers — A Girl's Duty — The Remedy at Hand.

THE other day, in a friend's house, I saw on her dressing-table a pretty little pipkin, something like an orange in shape, with a little slit on one side. I said: "Will you tell me, Mary, what this is for?" "Oh," she said, "haven't you one of your own? That is my blessing box. In our church we have hit upon this plan of raising money for foreign missions, but it would do just as well should the money be appropriated in some other way. Every time you have a blessing, which you recognize: every time some pleasant thing happens to you, for which you desire to thank God, you just slip a penny or a nickel or a dime or whatever you choose in your blessing box. At the end of six months or a year, or whenever the box is full, you break it, take out the coins and give them to whatever charity you have decided that your offering shall go." The idea of a blessing box seems to me so very pretty and attractive that I pass it on to my Friends in Council.

ANOTHER girl, this time a happy daughter, is anxious to know whether the duty of obedience ceases at the age of twenty, and asks to what extent must she continue to obey her father and mother. The obligation of obedience does not cease because a person is grown up; but, in the natural order of things, authority and obedience are modified after children are grown. During childhood the parents' experience stands for the protection of the little one; and for many reasons a father and mother must interpose, and sometimes arbitrarily, to prevent a child from going to places or doing things which might be hurtful. In most cases, however, when a man or woman is grown up, the parents cease to exercise direct authority, and are content with giving advice. Study the lower animals; the bird as it must provide for its young, is responsible for the fledgling, takes care of it and really exercises over it a strong measure of authority; but when the bird can fly and leave the nest, it no longer needs assistance or restraint from its parent. Study birds and you will see what I mean. If you are a daughter at home, dependent on your father for a home and support, you must certainly yield him due obedience.

A YOUNG man of twenty-four, in love with a young lady of nineteen, whose tastes and education are similar to his own, a man who, from his very enthusiastic description, must be a very beautiful and charming girl, inquires whether I think from the general outline of the case, which he sends me, that the two have a prospect of happiness. Why, yes; you seem wonderfully well suited to one another, and especially your joint delight in music delivers you likely to be pleasant comrades on the road of life. Now, if one loved music and the other did not care for it, I should hesitate in saying what I do; for, strange as it may seem, I have known an immoderate love for the piano, in an instance where the gifted wife persisted in practising from eight to ten hours a day; and that every day, often till midnight, and the husband found no delight in music, which was to him as a mere jarring noise, the rock on which married happiness went to pieces.

In the case of two young people like yourselves, however, both caring for the same things, and equally loyal and loving, you have a very good chance to find this earth an Eden, and may yours be a pleasant singing pilgrimage to the land of everlasting bliss.

I WISH the next letter I had to consider were as pleasant as this last one: but it gave me a peculiar heart-ache when I read it, and it still distresses me. Nothing, my dear Katherine, can excuse the shocking and brutal treatment you receive from your guardians. A grown-up girl, placed under the care of relatives, has no right to submit to discipline which would be abominable if administered by a father to his own daughter. Punishment with blows should certainly cease with early childhood. In my opinion it is a mistake even then, and quite often an outrage; but when a girl has reached the age of eighteen, it is high time that she should cease to be whipped as if she were a child. As you are a minor, you should appeal to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children in your city and ask for its protection. If you feel that you cannot endure the mortification of having strangers know how you are treated, you will be justified, I think, in obtaining work where you can support yourself away from the home in which you now live. It is possible you are to blame for willfulness or ill-temper. I am not sure from your letter that you can be considered entirely blameless; but I am positive that the time ceased long ago when your guardians should treat you as they do. While so many women in the land are in need of helpers in their housework, it would seem to me that if there is nothing else you can do, you could certainly secure a position as nursery-maid or maid-of-all-work. You would receive gentle treatment in most homes, fair wages, and enjoy a measure of independence, as well as have the shelter and protection of a home. Such treatment as you tell me of makes my blood boil.

THE MISSION WOOD-YARD.

SINCE writing to mothers the other day with regard to children's reading, I have heard of a very beautiful book, entitled "How John and I Brought Up the Child." The author is Lucy Guernsey. I have not read this book myself; but should it come in the way of any perplexed mother, she will probably find it well worth her study.

SPEAKING of flowers, I saw the other day the most exquisite pansies, violets, apple-blossoms and buttercups which I have seen for years, all made with confectioner's sugar. A clever woman in a southern town, famed for her delicious cake, has taken upon herself the manufacture of beautiful cakes for parties, and she decorates them with an art and skill unsurpassed. With little tubes of white paper and her own deft fingers, she ornaments her cakes, and so complete is her reproduction of flowers in sugar that you would think a little way off that sprays of the real flowers had been thrown upon the cake.

WITH REGARD to your present position at home, dear Elsie, be sure that duty points to your remaining there and assisting your mother. She is not strong enough to do without her eldest daughter's help. There are many girls in the world who can go out and earn money; there are many to whom it is possible to become teachers; but, my dear, we have only one mother. If yours should be taken from you, and you have in any way failed to smooth her path and make life easier for her, you will never know an easy moment again. Also, it is a great joy to have one's own mother and to be able to help her. Those of us who long ago saw our mothers go to heaven know how much we miss them here.

ENTRANCE TO THE MISSION.

IN THE DORMITORIES OF THE MISSION.

THE case of which you tell me, my dear Vera, is certainly very trying; but I think your friend has the remedy in her own hands. If she is not strong enough to do the laundry work in her family, the best thing she can do is simply to let it alone. On Monday mornings, if I were in her place, I would just put on my hat and go out for a long walk. I understand that there is plenty of money there; that the people can afford to pay for it, but that they prefer to have it done by this young woman, in order that they may save the expenses of a laundress. If the young woman has backbone enough to do the washing, she probably has enough to take a decided course and refuse to do it any longer. After a few weeks, the accumulation of soiled clothing will probably be so large that in self-defense the family will have to send for somebody from outside to do it. In this world a great many troubles can be prevented if people will only put their feet down firmly and refuse to be imposed upon.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

WON FROM SINFUL LIVES.

The Lafayette Rescue Mission of Harrisburg and its Work Among the Unsaved.

IN former years one of the most notorious dens of gilded vice in the State of Pennsylvania, was that known as Cook's place, in Harrisburg. It was the building on State street known as Lafayette Hall, and its furnishings and equipment were of the most gorgeous description. The resort of gamblers, criminals, and the depraved of both sexes. One day death ended the revel and laid the proprietor low. After this, the den of sinful pleasure was closed for many years, the doors being locked against all.

Two years ago, a band of Christian men and women decided to open the old hall as a Rescue Mission. It was rented, cleaned up, suitably furnished, and on January 12, 1896, was formally opened, since which time it has had for its object not the degradation and ruin of men and women, but their rescue and salvation.

Mr. William Bredell Orr, one of the most active workers connected with the Mission, furnishes this interesting account of its general scope and purpose and of the results attained:

"It aims to rescue men who have led sinful lives and to make them become useful citizens. We also give them a temporary home and care for them, if they truly desire to be better men. The Mission never closes its doors against such persons, but receives them with that spirit of brotherly kindness which is the foundation of all rescue missions. Idleness is not encouraged at the Mission, but men who evince a desire to abandon sinful lives have their wants supplied. We try to elevate them, and with God's help to send them forth into the world redeemed men. Our Rescue Mission Home has accomplished some things which no religious organization has done in our city—that of bringing to the foot of the cross many men who were considered outcasts, and had never been inside of a church. Religious services are held every night in the chapel.

The building we occupy is a large three-story structure, erected some twenty-five or thirty years ago for a gambling house. The drinking bar stands as it was on the day it was closed. Since its opening day as a rescue mission the whole property has been consecrated to a purer service, and hundreds of sinful men have been led to a better life, while hundreds more have asked to be prayed for by the mission workers. President Brown has devoted his life to this work.

Since the opening of the Lafayette Mission Hall much good has been accomplished in the neighborhood and throughout a very large section of Harrisburg, as the result of its influence. It has been the means, under divine blessing, of leading hundreds of sinners to the cross, and reuniting many broken families whose trials and troubles were caused by wicked lives. In a year it sheltered nearly 7,000 men, gave out 340 garments, served 16,958 meals, made 312 visits to the sick, sent back to their homes from which they had wandered 36, found employment for 43, preached the Gospel to 17,956 in chapel, and in a thousand other ways held up the cross of Christ to the crowd of sin-sick souls that flocked to the mission.

A PASTORAL CALL,

And How It Brought Happiness to a Disunited Family.

Written by... L. M. MONTGOMERY.

"WHY should I think so, Mrs. Kennedy?" said Mr. Douglas gently. "Everybody makes mistakes. I am only very sorry for you all. You have suffered; perhaps your son has, too. He loved you—he must miss you bitterly."

"He doesn't," said Mrs. Kennedy, with an ominous stiffening of her upper lip. "He doesn't care—he's got Esther; that is all he wants."

"No, I don't think that is all he wants. He was a good son, you say. A good son never ceases to love his mother, Mrs. Kennedy. I am sure that your son repents what has passed, even if he has given no sign. If you were to go to him and say"——

"Mr. Douglas, it ain't any use. You mean well, but you don't know. We ain't that kind of people. We never give in. I don't want to give in, for that matter. If Walter can get along without me, I can get along without him."

"Mrs. Kennedy, I had a letter from my mother to-day. There were little blisters on the paper where her tears had fallen. She wrote: 'I miss you so much, my son. I miss your voice, your face, every hour. No one can fill your place.' All good mothers are alike, I believe. Mrs. Kennedy, didn't you miss your boy when he went away?"

For a minute there was no answer. Then she spoke in a low voice:

"Yes, Mr. Douglas, I did—I do. I miss him dreadful—dreadful. I never said so before to a living mortal, but it's true. Sometimes I feel as if I could give most anything to have them all back—Esther and all. She wasn't a bad little creature in some ways. I s'pose I was hard on her. She was very young. I might have made more allowances. I guess I was just jealous—Walter thought so much of her. And then—their little baby—such a dear little thing as that baby was. They called it Ellen after me—Esther suggested that. I haven't seen it for two years. It used to love to have me nurse it and fuss round it. I did set a heap of store by that child. I ain't never talked like this to any one before, Mr. Douglas. I was real mad when I saw you coming. I know the Pawtucket crowd think I'm awful hard. I s'pose I am. It's in my family. We're all as hard as flint. I ain't very happy, though. If Walter would only let on he cared—but he doesn't."

"I believe he does; I know he does. It would break my heart if my mother were angry with me. I am sure your son feels the same. I am glad you have given me your confidence. I shall pray for you. I will ask my mother to pray for you. You love your son still; go to him and tell him so, and you will find that his mother has never lost her place in his heart."

There was a silence in the dim room. The last faint gleams of light fell over the bowed gray head by the window. He was a wise and clear-sighted young minister in spite of his youth; he knew when enough had been said. He read the twenty third psalm and made a simple, earnest prayer. Then he went away with a cheery good by.

Mrs. Kennedy went with him to the door and watched him as he walked erectly down the garden path with the rough wind of the autumn night swirling the wrinkled brown leaves about his feet.

She did not go back into the house. Instead, she carefully closed the hall door behind her and sat down on the step, wrapping her red knitted shawl tightly about her sharp shoulders. She sat there in the dark for a long while. Her thin, pinched face looked more thin and pinched than ever in the faint, cold light of the fall evening.

All the warm, red glow of sunset had faded out of the sky. There was only one savage, fiery streak that ran low along the west, against which a row of grim firs came out with black, spectral distinctness. The sky was all curdled over with little rolls of gray clouds, between which a few pale stars glimmered uncertainly. The chilly wind moaned around the house and the maple by the door tossed its gaunt branches wildly, as if some passionate, ghostly thing were wringing its fleshless hands in agony. The row of Lombardys at the foot of the garden stood up like a line of rigid sentinels. The gate creaked dismally as it wavered to and fro in the raw gusts, and the leaves went eddying fitfully up and down the paths in weird, uncanny dances of their own. The whole outdoor world was bleak and unlovely in its leaflessness and gloom. To the old woman crouching on the doorstep it seemed the outward type of her own lonely, loveless life. She shivered and drew her shawl closer around her.

"It's awful cold and raw to-night," she muttered, thinking aloud, as was her habit since she had lived alone. "I believe it'll snow before long. I wish it would—I'm sick and tired of those old bare fields. I dunno what makes me so miserable to-night. I dunno what there was in that young minister to stir me up so. He didn't say much—he only looked it. I dunno but what he's right. I wish he was—I wish Walter did care. It was mostly my fault. I was a cantankerous, fault-finding old thing. I needn't have been so hard on Esther. I guess Mr. Douglas's mother wouldn't have been. I'd do different if I had the chance over again. I just wonder what Walter would say if I were to go right down there now. I guess he'd stare. I s'pose Esther wouldn't let him speak to me, though. I guess she's pretty bitter—I s'pose it ain't much wonder if she is. I believe I would go if I thought it would be any use."

Walter's light gleamed suddenly out away down at the foot of the long hill. She looked at it a minute uncertainly. Then she got up in a quick, decided way and went into the house.

It was very dark and silent. Miranda had gone out. There was nothing alive in the house but herself. She lit a candle and went into the bedroom off the parlor. It was a small and immaculate apartment. She looked at herself in the scroll-framed mirror by the pale flickering light. "I look awful cross and disagreeable," she muttered, "and I'm fearful wrinkled. It's all come these last two years. I guess I don't look much like the minister's mother. I know what she's like as well as if I saw her. She's one of them little women with soft, scrimpy hair and brown eyes like his. And she'd wear something soft—gray silk, maybe—and have a lace ruffle at her neck and her smile will be like his. No, I guess we don't look much alike."

She smiled bitterly at her reflected self. In fancy she saw the sweet mild face of the minister's mother beside her own. Could that far-away, unknown woman ever treat her son as she had treated Walter?

"There's a big difference in mothers," she said aloud. "I'm on the wrong side of the difference, too. It's late to learn it now—but perhaps not too late. I shall go and see Walter. If he does care anything for me I shall find it out. If he doesn't I'll find that out too, and so much the better." She put on her best bonnet and shawl. She blew out the light and put the matches by it on the table ready for lighting. She locked the front door and put the key under the step.

"Miranda 'll find it there. But I guess I'll be back before she is. I won't stay long maybe. I guess I'm an old fool to go. But I don't want to look in that minister's eyes again and not be able to say I've done my part. I'd hate to have him contrasting me with his own mother. I declare I'm scared to go. I wonder what they will think. I expect Esther'll look me over in that top-lofty way of hers. If I stay here much longer thinking of it I'll get too nervous to go at all."

She went down the path with a little determined rush. The wind swirled her black skirt about her, and the leaves fled elfishly before her feet. There was a short cut down through the fields to the Corners, and she took it, hurrying breathlessly along, as if trying to get ahead of her own thoughts and fears.

It was very dark and bleak. The moon had not risen, and the night was full of weird, eerie sounds—the creaking of boughs above her, the moaning of the wind in the dark tree-tops, the nestling of dead leaves, the vibrations of strips of dried bark on the rail fences.

"I never was out in such a ghostly night," she panted timorously. She was out of breath when she got to Walter's door. She paused, panting. "I don't dare knock," she murmured. S'posing Walter should come, and when he saw who it was, shut the door in my face! Or if Esther should come! I've a notion to go right back." She hesitated, wavering off and on the steps. My Minister's Medicine

Thousands of people take Hood's Sarsaparilla because their pastors recommend it. Such high recommendations are won only by its intrinsic merit, and the people realize in restored health the fact that all its praise is fully warranted.

To do the greatest good we must have the best health. This is the theory of Rev. E. E. Jenkins, of Evansville, Ind., and that it is sound doctrine is proved by the daily lives of many clergymen who use Hood's Sarsaparilla. Rev. Mr. Jenkins is pastor of the Free Methodist Church. He writes:

"C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.:

"Gentlemen:—We first used Hood's Sarsaparilla in the case of my mother, who was literally covered with eczema. Her face, hands and feet were terribly swollen. The family physician treated her, but she failed to get better. I thought if she could the evil would disappear. My druggist recommended Hood's Sarsaparilla. We used several bottles, and she also applied Hood's Olive Ointment, with surprisingly gratifying results. When I saw what it did for my aged mother, I resolved never to be without the medicine; consequently, when I married and had a little family of my own, I kept Hood's Sarsaparilla on hand. Wherever we have been during my years in the ministry, we have recommended Hood's preparations. When a trial is given it means a permanent customer with a correspondingly beneficial effect upon the patron. I believe the greatest amount of good can be accomplished only when the body is free from disease." REV. E. E. JENKINS, 407 Governor Street, Evansville, Ind.

After Diphtheria.

"By a severe attack of diphtheria I lost two of my children. I used Hood's Sarsaparilla as a tonic both for myself and little girl, and found it most excellent as a means to restore the impoverished blood to its natural state and as a help to appetite and digestion. I depend upon it when I need a tonic, and I find it at once efficacious." REV. C. H. SMITH, Congregational parsonage, Plymouth, Conn.

Scrofula Cured.

"Our eldest child had scrofula ever since he was two years old. His face became a mass of sores. I was advised by an old, physician to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and we did so. The child is now strong and healthy and his skin is clear and smooth." REV. R A. GAMP, Valley, Iowa.

Come right in, ma," said Walter,

th moon had risen, touching the hills with silvery glory and casting twinkling shadows of bare boughs and twig-tracery over the wood path. Mrs. Kennedy stepped along briskly and cheerfully. A light was gleaming from her house up on the hill. There was a smile on her face as she thought of the near future—the future which she was to share with Walter and Esther and the baby. And in the background of her dreams glimmered the ideal of a sweet, approving face—a face with tender brown eyes, framed in waves of soft, silver-sprinkled hair.

"I guess the minister's mother would be glad if she knew all her son has done for me," whispered Mrs. Kennedy softly.

[THE END.]

A Priest Seeking Light.

An interesting story of an inquirer in the ranks of Romish clergy comes from a Waldensian pastor of Verona, Italy. This pastor, Rev. O. Golia Mauro writes that he was recently surprised by receiving a visit from Father G——, a young Redemptorist priest, who openly asked him for instruction. "The father," says Pastor Mauro, "like many in the Church of Rome, was made a priest almost in childhood. He was born near Rome, but is now teaching philosophy in a seminary of priests in the province of Verona. He assures me that he has never been convinced of the Romish doctrines: on the contrary, although he has not yet a very clear knowledge of the Gospel, he feels his conscience in continual opposition to the Papal system. He is twenty-eight years of age, and seems very intelligent. Morally speaking, his conduct up to the present time has been irreproachable, and the reason of his seeking me out and coming to me is with the sole aim of embracing the truth and being put into the way of preaching the Gospel. My hope and my plan is to satisfy his ardent wish by letting him study under my personal supervision, and at the same time to learn practical experience by working as colporteur; and, later on, when he is equal to so doing, to let him preach also."

The Most Popular Corset.

We never made a corset that jumped into popular favor so quickly as our new number 397.

It is a short-long corset.

It is short under the arms, where it ought to be short, but it has sufficient length over the hips and in the bust to give it a strength and shapeliness not possible in the extremely short corsets of last season.

Number 397 will fit more figures than any other one style of corset. It is a beautifully finished corset—you can see for yourself how graceful are its lines. It will not make a bad figure good, but it will improve it, and it will bring out all of the good points of a good figure.

More than all else—it is comfortable—and it fits.

It fits always—because it is an R. & G. It will not give or stretch.

Every R. & G. Corset is tested and stretched, damp, over a steam-heated iron form. If the cutter or stitcher varied a sixteenth of an inch from his pattern, the corset will not fit the form and it is never honored with an R. & G. trade-mark. It is not an R. & G. corset until it is trade-marked. It is not trade-marked unless it is perfect.

The size of an R. & G. is always the same. You don't have to "break it in." From the first it is as comfortable as an old corset.

Number 397 is a dollar corset. Most dealers have it, but if you don't find it easily, send us your dollar and we'll see that you get it.

OUR FREE BOOKLET.

We have a book that ought to interest every woman who wears a corset, no matter what corset she wears. It is called "CORSET FACTS," and we will send it FREE, on request, to every woman who wants to know how to choose the right corset for her figure.

CHRIST AS PRIEST.

Fitted by his Divine Nature and his Human Experience for the Office. Heb. 4: 14-16; 7: 24-28.

The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews, whether the Apostle Paul or one of his disciples, was evidently a man familiar with Jewish law and worship. He shows with wonderful skill that Christianity offers to men all that had made Judaism of value to the world. Nothing was lost, but the value of everything was increased. The shadow had given place to the substance. In this particular feature so far from mankind having lost a High Priest, there was a permanent High Priest whose power with God was incomparable. Like Melchizedek he antedated Aaron, and his sacrifice was greater than was ever offered. But it is with his human side that the writer is chiefly concerned. The mediator might be so far above us as to be inaccessible. But this High Priest was peculiarly sympathetic. He had actual experience of temptation and knew its power. He could sympathize, therefore, with those who fell under it. He had felt weakness and could pity the weak. He had known the agony of death and could feel for the dying. He had known what it was to pray for the removal of a cup of suffering and to have his prayer rejected. He had been homeless, poor, despised, persecuted, misunderstood, misrepresented, humiliated — what experience can his followers have that he does not know? It is no wonder that the writer of the epistle bids us approach him with confidence assured of his sympathy. Remembering his experience, we may go to him as one who has a fellow feeling with us, having learned obedience, as we learn it, by suffering.

HOSPITALITY.

An Oriental Grace Too Much Neglected Among Ourselves. Gen. 18: 1-8; Heb. 13: 2; I. Peter 4: 9.

It is sometimes alleged that the Bible's admonitions are applicable rather to Oriental peoples of an earlier time than to us in this western land in the nineteenth century. But so much cannot be said of the injunctions to hospitality. To this day, in the Orient, the same kindly, genial hospitality is seen that is described in the passage associated with the topic. Dr. Trumbull relates that during his recent tour in Palestine and Arabia he was treated by an Arab sheik as these celestial visitors were treated by Abraham. The sheik rose from the entrance to his tent, courteously bade the travelers enter, made coffee for them with his own hands, and had his wife bake cakes for them. He would have slaughtered a lamb for their supper if they could have remained to the meal. It seemed to astonish him when they thanked him for entertaining them, and insisted that he was indebted to them for the honor of their visit. Civilization has not developed this grace. It has tended rather to isolation and selfishness, so that often a man knows but little even of his neighbors, and makes no secret of his disinclination to entertain strangers. Even in the Lord's house the stranger sometimes receives but scant welcome. There are, of course, reasons for this, but it may be doubted whether we have not suffered them to have too much weight. Those who bear the Lord's name, and those who, as we know, are his servants, have a claim upon us that we cannot afford to ignore. When we send them to a hotel or boarding-house instead of giving them a place at our tables we frequently miss a privilege which God places within our reach. It is on this ground that the apostle bases his plea. It is not the traveler's necessities that he urges, nor the duty of ministering to them, but our own interest which we lose sight of, when we neglect to entertain the stranger. We do not expect that the casual guest will turn out to be an angel, and we are not disappointed if he prove to be a mere man and not a grateful one at that, but the duty remains, and we have our Lord's promise that in receiving a guest because of his brotherhood in Christ, we are entertaining him in the person of his people.

We don't want them up their religion; we want them old of something that is a religion.

ENTHUSIASM IN GOD'S WORK.

Many people seem to think that asm and religion shouldn't go er. As soon as you speak about asm about God's work they call it sm. Why? There is more excite- n the saloons of New York in one than in all the churches of the city ve years. Let stocks go down five What excitement there is down- town! Or let one newspaper beat another on some important news from Cuba. There is plenty of excitement in the office of the paper that got left. The only thing we are told we mustn't get excited or enthusiastic about is religion. Why, often a single man is worth ten thousand men because he has enthusiasm. 'Phil' Sheridan was worth ten thousand men any day. Some names alone can inspire thousands. I didn't like everything about Garibaldi, but I did like his enthusiasm. Some years ago in this city there was a fire, and they thought that every one was saved till a little girl was seen at a window. A fireman started up the ladder, but when he had got one-half way up the heat was so intense that his courage failed him, and he wavered. Then some one in the crowd called out 'cheer him.' And they cheered him till they were hoarse. It gave him fresh courage, and the child was saved. That shows what enthusiasm can do. Even if you can't do the work yourself you can cheer the others."

Plymouth Church's Relics.

The trustees of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, have voted $500 for the building of a fire-proof room in which to store a large collection of memorabilia, in which are many documents of historic value. Frederick C. Manvel, who was appointed historian of Plymouth Church at its recent semi-centennial celebration, has the work in charge. Mr. Manvel began his collection many years ago, and, as he has been clerk of the church, he has had an excellent opportunity to make his record of Plymouth complete.

Mr. Manvel started a scrap-book in 1877 for the Plymouth Church Sunday-school, and in this he pasted a copy of everything published that was of interest to the school. He now has several volumes filled with tickets, programmes, and notices.

Thomas G. Shearman, who was for many years clerk of the church, contributed a lot of valuable souvenirs to Mr. Manvel's collection. John Rogers has placed in this collection the mask that he took of Mr. Beecher thirty years ago, and John T. Howard, who was practically the founder of Plymouth Church, contributed the manuscript of the first sermon preached there by Mr. Beecher and the original receipt for the first salary that was paid to him in October, 1847. When this collection has been classified and a room prepared for it the church will place it on exhibition.

PROF. ARTHUR R. SPADE.

The Journal of Education has the following from the pen of Professor Arthur Spade of Wilmington, Del.:—

"Poor ventilation is not responsible for all the dullness and headache among school children. In our school of two hundred pupils, at least one hundred and seventy were found to be tea and coffee drinkers, with the habit so strongly fastened upon some othemthat they could not well do without coffee for one day.

"If we only knew how much headache and even heart trouble the use of tea and coffee produces, a mighty crusade would be made against their use. They are positively injurious to children and young people, and many persons past middle life would be much better off without them. A experienced physician, who has spent many years in a great hospital, declares that over seventy per cent. of the cases classed under nervous diseases, that came under his personal observation, were caused by tea and coffee drinking."

In another letter the Professor says:—"After using Postum Food Coffee two weeks I found that I had gained four pounds in weight and that my appetite had increased."

When first tried it failed to suit the taste, but when the secret of preparation was learned, it came to the table a most delicious cup.

The proper taste and nourishment cannot be obtained unless it is allowed to continue boiling full 15 minutes after boiling starts not simply 15 minutes after it is put on the stove.

Many of the imitations of Postum have a favorable taste upon two or three minutes preparation. The analysis show these to be a low grade adultered coffee and without food value.

It requires time to extract food value and flavor from pure cereals.

Cures While You Sleep

Vapo-Cresolene Whooping Cough, Croup, Colds, Coughs, Asthma, Catarrh.

During recent years an important change has taken place in the treatment of certain diseases of the air passages. While formerly it was the custom to rely almost entirely on internal medications in this treatment, the importance of direct applications of medicines to the diseased parts is becoming more and more generally recognized.

Of this method of treatment, Cresolene is the most largely nsed, the most successful in its results, and the most convenient way of medicating the air passages.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

God Helped the Medical Missionary*

AT the close of 1886, the Society was in arrears and had to make up the deficiency by a certain date, as a gentleman had promised to give the last quarter of the sum needed when the other three-fourths was collected. The day came, and all the money was in but thirty four dollars. Upon seeing the gentleman referred to, he noticed that all was not yet paid in, referring to the thirty-four dollars. Upon my saying that I would be responsible for that amount, he kindly gave me his check.

I had been asked, some days before this, by Mr. Lanphier, to lead the Fulton Street Prayer Meeting on that day, but as the time drew near I felt that I must "beg off," and try to obtain that thirty-four dollars. When I saw him, however, I seemed unable to disappoint him, and so took the meeting. At the close, Mr. John B. Wood, of Philadelphia, whom I did not recognize as ever having seen before, came up and shook hands with me, and, without my saying anything of the circumstances, took out of his pocket a twenty-dollar bill and gave it to me. I was so touched by this further proof of Divine care that I told him of the opportune help he had thus afforded. He again surprised me by giving me another twenty-dollar bill, saying, "I may as well complete the job."

The strange thing was that he had never been in that meeting in his life before, and only came in at five minutes to one. I had only met him once before; he had never previously given me any money, and had just "run up" to New York on business that morning from Philadelphia.

A few months after commencing the work in 1881, certain expenses, including rent of mission, cost of drugs, etc., had to be met by a certain day, and two hundred and fifty dollars were needed for this purpose. But they were not forthcoming, even in part.

I was very much puzzled and perplexed at the time, and a few days later was conversing with our treasurer, who told me of an experience related to him by Mr. George Muller, when he, on one occasion, had to pay three hundred pounds. The day came, but no money, and a week had nearly passed, when a lady called with a check for the exact sum and remarked, "I made this check out some days ago, but neglected to bring it to you."

Strangely enough, that same evening our treasurer met a gentleman, who said to him, "I made you out a check for two hundred and fifty dollars some days since for the medical mission. I'll send it to-morrow."

In January, 1892, I contracted a severe attack of pneumonia, which laid me aside for five weeks. This was followed by a more severe attack of pleuro-pneumonia the latter part of April, which nearly ended my earthly career. During the month of May I was all but "gone" on two or three occasions, and was only able to crawl about the house during the early part of June.

My physician, Dr. J. R. Leaming "ordered me away" for two months, but how to go was the query, and this caused some anxious thought.

Only in the previous October had we lost our dear little boy, Percy, aged six years, from diphtheria. Truly, it was a dark and trying winter.

One day, in the middle of June, a letter was received from a lady, an entire stranger, asking if I would be "offended" if she sent a little gift for the worker for, as she went on to say, she had noticed that the workers overlooked themselves in caring for the work, and that others also forget them.

We wondered who could have told her of our circumstances, and wrote expressing surprise, and making enquiry. The reply came stating that no one had written or spoken to her about our needs, but as she was making up packages of papers to send to the solitary light-house keepers, she noticed a copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for December 30th, 1891, containing an account of my work and mission. The reply contained a check for fifty dollars. Two sisters were also led to send us fifty dollars.

THE old bell-founder! years ago,
He lived within our town;
He was a man of no great means,
A man of no renown;
Oft have I lingered near his shop,
To hear the sweet tones swell,
As he would test with measured stroke,
A newly moulded bell.

Long years ago, my old friend died;
A man of no renown;
His lands were sold to other men,
His little shop—pulled down;
But, ere he passed away from earth,
Or felt Death's dreaded power,
One of his bells was hung within A Sanctuary's tower.

Now, every Sabbath day, its tones
Ring out so clear and sweet and clear,
Calling the many worshippers
In God's house to appear.
Oft do I think of that old man;
Of work he did so well;
Though dead, I feel he liveth still,
In that sweet-sounding bell.

There is a life we all may live;
A work we all may do;
That will some joy and comfort give,
When life's short day is through;
The good deeds done, the kind words said,
The earthly life lived well;
May speak to others when we're dead,
Like that sweet sounding bell.

*From Ballads and Poems. This volume of melodious verse comes from the pen of John H. Yates, a poet who has endeared himself to hundreds of aged people as well as to those who love and cherish the aged, by his "Ballads for the Old Folks." Published by Charles Wells Moulton, Buffalo, N. Y.

Scrofula is Snake Like in its subtlety. It lies hidden for years in the ambush of the blood, and when it strikes it voids its venom alike on strength and beauty, disfiguring the one and undermining the other.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

is a specific for scrofula in its worst and most malignant forms. Scrofula is a blood disease. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a blood purifying medicine.

"I was cured of a long standing case of scrofula by Dr. J. C. Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The disease first manifested itself when I was a child, by breaking out in red blotches all over my body. I was not free from the trouble until I took several bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. That effected a permanent cure."— MRS. E. H. SNYDER, Leighton, Pa.

"A fair face cannot atone for an untidy house." Use SAPOLIO

NO MURMURING.

Lit: Ways of Bettering the World. Phil. 2:12-16; Matt. 5:13-16.

What a change it would make in this life of ours if the Apostle's injunction were rigidly obeyed. even by Christians! In our own lives and in those of the people with whom we come in contact how much friction would be lessened if everything we "done without murmuring or disputing!" This does not mean that we should yield to wrong. That would be an ample way of avoiding disputes. There are times when conscience dictates a course of action which must inevitably provoke a conflict. To take another course would be in order to maintain peace. would be a dereliction of duty that could not be excused. But even in such cases. "murmurings and disputings" may be avoided. There may be a necessity to explain our actions; it may be a wise and courteous thing to attempt to convince an opponent by argument. but the fretfulness. and the anger. and the recrimination which so often embitter our relations should be avoided. The hero of Carlyle's famous story is a model whose example has helped many a man in time of trouble. Unjustly suspected. slighted by the man he served faithfully. finally cast into prison, for no fault of his own. he submitted without a murmur. Ultimately, his innocence being proved, his master invested him with honors. gave him office and promotion. Again he silently obeyed, performing his duties to perfection. but giving no sign of elation or gratification. Simply did his duty quietly and conscientiously under good as under evil fortune. No wonder that the arbitrary, capricious, close-minded master was puzzled by his conduct, and declared: "He had never seen such a man; whom no severity would break to complain. and no kindness soften into smiles or thanks." Yet he was a man to rely on in emergency, a man who could be trusted to do his duty without fear and without thought of reward. Such are the men whom the apostle commends—men who save themselves fret and worry, and are helpers in the circle of their reach.

A Unique Association of Chilian Women.

We have recently heard of a very unique society which exists in the town of Antofagasta, Chili. The women of that place have banded together and formed this society, the object of which is "to raise woman to the position she deserves and which God gave her at the creation." Among the rules of the society we find that all conversations or discussions. on politics, religion or lineage. are strictly forbidden in the society's halls; also that the members when attending the meetings of the society, must be scrupulously clean and wear dresses of "elegant simplicity." avoiding any extravagant display, and quite in keeping with the age and rank of the wearer; but this rule is not supposed to throw any obstacle in the way of having the modest gowns fit to perfection the figures of its members—the younger ones in particular. The members of this association. hold, as a sterling motto. the tie of equality, the practice of which will further in every way.

Fig.—A Wonderful Shrub.—Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

The evidence shows that Alkavis, the new botanic product of the Kava-Kava Shrub, is indeed a true specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disorders of the Kidneys and Urinary organs. A remarkable case is that of Rev. A. Darling, of North Constantia. N. Y., as told in the New York World of recent date. He was cured by Alkavis, after, as he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine. and was preparing to die. Similar testimony of extraordinary cures of Kidney and bladder diseases of long standing comes from many other sufferers. and 1200 hospital cures have been recorded in 30 days. Up to the time the Church Kidney Cure Co., No. 418 Fifth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of Alkavis, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disease, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism. Dropsy. Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affection due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN

Discovered by Accident.—In Compounding, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes and the hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT CAN NOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward. MODENE SUPERCEDES ELECTROLYSIS.

—Recommended by all who have tested its merits—Used by people of refinement.—

Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a priceless boon in Modene which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use Modene to destroy its growth. GOUT AND RHEUMATISM.

A prominent physician writes:

Dear Sirs:—Replying to yours on the use of Tartarlithine as a remedy in the treatment of gout, I will say that the verdict is unanimous in its favor, I have used it in the treatment of about a dozen cases with results that are little less than wonderful. The characteristic feature of its action is the rapidity and promptness with which patients improve under its use. An improvement is noticeable within 24 hours. One of the most striking cases was that of a physician suffering from gout along with inability to digest starchy foods, muscular rheumatism and frequent bilious headaches. I prescribed Tartarlithine, and in one week there was absolute disappearance of all of the uric acid manifestations. The nervous irritability disappeared, and he stated that he had done the best week's work which he had accomplished for years.

DANIEL'S MISSING WEEK.

The Momentous Events of the Seventieth Week Outlined in the Prophecy of Daniel.

BY REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.*

PREVIOUS to the descent of Christ on earth and his millennial reign there will be a short interval of seven years, full of interest because of the events that therein go forward upon the earth and in the heavens.

In Daniel 9:24-27 we have the message from God which the angel Gabriel carried to Daniel. We, too, are interested in that message. "Seventy weeks are decreed upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish transgressions, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the Most Holy." We are familiar with the prophetic "week" as a period of seven years; therefore 490 years was the period of the seventy weeks assigned for the accomplishment of the prophecy. But there is a remarkable set of figures connected with the prophecy. In verse 25, two periods of seven "weeks" and sixty-two "weeks" are placed between the command to rebuild Jerusalem and the coming of Messiah. Exactly forty-nine years (seven "weeks"), elapsed between the command to rebuild and completion of the work by Nehemiah; and from that completion of the work to the death of Christ was 434 years (sixty-two "weeks"), making altogether 483 years of the 490 years or seventy weeks of verse 24. This leaves one remaining week of seven years not yet fulfilled, but to be fulfilled in the future.

This missing week comes at the end of this age, when God will, in his renewed dealings with his earthly people, resume the "times and seasons" which were broken in upon when men rejected Christ at the end of the sixty-nine weeks.

Reverting to Daniel 9, let us look at verse 26: "After the threescore and two weeks shall the Anointed One be cut off." Then we read: "And the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and his end shall be with a flood, and even unto the end shall be war; desolations are determined. And he shall make a firm covenant with many for one week"—the missing seven years.

At the close of the present age, when Jesus takes his church to be with himself, then shall times and seasons be resumed, Daniel's seventieth week (delayed in the eternal counsels) shall run its course upon the earth, God shall accomplish his ancient purposes, and the prophecies spoken to his people in other dispensations shall be fulfilled to the letter. Signs of the times show that the present age is nearing completion by the coming of the Master.

In the Book of Revelation, from chapter 4 to the end of 19 a remarkable series of events transpire on the earth. The church of Jesus Christ is then in heaven. She is seen ever and anon in some place of heavenly glory; while upon the earth seals are being opened, trumpets are sounding, and all the strange and wonderful prophecies which have been uttered concerning the earth are shown to be then fulfilled to the letter.

Here is the end of the interval. "And I saw the heaven opened: and behold, a white horse, and he that sat thereon, called Faithful and True . . . And the armies which are in heaven followed him upon white horses, clothed in fine linen, white and pure. And out of his mouth proceedeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; and he treadeth the winepress of the fierceness of the wrath of Almighty God" (19:11).

He came to Bethlehem's manger with a view to proclaim "the acceptable year of the Lord"; he will come with the armies of heaven to proclaim "the day of vengeance of our God." He came long years ago, a lonely man, our brother was, who should not cry nor lift up his voice in the streets: he will come again, but it will be in a different guise and with another purpose. It is only another dispensation in the great plan of our King and Master which will open when he comes to the earth with his gathered people.

Hundreds of books pass through our hands each day—expensive Encyclopaedias and Dictionaries. In such a multitude of volumes some imperfections are inevitable—a paste-spot here, a scratch there, perhaps a nail-hole due to careless packing; some sets slightly defaced by use as samples. No harm inside, not much outside; but they won't do for perfect. Twice a year we have a clearing sale of damaged stock at "damaged" prices. This time it is the NEW REVISED ENCYCLOPAEDIC DICTIONARY AND ATLAS—latest edition—in seven fine quarto volumes, including our New Atlas of the World, bound separately. Weak Lungs

Recent Progress of Medical Science

Extract from Dr. Robert Hunter's lectures on the lungs have been published from time to time in this paper for the purpose of informing the people of the real nature of lung diseases and the discovery of a successful treatment of the lungs by Antiseptic Medicated Air Inhalations. No truth of medical science has been more conclusively proven and established than that Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrh of the Lungs have been and are being radically cured by this treatment, while even Consumption, the most dreaded of all lung complaints, is arrested and entirely eradicated by Dr. Hunter's most recently discovered germicides, which kill and expel from the lungs the bacilli of tuberculosis. From all parts of the Union come the grateful acknowledgments of patients whose lives have been saved by Dr. Hunter.

Mr. Mendenhall, of Harper & Brothers, New York City, says: "I took the grippe. It was neglected and resulted in pneumonia, which left my lungs in a wretched condition. I was treated by five physicians without any benefit. I was away from business a year and four months coughed and expectorated quantities of matter. I could not walk a block without complete exhaustion when Dr. Hunter took charge of me. I am as stout and well as ever to-day and ascribe it all to Dr. Hunter's skill and the healing life-saving power of his antiseptic inhalations."

Any subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who is interested can obtain this book free by addressing Dr. Hunter at 117 West 45th St., New York.

Philanthropic Princess.

One of the Prince of Wales' Daughters who Delights in Good Works.

AT a recent exhibition of book-covers in London, prizes were awarded to two samples which were signed by a Matthews. Weeks afterward it transpired that "Miss Matthews" and Princess Victoria, only unmarried daughter of the Prince and Princess of Wales, was one and the same person. The judges and Her Royal Highness' family were as ignorant of this fact as were the public. This young woman has shown great earnestness in seeking to fill some mission of usefulness, which is not out of keeping with her position.

She is the cleverest and most attractive of Albert Edward's daughters, and her demand has been sought in marriage by a number of German and Swedish princes. "all for love," it is said, "of her own self," but it is also whispered that some of them are to her liking, and that the princess, to the great dismay of her parents, has evinced an ardent desire to be a genuine wage-earner. Only two years ago the pressure of family conclaves, which at last the command of her royal mother mama made her relinquish her purpose of entering a London hospital as a professional nurse, a position for which she had fitted himself. Now, the repressed energy lady's energy is turning into decorative channels, and she is making a specialty of book-binding and the designing of book covers, in which she is said to be doing some very excellent work, and is enriching the library at Sandringham Palace. This girl's desire to minister to suffering is very creditable to her mind she would have lost nothing in dignity by carrying it out.

Charles Wesley's Conversion.

CHARLES WESLEY wrote his hymn, beginning:

O for a thousand tongues to sing
My great Redeemer's praise
The glories of my God and King,
The triumphs of his grace to celebrate the anniversary of his conversion, which occurred on a bright May morning, 1738, after a night of troubled feelings to and fro." He prayed to Jesus: "Thou has said, 'My Father and I will come unto you and make our abode with you.' Thou art God who canst not lie. I wholly rely upon thy promise. Accomplish it in thy time and manner." Then Mrs. Turner, a poor woman with a broken heart, hearing his groans, was constrained to open the door and speak comforting words. She said: "In the name of Jesus of Nazareth, arise and believe, and thou shalt be healed of all thine infirmities." He exclaimed, "O that Christ would but thus speak to me!" After a moment of struggle he exclaimed, joyfully, "I believe! I believe!"

An Asthma Cure at Last.

It gives us great pleasure to announce the discovery a positive cure for Asthma, in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanic product found on the Congo River, West Africa. The cures wrought by the worst cases are really marvelous. Sufferers of twenty to fifty years' standing have been restored to health by the Kola Plant. Among others, many ministers of the gospel testify to wonderful powers. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Lynsburg, West Va., was perhaps the worst case, and was cured by the Kola Plant after fifty years' suffering. Mr. Alfred C. Lewis, Washington, D. C., editor of the Farmer's Magazine, gives similar testimony, as do many others. To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., 164 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who suffers from any form of Asthma. They only ask in return when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. You should surely try it, as it costs you nothing.

A Word to the Wise!

It was ever been the desire of the thoughtful and provident, the educated and cultured to provide for themselves a competence in some form or another during the years of their business or professional activity, which will admit of their retirement after a prolonged season of work with all material necessities amply provided for, to enjoy, each in his own way, the rest and recreation so well earned and richly deserved

To husband out life's taper at the close,
And keep the flame from wasting by repose

Notwithstanding this almost universal desire, how comparatively small a number ever attain it!

It may, however, be attained by a little forethought and planning, and without any very great sacrifice, by securing in income-producing home in

Maywood Colony California

Authority is agreed that in no other land under the sun are there so many natural conditions to help man to plenty and comfort. As those of the Atlantic Coast read of and investigate California, they learn this fact, and as a result thousands are moving there yearly. At Maywood Colony, alone, over 800 Eastern families have secured land. The man who will not make a good living from a 10-acre lot in this colony would go hungry at a banquet. As early as 1850 Horace Greeley visited California, and then said, "Fruit-growing is destined to be the ultimate glory of California." How well has his prophecy been fulfilled, for today her orchards yield more gold than do her mines. Horace Greeley further said:—

> We wish it were possible to imbue every man, but especially every young man with the desire of having a HOME of his own—a home to be adhered to through life. Next to the home itself an earnest, overruling DESIRE for one would be a great blessing. A man who owns the root which shelters him, and the soil from which he draws subsistence—and few acres are requisite for THAT,—need not envy any nabob's great fortune."

U. S. Senator STEWART, of Nevada, who visited California as a member of a senatorial committee, in an interview with a reporter of the New York Herald, said: "The small farmer of California is the king of the situation. The man who cultivates 10 acres well is a rich man. He can easily net $200 per acre per annum. Many do better than that. Twenty acres of fruit land is a fortune—after five years from planting it will bring $5,000."

Hon. CHAUNCEY M. DEPEW, than whom there is no more keen and practical observer, said of his recent visit to California:—

"We found ourselves in a country of magnificent futures, of boundless resources, of unexampled prospects. Though proud of a vocabulary that never before staggered when confronted by the necessities of manifold occasions, I found the English language too poor to portray the glories of California. Here is a country destined to drive Italy and the world out of oranges, lemons, olives, and raisins. Here is a land that will rejuvenate the worn-out pilgrim from the far East, and more.

"We in the East do not know California, or appreciate the wonderful future that is before it. There is a State with a population of a million and a half that is as great in area as France, with its 35,000,000 people. The people are the most prosperous and hospitable in the world. I am not speaking of the cities, but all through California you see no poverty. Ten acres will support a family, I was told. Fruit farming is the way the land is utilized to achieve such results."

WILLIAM E. SMYTHE, writing of the Sacramento Valley in The Century, says:—

"It is far greater in area," than any other valley of the State. "Its water supplies are more abundant and more reliable; its surrounding advantages, especially in the way of mines and timber are much superior. Finally, it possesses the inestimable blessing of a mighty river, navigable for a distance of two hundred miles, and capable of being much improved. This is a factor of the highest import. It is in this imperial valley, and in the foothills and mountains flanking it, and in splendid pictures on each side, that a large proportion of the future millions will find homes and prosperity."

Gen. N. P. CHIPMAN, in his citrus fair address, says: —

"This is indeed a noble heritage, this wonderful Sacramento Valley. Such soil, such water, such temperature, such matchless climate, cannot be found combined elsewhere in California, on the American continent."

Lines from Longfellow's "Evangeline" aptly portray conditions at Maywood:

Here in primeval beauty, the wonderful valley of the Sacramento
Rests like a dream of peace, when the spirit of God is upon the waters.
Here the earth is fruitful, and the air is pure and serene and transparent,
Here are fields of wheat, that wave like the prairies of autumn,
Here are vineyards and orchards, that seem in extent like the forest,
Here are green meadows, where herds of kine are feeding at noontide,
Here are planted and reaped the fields of rice and sugar and cotton,
Here the rivers are filled with fish, and the land with game in abundance,
Here the valleys are rich with mines of gold and quicksilver,
Here the mountains are rich with the precious woods of commerce,
Here the climate is that of the tropics, tempered by breezes from ocean,
Here the forms of men are fashioned like the gods, and the women
Here are maidens with eyes like the stars, and with golden tresses,
Here are youths and fair children, and here do the graceful people
Dance in the mazes of love to the movement of sweet symphonies.

MAYWOOD ADDITION TO THE TOWN OF CORNING

Our Guarantee.

This notice is an agreement to the effect that we will refund all money paid on land in Colonies No. 11 and 12, if found to be swampy, of sand, affected by alkali, or such as require clearing preparatory to planting.

FOSTER & WOODSON.

IN this paper of January 19, 1898 we presented a plat showing our central colony in its entirety. Inasmuch as practical[ly] of the lots then offered have since been sold, we now give but a section of the colony,—a section showing the relative [lo]tion of the village of Corning, Maywood Addition to Corning, and about 2,700 acres immediately about town, also the [lo]of the Southern Pacific Railway and the school quare. Colony No. 10, which was offered to the readers of THE CHRIS[TIAN] HERALD on January 19, 1898, was made up of blocks 82 to 92 inclusive, aggregating 880 acres. As shown by the coloring o[n] plat above, it has all been sold. Already more than half of it has been set to olive groves, and a number of homes have [been] built thereon. This tract we offered in 10-acre lots at $400.00 each. Terms were $40.00 down, then $10.00 per month f[or] months; no interest, no taxes. For spot cash we sold these lots for $360.00, which was a discount of 10 per cent.

We now offer Colony No. 11, made up of blocks 93, 94, 95, 96, and 97, amounting to 28 ten-acre lots, or 280 acres. The [se] lots are offered at the same price and on the same terms as were those in Colony No. 10. All of the lots in Colony No. [11] level, clear, fertile, and splendid olive land. READ OUR GUARANTEE. The railroad company proposes to build a st[ation] on lot 4 of block 93, which will be quite convenient to all land in this subdivision. To Corning the distance from Colon[y] 11 is 1½ miles.

At the same time we present Colony No 12,—320 acres, comprising blocks 98, 99, 100 and 101, as per plat above. The ge[n]eral conditions of this land are covered in our guarantee. We cannot say more. The eastern edge of this tract is but 8, of a [mile] west from town, while the extreme western lots, which border on the County road connecting Corning with Red Bluff, ar[e] a mile further from the village. This land, located much nearer the town than Colony 11, cost us more money, and we are [not] therefore, able to offer it at less than $600.00 per lot on our installment plan, the terms of which are $60.00 down, then $[10] monthly for 36 months without interest or taxes.

A special cash price of $500.00 per lot is made on this land till July 1, 1898.

All of 32 lots will be sold at the same price. First buyers will get inside location.

Since most of our buyers are residents of the Atlantic coast, theregion of uneven land, it seems hard for them to r[ealize] that at Maywood Colony the land, for miles, is level and unbroken. While the section in which this colony is located is k[nown] as the Sacramento Valley, it would, by Eastern folks, be called a prairie. Those who have seen the level or gently undul[ating] prairies of Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska, can best realize the general nature and appearance of the land at May[wood]. The outlook, however, is by no means monotonous. The valley at this point is but 16 miles wide, and on either side, in [full] view are mountains standing from 8,000 to 10,000 feet high, which form a pleasing background and tend to relieve what [would] otherwise be a dull and monotonous view. Let us say to you that on account of the uniform nature of the land you can l[ook] intelligently and safely from the plat above as you could were you on the ground. The plat indicates correctly the re[lative] location of the various lots. It also shows the price of lots. Our terms are plainly stated. Our guarantee assures you [of] quality of the soil. The only questions for you to decide upon are,—Do I want a foothold in California for immediate [and] futurity" and Can I command the means with which to meet the required payments?

If funds are at hand and you decide to secure a place upon which you can build a home,—a home in the full sense [of] word,—send us by personal check, bank draft, express or post-office order, the required first payment, designating the l[ot] desired. If upon receipt of your remittance, the lot is unsold, our Contract for Deed, in duplicate, will be sent to you. Yo[u] sign both copies, retaining one and returning the other. Should the lot wanted be sold, your money will be returned w[ith] a suggestion to consider other lots that, at the time, are unsold. Those desiring to pay full cash for land, and preferri[ng] to deal through a bank, are invited to send their payment direct to the BANK of TEHAMA COUNTY, RED BLUFF, C[ALI]FORNIA, stating just what is wanted. No charge is made for this service by the bank.

If you want a special report upon any particular lot in our several colonies, write to Rev. J. E. Ray, Corning, Calif[ornia]. He has volunteered his service in this connection for the past two years, and has selected lots for many who could not [spare] the time or money to visit the settlement.

The planting season for 1898 is now closed. No trees can be set till January, 1899. Secure your land now, and in D[e]cember next arrange for its planting. The Maywood Colonies Fruit Association, incorporated under the laws of California [has] for its object the planting, pruning, cultivation, and care of orchards for absent owners, also the harvesting of crops [at] best possible advantage. Through this channel you can develop an orchard at less cost than you can put in your [own] This phase of our proposition makes it possible and practicable for professional men and women to invest in it, for [the] minimum cost they get the benefit of the most most experienced service.

Much light will be thrown upon this matter if you will refer to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of December 22d, 1897, [and] January 19th, 1898, in which issues are to be found full-page presentations.

We publish for free distribution a book on olive-culture in California. If you would care to look into the details of [this] industry that affords a permanent and paying income on an investment, send us your name and address.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Mrs. M. L., West Brookfield, Vt. Why was the battleship Maine sent from Key West to Havana?

The Maine was sent there on a friendly visit, as is customary with nations that are at peace with each other.

Curious, New Haven, Conn. What is the origin of the numerals on the dials of clocks and watches, such as IIII instead of IV?

The numerals are the ordinary Roman figures. The story of the fourth is thus related: When Henry VIII. carried to King Charles V., of France, the first accurate clock, the king said to him that the IV. was wrong, and should be changed to IIII. Vick said, "You are wrong, your majesty," whereat the king thundered out: "I am never wrong. Take it away and correct the mistake." From that day to this the four I's have stood as the mark for the fourth hour.

D. D. D., Geneva, Fla. Is the sermon reported in Matt. 5:1-12 the same as that in Luke 6:17-27?

There has long been a dispute as to this question. You will notice that Matthew describes Christ as going up into a mountain to preach it, while Luke says explicitly that he came down into a plain to preach it. The inference many draw from this is that there were two different sermons preached at different times, but being at the beginning of Christ's ministry when an exposition of general principles was needed, they were much alike. On the other hand it is contended by those who hold that the two evangelists report the same sermon, that the plain may have been a level place on the mountain side, which would harmonize the two accounts. The fact that Matthew's account is so much longer than that of Luke may be explained by the probability that Matthew heard the sermon, while Luke did not, but obtained his report from someone who did.

I. H. N., Dorchester, Ill. Do you believe that a person who is really converted ought to go to the altar to get sanctification or the second blessing?

It depends in a great measure on the temperament of the person. You may take it as a fact that conversion is, or should be, the beginning of a new life and that there should be progress in the spiritual life. With some persons a solemn, secret, wrestling, earnest prayer in one's self at the altar may lead to such progress. New power for holiness and service may be gained in this way. With other persons of a different temperament, private prayer and the daily struggle against evil, the effort to get more of Christ's spirit will be a more congenial way of making progress, and it is quite as [illegible]

I. Colored Christian, Wilmington, N. C. Would you please tell me what is meant by the day of Pentecost? Is it a day set apart by the Church for a special purpose? Is it a day when the Holy Ghost is given to the Church? Is it a day when the Church is to receive power from on high? Is it a day when the Church is to be baptized with the Holy Ghost? Is it a day when the Church is to be endued with power from on high? Is it a day when the Church is to be baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire? Is it a day when the Church is to be endued with power from on high and baptized with the Holy Ghost and with fire?

B. W. H., St. Louis, Mo. Please tell me where to find the hymn containing the words:

Through all the varied, changing scenes
Of life's immortal ill or good,
Thy hand, O God, conducts unseen
The beautiful vicissitude.

The nearest approach to it that we know is the Tate & Brady paraphrase of the 34th Psalm, beginning: "Through all the changing scenes of life." This will be found in The Hymnal of the Protestant Episcopal Church, published by Dutton & Co., New York.

G. E. F., Beldens, Vt., writes this note concerning an answered prayer:

In the latter part of June, or early in July, 1896, "Believer in Prayer, Vt.," sent to the Bowery Mission Converts' Meeting a request for prayers, that she might be able to help the children living in a little hamlet near her to a knowledge of their Saviour. The sender feels that it must have been received and granted, for the following reasons: In August, 1896, one of the women living in that little village—the mother of several children, and a profane, rough woman—became interested at a camp-meeting held nearby, and was converted. Several prayer-meetings were held at her house by the pastor of the nearest Methodist Church. A returned missionary from India came to the next town to deliver a lecture. While there he heard of the condition of the people of the hamlet, and felt impelled to help them. He went there, held meetings for two weeks, and was greatly blessed in his labors. A number of people were converted, a Sunday-school organized; and in 1897 a mission was formed, through the earnest efforts of which much good has been and is now being done. The Bowery Mission has been the means of bringing blessing to others. God's richest blessings must surely rest on those who are carrying on its work.

C. R. Y., Alexandria, Va. Please suggest a good method of conducting church collections, so that the burden of expense may be spread from a few giving members to the entire church?

The best method we know of is the envelope system—voluntary pledges being secured in advance, from all in the congregation who are willing to contribute. This subject is now being considered by many readers, two of whose experiences appear in these columns.

E. H. [illegible], Indiana. Where is "pouring oil on the troubled waters" mentioned in the Bible? At what time and by whom was it first done?

For oil to calm the troubled sea is a very ancient one and has been known probably to almost every nation. Even now, in these days of enormous steamships and improved navigation, oil barrels are employed occasionally, though rarely, on smaller craft.

Visitor, Narragansett, Pa., has this to say on the subject of free or rented pews, which was recently discussed in THE MAIL-BAG:

I have been a member of a church since February 1845, and an elder since December, 1855; have had something to do, financially, with all church work in these years. In one of the churches in which I took a very active part (not a church where there was a great degree of wealth), the plan was to have collections taken up every Sabbath. The pews were free but families kept their own seats, and strangers, of course, had to take unoccupied pews. On Monday mornings, the treasurer paid the pastor his salary and at each monthly meeting of the trustees, accounts were made up. The church was managed upon prompt business principles, and it was a decided success. People can be made to feel that there is just as great a moral responsibility to pay debts due to the church promptly as to pay their market bill, or the bill for the coal they use at their homes. Besides, the church of the living God, of all places, should be where all who come may feel at home, where they are all on the same level. I therefore vote for free pews.

A reader at Mariner's Harbor writes:

My experiences with rented pews are more than I can bear in silence. With a very small income, I gave for seventeen years, twenty-five cents a Sunday. It was my tenth. Our old rector was removed, and a new one took charge. The pews were now rented. I could not afford even a sitting. I asked a vestryman as to which were rented. "All," said he, "save one or two in the back." My heart was bursting. I could no longer attend church regularly, owing to circumstances, that my old rector said were "God's appointments" and "my disappointments." Is it fair? Is it right? As child and woman, I went there for thirty years. I acted as Sunday-School teacher and organist free, and was respected and loved, even if poor. Must I now go as a beggar and sit in the stranger's seat? Thank God, I have a friend who has offered me a seat in her pew, and the Senior Warden has offered me a seat in his, also, but my heart is sore. I am anxious to hear what others have to say. All are not so fortunate as I to have a friend.

Many answers have been received to the Scripture problem submitted by Friend, Conquest, N. Y., viz.: 1. There were two that died who never were born; 2. two were born who never died; 3. two who spake and never lied. Miss H. E. Miller, Randolph, Vt., answers: 1. Adam and Eve; 2. Christ and Enoch; 3. Zacharias and Elizabeth. A. F., Lake Geneva, Wis., says: 1. Adam and Eve; 2. Enoch and Elijah; 3. Christ and Balaam's ass; and the same answer is given by Mrs. S. A. C., Sleith, Ind., Isabella S., Princeton, N. J., and others. H. A. C., Mentor, O., gives George Washington as one of the names in No. 3; and George H. B., Rochester, N. Y., and W. D., Delafield, Wis., gives as No. 3, the Father and the Son. The problem was not submitted for competition, but merely as a sample of many that are received weekly for THE MAIL-BAG.

Reader, Danville, Pa. 1. What is the most popular wedding march? 2. Is the wedding march usually played during the ceremony?

1. The two most frequently played are the Wedding March from Lohengrin, and Mendelssohn's Wedding March. 2. The march usually ceases or glides into something else as the ceremony commences.

"One in Doubt," New York City. Some time ago I began a series of small thefts on my employers which continued for several weeks. I have now been converted and am sincerely repentant. Ought I to make restitution? How can I do so when I do not know how much I stole?

As several letters of a similar purport have come to THE MAIL-BAG, from other writers, some presenting difficulties of other kinds in the way of making restitution, we laid your case before Mr. D. L. Moody, who has had to deal with many similar cases. In reply, Mr. Moody gives the following opinion, in which we sincerely concur. "My advice to a man who has stolen is to make restitution. You cannot deceive the Almighty by a mock repentance, and restitution is the 'hall mark' of genuine contrition. If you have not the means to make restitution, or do not know exactly how much you have stolen, make an honest effort to ascertain the maximum amount taken and work till you have paid up the full sum that doesn't belong to you. A free conscience will never live with stolen money. It is too valuable a treasure to be measured by any standard of money.

Reader, Little Prairie, N. Y.; T. S. L., Marshall, Mo., and others. 1. In case of war between the United States and Spain, how will it be in regard to sending relief to the suffering reconcentrados? Will funds be sent safely to them? And to whom can they be sent that will tribute them? 2. Are we to understand that all Americans are leaving Havana?

1. Nothing can be done until the Cuban ports are reopened, unless the relief be sent in the vessels of another nation, and under that nation's flag, and be distributed by that nation's consuls. 2. Yes, opportunity has been afforded to all Americans to leave, although it is believed that a number have chosen to remain at Cienfuegos and a few other places.

1. Dismas and Gestas. The names are preserved by tradition only. 2. Col. H. D. Davies, M. P. 3. No, they live in their own residences. 4. Alfred Austin.

Many readers. Owing to the troubles between Spain and the United States and the closing of the Cuban ports, the Cuban Relief work has been temporarily suspended. It is hoped, however, that it may soon be resumed under our government's auspices and through the medium of the Cuban Central Relief Committee as heretofore.

Reader, Montpelier, Vt. 1. What is the address of the Grace Institute in New York? 2. What is the character of the work?

1. It is situated at No. 149-155 West Sixtieth street. 2. It gives free tuition to women in cooking, laundering, sewing, and other housewifely duties, and teaches its pupils the principles of household economy and cleanliness. It is endowed by ex-Mayor W. R. Grace and family.

A. A., Niagara Falls, N. Y. Why is it necessary to confess Christ before men in order to be saved?

The first and chief reason is that Christ made it a condition. It is reasonable, because a man ought to place himself squarely on record as to his position. It is a very small thing to ask for one who has done so much for him. He ought to do it also as a testimony, so that others may know where he gets the power to lead a good life. As in time of war it is essential that we know where a man stands, whether with us or with the enemy, so in the conflict between good and evil that is raging everywhere continually, a Christian ought to declare himself. If he is ashamed to do so, he cannot expect that Christ will acknowledge him when he comes in glory (see Luke 12:8-9).

A Visit to Korea

Peculiar Customs in Dress and Domestic Arrangements—A Sail Through the Korean Archipelago.

By MRS. S. L. BALDWIN.

FTER bidding a final farewell to our beloved Foo Chow friends, we took steamer to Shanghai. A rough passage of two days on the China

CHARCOAL VENDERS OF SEOUL.

S brought us to that port, where we hoped to find a steamer for Korea via Chefoo, but these steamers are irregular at this season, so we were compelled to go to Nagasaki, Japan, and there take the little steamer Genkai Maru, of the Imperial Japanese Company, which took us to Fu-San. We had traveled in most of the countries of the world, but Korea was quite new to us, and we entered it with keen interest, eager to see what this first Korean port of Fu San would be like. But a short time after it was a wretched little fishing village, but the opening up of Korea to the world has made a change in Peaselsewhere. The native houses are little more than huts built much like the country Japanese houses, and like many of them, having thatched straw roofs, and also like them, almost wholly devoid of furniture, as they, too, sit and sleep on the matted floor. The chief industry is cod-fishing, and tiny fish like sardines lay scattered and trampled in the streets, the odors of which were anything but pleasant.

Chinese and Japanese traders are found here, and the latter have very respectable foreign-built offices for their steamer trade. The mountains back of the town and around the harbor are rugged and bare, and some of them topped with snow. We found here two missions, the Presbyterian from Australia, and the Northern Presbyterian from the United States. The last is represented by Mr. and Mrs. Moss, Dr. and Mrs. Irwin and Miss Chase. They were delighted to see some one from the home land, and gave us a royal welcome. Nor would they let us go until it was necessary to take our steamer. Dr. Irwin showed us his hospital, a small native building, without wards, and wholly unfit for the purpose. Having no wards, after performing surgical operations, he has to send the patients out. After amputating a boy's arm to save his life, having to go to a distant country station, he took the boy with him the whole 200 miles that he might dress the wound, knowing that if he left him in town the Koreans would remove the bandages to satisfy their curiosity. In spite of such disabilities, so trying to a physician upon whose carefulness depends the life of a patient, Dr. Irwin is doing fine work, but at great risk to himself and patients, and the nervous strain in consequence is very great. We had the privilege of visiting a boys' school, established and supported by five wealthy Koreans. The five buildings and the teachers are Japanese. There are eighty pupils. The common English branches and the Japanese and English languages, with the Buddhist faith, are taught. The desire for English is well-nigh universal in these countries, and one could almost believe that it may yet be the language of the East. Chinese is the book language of both Japan and Korea, and it is seen everywhere on the sign-boards, over and by the side of the shop doors, on placards in the streets. No one is regarded as at all educated without a knowledge of it.

One of the popular amusements in Korea is the see-saw, and women are as fond of it as the children. They stand on the ends of the board, and fly up and down in the most marvelous manner. One fairly holds the breath in fear that they do not land on the board, but sure of that it is very amusing to watch them.

KOREAN WOMEN AT HOME.

Some of their customs are entirely peculiar to them, though many are a mixture of Chinese and Japanese. If a member of a family is absent and a great calamity threatens or occurs, a perfectly blank piece of paper is sent, which is supposed to indicate "inexpressible grief; come!" The eyes of a bride are closed, sometimes glued together, so that she may not see her husband for two or three days after marriage. Leprosy is very prevalent in this part of Korea, and spreads rapidly, as the lepers are not isolated as in China. We were surprised to find that quantities of rice are grown here in these northern regions, and shipped to Japan. It is inferior to the Japan rice, but is cheaper. The majority of the people, men and women, dress in white, the men in long, narrow sack garments of white muslin, sometimes very fine, and in winter wadded. They are tied at the right shoulder with strings of the same material, and they reach to the feet over wadded muslin trousers tied close about the ankles, white shoes, somewhat of Chinese shape, and a tall, stiff white hat with a four inch brim, complete the usual man's costume. Officers dress in silk and elegant material.

The women wear a full white skirt. The skirt has a broad band coming high up around the waist, and is there barely met by a short close-fitting jacket. The explanation given for all adults as a rule dressing in white, is that white is mourning here, as in China, and all must put it on when officials die, and they must do the same for their own relatives, and between the two, they are in mourning almost constantly, so they find it more convenient and economical to wear it all the time. The result is that the working people of necessity look untidy, while the women are kept busy washing and ironing and making the clothes over, for much of the clothing has to be entirely ripped apart when washed, because of their peculiar method of ironing, which is to simply fold the cloth and beat it lightly with sticks until it is perfectly smooth and polished. I would not have believed it possible to produce such smoothness and polish under such a process.

The women are the burden-bearers in the home, and the most industrious part of the community. One is apt to get the impression that they are inferior to the men and this is due to the fact that only old women's faces are seen in the streets. In all heathen lands where women bear the heaviest burdens, sorrows and extreme physical suffering, they rapidly grow homely with age.

When a young woman goes into the streets during the day, she throws over the head a garment, often of green silk, made exactly like the man's outer garment, long, sack-shaped. This she holds closely about her face, only leaving space to see her way. She looks strange enough, speeding along, looking neither to the right or left, the empty sleeves of the garment swinging at her sides.

Children, both boys and girls, wear gay garments of every bright color, which greatly brighten the streets and relieve the monotony of the white garments of the adults.

The day after we left Fu San, we had a quiet sail among the islands of the Korean Archipelago, of which there are more than a thousand, of every size and shape, and nearly all rugged and bare. The second night we entered the so-called Yellow Sea between North China and Korea, and although near the Korean coast, we had a rough, restless night and shipped heavy seas, but the morning found us at Chemulpo, with a bright clear day and a fine temperature.

ORIENTAL SCHOOLS.

Education in the East Still Conducted on the Ancient Lines—A Mussulman Pedagogue and His Little Pupils.

(See Colored Illustration on first page.)

NOT all Oriental schools are conducted amid surroundings so imposing as those represented in the photograph on the first page of this issue. Education is greatly reverenced in the East, but the teacher and his class are quite as frequently found in some gloomy, delapidated building, with the dingiest accompaniments, as in the hall of a palace or the corridor of an ill-kept mosque. In most of these schools, small wooden boards, painted white, serve instead of books, the lessons being written upon them in ink by the schoolmaster and renewed from time to time. Seated on the floor, the children read and recite the appointed lesson all together, rocking themselves to and fro, or swaying from side to side, meanwhile.

In many of the cities of Syria and Egypt the Mohammedans, besides building many mosques for the religious wants of the people, have attached children's schools to the mosque. Groups of noisy pupils shouting and mumbling the Koran, sit with crossed legs before the master. In Cairo is a building long ago erected as a hospital. In it fifty paid readers of the Koran once publicly taught the Mohammedan religion, and a librarian with several assistants, was in charge of a collection of medical, legal, theological and rhetorical books. Four orthodox Mussulman teachers presided in as many different lecture-rooms, and had charge of the training of 60 orphans who were supported gratuitously. This was one of the very few state-supported schools in Moslem dominions.

In such schools there is but one common text-book — the Koran or Mussulman's Bible, from which all lessons are drawn. It is the Mussulman's complete library of law, theology, literature, science, medicine and morals. Beside the Koran, or possibly some Arabic commentary on that book, no other volume is allowed to cross the threshold.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

STORM-CLOUDS BRIGHTENED.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Job 37: 21 . . . . . And now men see not the bright light which is in the clouds.

WIND east. Barometer falling. Storm-signals out. Ship reefing maintopsail! Awnings taken in. Prophecies of foul weather everywhere. The clouds congregate around the sun, proposing to abolish him. But after a while he assails the flanks of the clouds with flying artillery of light, and here and there is a sign of clearing weather. Many do not observe it. Many do not realize it. "And now men see not the bright light which is in the clouds." In other words there are a hundred men looking for storm where there is one man looking for sunshine. My object will be to get you and myself into the delightful habit of making the best of everything.

You may have wondered at the statistics that in India, in the year 1875, there were over nineteen thousand people slain by wild beasts, and that in the year 1876 there were in India over twenty thousand people destroyed by wild animals. But there is a monster in our own land which is year by year destroying more than that. It is the old bear of melancholy, and with Gospel weapons I propose to chase it back to its midnight caverns. I mean to do two sums—a sum in subtraction and a sum in addition—a subtraction from your days of depression and an addition to your days of joy. If God will help me I will compel you to see the bright light that there is in the clouds, and compel you to make the best of everything.

In the first place, you ought to make the very best of all your financial misfortunes. During the panic a few years ago you all lost money. Some of you lost it in most unaccountable ways. For the question, "How many thousands of dollars shall I put aside this year?" you substituted the question, "How shall I pay my butcher, and baker, and clothier, and landlord?" You had the sensation of rowing hard with two oars, and yet all the time going down stream.

You did not say much about it because it was not politic to speak much of financial embarrassment; but your wife knew. Less variety of wardrobe, more economy at the table, self-denial in art and tapestry. Compression; retrenchment. Who did not feel the necessity of it? My friend, did you make the best of this? Are you aware of how narrow an escape you made? Suppose you had reached the fortune toward which you were rapidly going? What then? You would have been as proud as Lucifer.

How few men have succeeded largely in a financial sense and yet maintained their simplicity and religious consecration! Not one man out of a hundred. There are glorious exceptions, but the general rule is that in proportion as a man gets well off for this world he gets poorly off for the next. He loses his sense of dependence on God. He gets a distaste for prayer meetings. With plenty of bank stocks and plenty of Government securities will does that man know of the prayer "Give me this day my daily bread?" How few men largely successful in this world are bringing souls to Christ, or showing self-denial for others, or are eminent for piety? You can count them all upon your eight fingers and two thumbs.

One of the old martyrs said, when he was sick, and sick to death, and to have a room brought in was to him filled with gold, and the only assessment and the only relief we can for the inflicted hands was to count them over, to feel the gold, and to say it is all his. Oh, what influence and what destroying power money has! In many a man's Now, you were calling at thirty with the heat toward the years of worldliness—what a freeze it was that turned on [illegible] The same cause that crowded your store-house, your bank, your office, your insurance company lifted you out of destruction. The day you honestly suspended in business made your fortune for eternity.

"Oh," you say, "I could get along very well myself, but I am so disappointed that I cannot leave a competence for my children." My brother, the same financial misfortune that is going to save your soul will save your children. With the anticipation of large fortune, how much industry would your children have?—without which habit of industry there is no safety. The young man would say, "Well, there's no need of my working; my father will soon step out, and then I'll have just what I want." You cannot hide from him how much you are worth. You think you are hiding it; he knows all about it. He can tell you almost to a dollar. Perhaps he has been to the county office and searched the records of deeds and mortgages, and he has added it all up, and he has made an estimate of how long you will probably stay in this world, and is not as much worried about your rheumatism and shortness of breath as you are. The only fortune worth any thing that you can give your child is the fortune you put in his head and heart. Of all the young men who started life with $40,000 capital, how many turned out well? I do not know half a dozen.

The best inheritance a young man can have is the feeling that he has to fight his own battle, and that life is a struggle into which he must throw body, mind and soul, or be disgracefully worsted. Where are the burial-places of the men who started life with a fortune? Some of them in the potter's field; some in the suicide's grave. But few of these men reached thirty-five years of age. They drank, they smoked, they gambled. In them the beast destroyed the man. Some of them lived long enough to get their fortunes, and went through them. The vast majority of them did not live to get their inheritance. From the gin-shop or house of infamy they were brought home to their father's house, and in delirium began to pick off loathsome reptiles from the embroidered pillow, and to fight back imaginary devils. And then they were laid out in highly upholstered parlor, the casket covered with flowers by indulgent parents—flowers suggestive of a resurrection with no hope.

As you sat this morning at your breakfast table, and looked into the faces of your children, perhaps you said within yourself, "Poor things! How I wish I could start them in life with a competence! How I have been disappointed in all my expectations of what I would do for them!" Upon that scene of pathos I break with a paean of congratulation, that by your financial losses your own prospects for heaven, and the prospect for the heaven of your children is mightily improved. You may have lost a toy, but you have won a palace.

"How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God!" "It is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven." What does that mean? It means that the grandest blessing God ever bestowed upon you was to take your money away from you. Let me here say, in passing, do not put much stress on the treasures of this world. You cannot take them along with you. At any rate, you cannot take them more than two or three miles; you will have to leave them at the cemetery. Attila had three coffins. So fond was he of this life that he decreed that first he should be buried in a coffin of gold, and that then that should be enclosed in a coffin of silver, and that should be enclosed in a coffin of iron, and then a large amount of treasure should be thrown in over his body. And so he was buried, and the men who buried him were slain, so that no one might know where he was buried, and no one might there interfere with his treasures. Oh men of the world, who want to take your money with you, better have three coffins!

Again, I remark, you ought to make the very best of your bereavements. The whole tendency is to brood over these separations, and to give much time to the handling of mementoes of the departed, and to make long visitations to the cemetery, and to say, "Oh, I can never look up again; my hope is gone; my courage is gone; my religion is gone; my faith in God is gone! Oh, the wear and tear and exhaustion of this loneliness!" The most frequent bereavement is the loss of children. If your departed child had lived as long as you have lived, do you not suppose that he would have had about the same amount of trouble and trial that you have had? If you could make a choice for your child between forty years of annoyance, loss, vexation, exasperation, and bereavements, and forty years in heaven, would you take the responsibility of choosing the former? Would you snatch away the cup of eternal bliss and put into that child's hands the cup of many bereavements? Instead of the complete safety into which that child has been lifted, would you like to hold it down to the risks of this mortal state? Would you like to keep it out on a sea in which there have been more shipwrecks than safe voyages? Is it not a comfort to you to know that that child, instead of being besoiled and flung into the mire of sin, is swung clear into the skies? Are not those children to be congratulated that the point of celestial bliss which you expect to reach by a pilgrimge of fifty or sixty or seventy years, they reached at a flash? If the last ten thousand children who had entered heaven had gone through the average of human life on earth, are you sure all those ten thousand children would have finally reached the blissful terminus? Besides that, my friends, you are to look at this matter as a self-denial on your part for their benefit. If your children want to go off in a May-day party; if your children want to go on a flowery and musical excursion, you consent. You might prefer to have them with you, but their jubilant absence satisfies you. Well, your departed children have only gone out in a May-day party, amid flowery and musical entertainment, amid joys and hilarities forever. That ought to quell some of your grief, the thought of their glee.

So it ought to be that you could make the best of all bereavements. The fact that you have so many friends in heaven will make your own departure very cheerful. When you are going on a voyage, everything depends upon where your friends are—if they are on the wharf that you leave, or on the wharf toward which you are going to sail. In other words, the more friends you have in heaven the easier it will be to get away from this world. The more friends here, the more bitter goodbys; the more friends there the more glorious welcomes. Some of you have so many brothers, sisters, children, friends in heaven, that I do not know hardly how you are going to crowd through. When the vessel came from foreign lands, and brought a prince to our harbor, the ships were covered with bunting, and you remember how the men-of-war thundered broadsides; but there was no joy there compared with the joy which shall be demonstrated when you sail up the broad bay of heavenly salutation. The more friends you have there, the easier your own transit. What is death to a mother whose children are in heaven? Why, there is no more grief in it than there is in her going into a nursery amid the romp and laughter of her household. Though all around may be dark, see you not the bright light in the clouds—that light the irradiated faces of your glorified kindred?

So also, my friends, I would have you make the best of your sicknesses. When you see one move off with elastic step and in full physical vigor, sometimes you become impatient with your lame foot. When a man describes an object a mile off, and you cannot see it at all, you become impatient of your dim eye. When you hear of a well man making a great achievement you become impatient with your depressed nervous system or your dilapidated health. I will tell you how you can make the worst of it. Brood over it; brood over all these illnesses, and your nerves will become more twitchy, and your dyspepsia more aggravated, and your weakness more appalling. But that is the devil's work, to tell you how to make the worst of it; it is my work to show you bright light in the clouds.

ne season I had two springtimes. I went to New Orleans in April, and I marked the difference between going toard New Orleans and then coming back. As I went on down toward New Orleans, the verdure, the foliage, became thicker and more beautiful. When I came back, the further I came toward home the le the foliage, and less and less it became until there was hardly any. Now, it depends upon the direction in which you travel. If a spirit from heaven should come toward our world, he is traveling from June toward December, from radiance toward darkness, from hanging gardens toward icebergs. And one would not be very much surprised if a spirit of God sent forth from heaven toward our world should be slow to come. But how strange it is that we dread going out toward that world when going is from December toward June—from the snow of earthly storm to the snow of Edenic blossom—from the arctics of trouble toward the tropics of eternal joy.

h, what an ado about dying! We get so attached to the malarial marsh in which we live that we are afraid to go up and live on the hilltop. We are alarmed because vacation is coming. Eternal sunlight, and best programme of celestial minstrels and hallelujah, no inducement. Let us stay here and keep cold and ignorant and weak. Do not introduce us to Elijah, and John Milton and Bourdaloue

Keep our feet on the sharp cobble-stones of earth instead of putting them on the back of amaranth in heaven. Give us this small island of a leprous world instead of the immensities of splendor and delight. Keep our hands full of nettles, and our shoulder under the burden, and our neck in the yoke, and hopples on our ankles, and handcuffs on our wrists. "Dear Lord," we seem to say, "keep us down here where we have to suffer, instead of letting us up where we might reign and rejoice."

I am amazed at myself and at yourself at this infatuation under which we all start. Men you would suppose would get frightened at having to stay in this world instead of getting frightened at having to go toward heaven. Congratulate anybody who has a right to die. By that I mean through sickness you cannot avert, or through accident you cannot avoid—your work consummated. "Where did they bury Lily?" said one little child to another. "Oh," she replied, "they buried her in the ground." "What! in the cold ground?" "Oh, no, no; not in the cold ground, but in the warm ground, where ugly seeds become beautiful flowers."

So you see you have not made out any useful story yet. What have you proved about death? You have made out just this that death allows us to have a perfect body, free of all aches, united forever with a perfect soul free from all sin. Correct your theology. What does it all mean? Why, it means that moving-day is coming, and that you are going to quit cramped apartments and be mansioned forever. The horse that stands at the gate will not be the one lathered and bespattered, carrying bad news, but it will be the horse that John saw in Apocalyptic vision—the white horse on which the King comes to the banquet. The ground around the palace will quake with the tires and hoofs of celestial equipage, and those Christians who in this world lost their friends, and lost their property, will find out that God is always kind, and that all things worked together for their good, and that those were the wisest people on earth who made the best of everything. See you not now the bright light in the clouds?

Saved From a Life of Sin.

The Wonderfully Blessed Efforts of the Florence Crittenton Mission Reviewed at its Fifteenth Anniversary.

THE RESCUE CAR, WHICH HAS TRAVELED MANY THOUSANDS OF MILES.

HOW one man, led by the influence of a little child, has been made instrumental in relieving thousands of poor, outcast women and bringing them back to the path of duty and a measure of happiness, was beautifully told at the fifteenth anniversary of the Florence Crittenton Mission, which was celebrated April 17, 1898, in the Metropolitan Temple, Seventh Avenue and Fourteenth Street, New York City. The exercises were intensely interesting, reflecting, as they did, the fifteen years' history of the mission.

THE SEWING ROOM OF THE CRITTENTON "MOTHER MISSION," IN NEW YORK.

Since the first Florence Crittenton Mission, known as the "Mother Mission," was established on Bleecker Street, in New York City, the work there instituted has enlarged until fifty-two Florence Crittenton Rescue Homes in different cities of America and Japan win wandering women back to paths of purity and peace. The latest of these missions is in Roxbury, Mass., where a home has been recently established. The introduction of a new feature into this rescue work is contemplated in the proposed erection of a Florence Crittenton Rescue Home for negro girls in Atlanta, Ga.

Since the organization of the National Association a little over three years ago, the usefulness of Mr. Crittenton's chain of rescue homes has been more than trebled. The interchange of ideas and the comparison of methods at the National Headquarters at Washington has borne the fruit that might rationally have been expected, under the direction of the founder and president, Mr. Crittenton, whose hands are upheld by a board of able and devoted trustees, and who is as able a business man as he is a broad philanthropist.

During 1896, 3,000 girls were rescued; during 1897 a larger number. Reports from all the homes show that a large proportion of these girls are permanently reformed. Many of the unfortunates received into the homes are very young, and they are sheltered, cared for, trained to proficiency in some occupation in which they can earn an honest living, and not sent forth into the world again until it is believed that they are able, morally, as well as physically, to take care of themselves. An interesting point in this connection is the testimony borne by the matrons of many homes to the effect that young mothers, who retain the care of their children, rarely turn back to evil ways after they have felt the influence of the Rescue Home associations. Mrs. Kate Waller Barrett, general superintendent and organizer of the national Florence Crittenton missions, has repeatedly emphasized the moral value to both mother and child of the preservation of the natural tie. "A little child shall lead them," has been proven, in many cases, a true saying.

After thorough training and testing in the Home, the matrons and boards of directors find positions for such inmates as have fully proven their penitence and trustworthiness, and gratifying records each year prove that many girls, otherwise a burden to themselves and a menace to society, are doing good work and continuing faithful to the service of the dear Lord, whom they first found in the rescue home. Many poor waifs come who never heard the name of Jesus, but none depart in such ignorance.

"My first girl," said Mrs. Ward, of Williamsport, Pa., at the 1897 convention, "was only fourteen. Mother Prindle was with me when she was arrested, and we went to the court and found her only a child, but they said she was very bad. We took her home with us, and she proved to be a good, sweet girl under our influence. I went to see her the other day, and she said: 'Dear mother, I could not do wrong now. I know better.'" The experience of many matrons showed this to be the case of a great number of very young girls reclaimed from evil habits not yet fixed upon them.

Readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are thoroughly familiar with the beautiful story of Mr. Crittenton's life surrender to rescue work into which he was divinely led by the death of his daughter, Florence.

The Huguenots' Convention.

Huguenots from America and Europe Celebrate the Tercentenary of the Edict of Nantes—A Most Interesting Event.

ONE of the most interesting events in all Protestant history was the recent celebration in New York City during Easter week by the Huguenot Society of America of the 300th anniversary of the signing of the Edict of Nantes by Henry IV. of France. The Edict of Nantes, giving, as it did, religious liberty and State recognition to Protestants, marked at the time of its promulgation the greatest advance which had yet been made in religious toleration. Coming twenty-six years later than the massacre of St. Bartholomew's, it seemed to indicate rapid strides in the liberality of French thought; but when Louis XIV. came to the throne, the Edict of Nantes was revoked, and persecution of the Huguenots began afresh.

"The emigration of the Huguenots in the seventeenth century," writes Rev. Mr. Wittmeyer, founder of the Huguenot Society of America, "largely prepared the way a century later for the overthrow of the old regime in France; it greatly enriched morally, intellectually and materially every country in which the exiles took refuge."

The most important Huguenot settlements in America were those at New Amsterdam, as New York was then known; New Rochelle, which to-day is full of interesting Huguenot landmarks; the colony at Hackensack, N. J.; a colony at Narragansett, whose records were discovered only a few years ago by Rev. Mr. Wittmeyer; the colony at New Oxford, Mass., where a monument is now being erected to the honor of Huguenot founders; colonies at Mannikin Town, Va.; at Newcastle, Del.; in Maine, Pennsylvania, and last, but by no means least, the colony at Charleston, S. C., where Huguenot descendants have preserved closer resemblance than elsewhere to Huguenot forefathers. Florida's first Huguenot settlements were stamped out by Spanish persecution.

The Church of the Holy Spirit in New York City, where the recent sessions were held, is direct descendant of a congregation of about 200 French refugees, who enjoyed the hospitality of the Dutch church on the "Bowerie" before their own house of worship was built in 1668, on "Petty-Coat-Lane"; a second and larger church was built in 1704 in King street, now Pine, and was succeeded by a third on Franklin street, which in turn gave place to the present building on Twenty-second street, where a congregation now meets under the administration of Rev. A. V. Wittmeyer

The celebration began with Easter services at Grace Church, whose rector is a member of the Huguenot Society, followed during the week by appropriate receptions, and services, where most interesting papers bearing upon the Huguenot history were read by Edward Belleroche and A. Giraud Browning. London delegates: Rev. Paul de Felice and Monsieur N. Weiss,

THE MARRIAGE FEAST.

S. S. Lesson for May 8. Matt. 22:1-4. Golden Text, Luke 14:17.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

OUR golden text: "Come, for all things are now ready," is taken from the parable of the great supper in the Gospel of Luke, which seems to refer to the great provision in the Gospel for men of all kinds and in every age of this dispensation. The supper is made for the guests, and one servant only can bid them. Surely this is the Holy Spirit, who alone can convict of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment (John 16:8). The invitation is unconditional; no preparation is needed, "all things are ready" as much for the poor who come from the streets and lanes, the highways and hedges, as for those who have been before bidden; and none are turned away for want of room. A free, full salvation without money and without price, to be had now. The guests have only to receive and to come just as they are.

The parable of the marriage feast is essentially different. The King makes a marriage feast for his son. Those who are bidden are of necessity such whose rank or worthiness in some way would entitle them to the distinguished honor of such an invitation. Every guest must have a wedding garment; and every one who is called must be found worthy and chosen. "Servants"—not one servant, as in the other parable—bid to the wedding, the room is not unlimited, as in Luke, for the wedding was "furnished with guests." The hindrances in the case of both invitations are similar, but in the supper of Luke, those who reject the invitation "make excuse," while in Matthew no excuse is made; they made light of it," deliberately preferred their own interests to those of the King's, and were not alive to the immense honor done to them by such an invitation.

All throughout the dispensation in which we live God has been visiting the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name (Acts 15:14). "Why did Jesus come?" is often asked, and the reply is given: "To save us from hell, and take us to heaven." If we had only the parable of the great supper in Luke, and nothing in the marriage supper, with its wondrous call in Matthew and the corresponding passages in Ps. 15, Rev. 19, etc., such an answer might be justified. Luke, the Evangelist, always takes the human side, depicting Christ as the perfect man, the elder brother, living and dying for his brethren, his fellowmen. But Matthew asserts his claims as King, and the marriage feast is made for the King's son. The invitations are meant to those who will appreciate and accept as an honor the leaving of their own interests to honor him. They who accept have a kingly spirit and their prayers are the prayers of the Kingdom, "Hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come, thy will be done." They seek first the Kingdom of God."

The bride in the parable is veiled from view. And yet how can there be a marriage without a bride? In the parable of the ten virgins, as in the bride is an agent, but she must exist, or there could not be the virgins, her companions that followed her" by the Old Testament, God spoke of the Jewish people as married unto him, the "married wife was the people and the fathers house." But this people" did not answer his expectations, and did not adhere to him (Jer. 13:11) and he calls out another who shall marry and consider and forget also her people and her father's house, a people who shall be taken out from the Gentiles for his name (Acts 15:14), as a man takes out from his acquaintances one to be his life partner, to bear his own name. But, oh, how few there are who understand this high calling! How few understand what this involves! If Adam could not find, in all the creatures which he named at the time of the creation a help-meet for him (Gen. 2:20), but he must needs have one who was from his own bone and flesh of his flesh; how much less can Christ wed a bride whose nature and whose life is not his very own?

To be saved from hell, the sinner leaves nothing but his sin, but to accept the call to the marriage, even as a guest, a child of God must leave all he is and has. When once it dawns upon a child of God that he is called upon to partake of the very life of Jesus, to share his interests and his kingdom, even though it be at the cost of all that the world has to give—of honor, gain, comfort, pleasure, etc.—he cannot hesitate; all is changed for him. The dazzling glory of being made, in very deed, "partaker of the divine nature" (II. Peter 1:4), one with the Lord Jesus himself (Heb. 2:11), as a member of his body is one with the head, makes all other glory pale, all earthly gain, ashes. He cannot make light of it, and turn again to his farm or his merchandise as the object of his life. Only so far as these things serve to honor his King, and to educate him for his future career in the kingdom, can he continue to be occupied with them; they are only means to an end.

But there are hundreds of thousands of such as have made use of the Lord Jesus to obtain pardon for their sins, who do not manifest the kingly spirit. Just as far as God ministers to them they will honor and serve him. To them Christ is still more Emmanuel, "God with us," than man taken into the Godhead, and man on the throne. Such as these are utterly blind to the call of this parable. They expect to prosper in business, and to enjoy the good things of this life, and think the very fact of their conversion entitles them to God's favor in this world. They expect to be honored and respected for their good citizenship and their religion; in fact they take the Old Testament standard, "If ye be willing and obedient ye shall eat the good of the land" (Isa. 1:19). Such as these look upon many of the Lord's precepts as exaggerated, they do not understand what it is to deny themselves, to take up their cross, to "endure grief, suffering wrongfully," to resist not evil, to count it all joy where we fall into divers temptations; the high calling of God is unknown to them. Therefore they make light of it; it has not entered into their horizon, and as their ways are not his ways, they turn "one to his farm, another to his merchandise." "But when the King came in to see the guests, he saw there a man which had not on a wedding garment." Both bad and good had been gathered in, but the proving time must come. To have had the call was not enough, none must be clothed with strange or foreign apparel (Zeph. 1:8).

"ALL THINGS ARE READY: COME UNTO THE MARRIAGE."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

IT is important to remember that no parable can be complete in all its figures. It is consequently impossible to identify every feature. Thus in other parts of Scripture Christ's people represent the bride, but in this parable they appear as the guests at the marriage feast. Christ's object in relating the parable appears to have been to warn the Jewish people, who, as he saw, were about to reject him, of the consequences of what they were doing and to caution those who would take their places that there were conditions that they must fulfil. The invitation goes to the world; many are called, but as it was with the Jews, so it is with the Gentiles, comparatively few accept the conditions; few are chosen. It will be convenient in teaching the lesson to divide it into its four parts: 1. In what way the offer of Christ resembles a feast. 2. The invited guests, their conduct and punishment. 3. The substituted guests bad and good. 4. The man improperly dressed and his punishment.

The Kingdom of Heaven is like, etc. It is astonishing how many things Christ used as symbols of the Kingdom of Heaven. In reading the Gospels we see how he labored to make the people understand what the Kingdom of Heaven is. In this instance he describes it as being like a feast, and that a marriage, the most joyous of all feasts. Some people would have us think of religion as a gloomy, depressing thing, but Christ said it was like a marriage feast. Dr. Trumbull describes these feasts as he witnessed them in Palestine recently, as most impressive, a time of processions and feasting. "The sound of the rejoicings," he says, "came over the desert into our tents by night from the castle, where the celebration of the marriage was in progress. The Governor of the castle had made a marriage feast for his son. Besides providing sheep and pigeons in abundance he had generously sacrificed a young dromedary. Animal food is a rarity there, and such a delicacy as dromedary flesh was highly appreciated. Everybody around the castle, even t poor, the maimed, the lame, and the bli from the adjoining mud-village had share of the boiled dromedary." The was general rejoicing for seven days.

To call them that were bidden. In important a ceremony as the marriage a King's son, the invitations were issu long before, so that the invited gue might not make any engagements for th time. When the day arrives he sends l servants in the morning to remind the But they will not come. The King fe hurt, but there might be some mistake, the guests might have acted thoughtless so when everything is quite ready he sen servants to give them another opportuni But the guests treat the invitation w contempt, make light of it, and go on w their business, as if the marriage was n worth a thought. Some of them are irritated and so malignant that they k the King's servants. The scribes, w knew Jewish history, would not need a explanation of that parable. They und stood well enough what Christ mea The prophets whom God had sent h been despised. John the Baptist h been killed, and, as Christ knew, th were plotting to kill him. In Austra there is a man now thirty-five years o who is working as a common stre sweeper. His father is wealthy and head of a proud and ancient family. T son was well trained and well taught. had all the advantages that wealth co give. But he had an incurable p pensity to vice. His father appea to him, pleaded with him, remin him of his distinguished ances among whom there had been legi tors, generals, judges, and clergym and besought him not to disgrace untarnished name. He showed h the wealth to which he was heir, begged him to prove himself wor of it. But the son despised it spent his time with depraved vicious companions, and found pleasures on the race course, at pr fights, and in gambling dens. Ag and again his father forgave h paid his debts and gave him new portunities of reformation. It w of no use. At length he commit a crime, and had to fly the cour to avoid prison. His father r sends him every month a sum su cient to pay his board and cl ing, which is spent in drink with week, and he subsists until the n remittance on his earnings as street-sweeper. In the meantin stranger occupies his place in ancestral home, and by his dut conduct tries to console the aged n who has adopted him for the mis his son has brought upon him.

Had not on a wedding garm. Father Taylor, the famous sa preacher, was preaching on this t on one occasion, when a sai wearing a rough flannel shirt and addressed him. He said was sorry the preacher had called at tion to his having no coat on, but fact was he had lost everything i recent shipwreck and did not posses coat. He begged to apologize for com into the room without one. Father Tay instantly came down and putting his around the man's shoulders, told him h much he was mistaken, and ended giving him a coat and telling him how could get the robe of Christ's righte ness. Christ, in this incident, referred a custom common in Oriental lands the host providing suitable garb for guests at a royal feast. There was a for each guest, and the man who without a wedding garment, was w out it because he had refused the provided for him. In England there a funeral in a small town some years at which such an incident occurred. undertaker, according to the custom vogue, brought a long black cloak an crape hatband, with long streamers. a pair of black gloves for each pe invited to attend the funeral. One m a nephew of the deceased, came, w expected to inherit his property, but disappointed. He refused to put on cloak and hatband, and said he would in the procession in his own work clothes. To this the undertaker objec and there was a painful dispute, wh ended in the police being called in, the nephew being put in jail for mak a disturbance at a public ceremony.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Tea-Making in India.

How the Aromatic Leaf Is Treated to Produce the Final Treasure for the Caddy—Old English Notions About Tea-Drinking.

OUR illustration presents an interesting stage in the manufacture of tea in India, where this industry has undergone remarkable improvements, and is far in advance of the Chinese methods, modern machinery having taken the place of much tedious handling, which was no advantage to the flavor of the tea. As we see on the boxes, Chinese names which guile the quality of the tea are related. These names are only appropriate to black tea, which is flowery pekoe, orange pekoe, pekoe, pekoe souchong, souchong, congou, bohea, according as it is the fine and delicate product of the young leaf-bud up to the hard and woody expanded and partly-grown leaf. The pekoes (white hairs is the meaning of the word from which this is derived) are the downy tips of young buds and make highest grades of tea, although it can be understood that the souchong or one variety may be better than the pekoe of another. In the course of manufacture, black tea undergoes four processes, withering, rolling, fermenting, and firing, or dholing. After the firing the leaves are sifted by machinery into commercial qualities, according to the size of the leaf. With the exception of the growing and packing, tea-production in India as in Japan, is a factory industry, which, of course, it will eventually become in China as that country admits the introduction of Western civilization and Western industrial methods.

Tea-planting is by no means limited to Asiatic countries. It has been successfully established in portions of Africa; it has been attempted in the West Indies, Brazil, Australia, Southern Europe, and recent experiments seem to show that it might be made a profitable industry in the Southern States of the Union, where, it is believed, the natural conditions exist for producing a very fine quality of tea.

"I did send for a cup of tee, a China drink, of which I never drank before," wrote Pepys, Sept. 25, 1660, in that famous diary of his. Tea at that time was almost costly beverage, selling at prices varying from fifteen to fifty shillings. The first tea ever mentioned by an Englishman was a "pot of the best sort of chaw," ordered from Maccao by Mr. Wickham, agent of the East Indian Company, in 1615; and subsequent records show that he provided himself with "three silver tringers to drink chaw in." An Englishman, writing to another in 1678, refers to tea-drinking as "a base, unworthy, Indian practise, which I must ever admire your first Christian family for not admitting," a commendation which loses force when it reproves certain friends, "who call for tea instead of pipes and bottles after dinner." Many who condemned tea as a beverage admitted its value as a drug, and the various early notions entertained upon the subject of tea-drinking are exceedingly curious. With kindly missionary minds of the present day, the word is often connected in thought with many a deed of mercy when "the cup that cheers, but not inebriates," is provided and served by tender hands to the sick, the destitute and the aged.

SIFTING TEA-LEAVES IN AN INDIAN TEA-FACTORY.

Mother's Duty.

One of a mother's first duties to her children is to take care of herself. The mother who wears herself out in unnecessary service is doing her children a grievous wrong, in addition to that of making them selfish and careless of herself. She is robbing them of the greatest blessing children can have—a happy, healthy mother. There is quite a difference between the mother who neglects her children and selfishly exacts service of them, and the mother who trains her children to serve her for their own sakes. Let a mother never forget that she is her children's best possession, and love will teach her not only to care for her health, but to do all she can to keep herself pretty and pleasing, winsome and sweet.

The Forgetful Habit.

The words, "I forgot," tell of carelessness, they tell of frivolity, of remissness in the performance of duties intrusted to those who use them, writes Elizabeth M. Applebury, and are often the exponents of criminal neglect as well as a want of proper respect and affection for those whose requests should be held sacred. Often has the writer been put to needless trouble and anxiety by the plea, to me, almost inexcusable, "I forgot." Does one forget a request made by a dear relative? I had almost said "No"; but will modify my reply somewhat. I cannot think it a trivial matter when one confides a message to be delivered to a friend, a letter, perhaps an important one, to be posted, an article purchased, to be met with the excuse, "I forgot." I have scarcely any patience with these thoughtless persons whose memory does not reach to the post-office or the village store. Verily, the way of the world is a curious way.

Music In Home Life.

"Home, Sweet Home" has done more than statesmanship or legislation to keep alive in the hearts of people the virtues that flourish at the fireside, and to recall to its hallowed circle the wanderers who stray from it," Dr. Mackay once wrote concerning that popular ballad. Someone else has said: "We find that most of the ancient legislators thought they could not well reform the manners of any city without the help of a lyric, and sometimes of a dramatic poet . . . The poor are daily tempted to all manner of wickedness by infamous ballads, sung in every corner of the streets." Song-makers and song-singers then, have no very light responsibility. In lowly mission work, as well as in city churches with trained choirs and grand organs, the value of music in attracting and uplifting is receiving larger and larger recognition. We believe that in home life, its power for attracting and holding the young to the hearth-stone is great. A little choral band gathered about a mother or a big sister, raising glad young voices in happy unison with that of the beloved leader, is a charming picture to the eye, even though a hypercritical ear might sometimes take slight offense from false notes of yet untrained singers. Fathers and brothers often have musical gifts, and to be the leader of such a band is by no means out of keeping with manly dignity.

Pretty Manners to Parents.

There is an obligation to aged parents which youth should remember. To provide for material wants is not enough, and there is something needed beside mere respect. It is tenderness. To the helplessness of infancy, parents accord something to which the helplessness of age has equal claim. Nothing is more becoming in a young man or maiden than caressing ways towards parents. A young lady recently inspired, at a winter resort, the admiration of all beholders by her charming manner to her parents. Her conduct, in one respect was a distinct novelty. She was as unhappy if they were out of her sight as they doubtless had been during their daughter's childhood if she were out of theirs. Solicitude might have explained this in the case of her mother, who was an invalid, but not that of her father, who was hale and hearty, and with whom she was as happy to take a stroll as other lassies were with their lovers. Over her mother, who was quite a tiny body, the tall young daughter exercised a sort of playful oversight which was very pretty indeed. The evident fact that she was entertained by her parents and that she put herself out to entertain them not only won golden opinions from elderly guests, but attracted much warm regard from the young gentlemen of the place, whose attention, in her absorption with filial duties, she had been too busy to cultivate. It is well for youth to remember that sweet reverence to the aged pays.

I Wouldn't Be Cross, Dear.

I wouldn't be cross, dear, with people at home,
They love you so fondly whatever may come.
You may count on the kinsfolk around you to stand,
Oh, loyally true in a brotherly band!
So, since the fine gold far exceedeth the dross,
I wouldn't be cross, dear, I wouldn't be cross.

Cheerfulness.

Cheerfulness, says a writer in an exchange, is the best lubricant in the world, and in the machinery of household toils and cares it often happens that a little is needed. Where there is cheerfulness there is always order and thrift and comfort. It is a jewel more precious than any ever dug from the mines of Golconda, and like the sunshine, cannot be dispensed with. Very fervently and very piously we say, "God bless the cheerful woman!"

DON'T MAKE THE WRINKLES DEEPER.

IS father's eyesight growing dim,
His form a little lower?
Is mother's hair a little gray,
Her step a little slower?
Is life's hill growing hard to climb?
Make not their pathway steeper,
Smooth out the furrows on their brows,
O, do not make them deeper.

There's nothing makes a face so young,
As joy, youth's fairest token;
And nothing makes a face grow old,
Like hearts that have been broken.
Take heed lest deeds of thine should make Thy mother be a weeper;
Stamp peace upon a father's brow,
Don't make the wrinkles deeper.

In doubtful pathways do not go,
Be tempted not to wander;
Grieve not the hearts that love you so,
But make their love grow fonder.
Much have thy parents borne for thee,
Be now their tender keeper;
And let them lean upon thy love,
Don't make the wrinkles deeper.

Be lavish with thy loving deeds,
Be patient, true and tender;
And make the path that age-ward leads,
Aglow with earthly splendor.
Some day, thy dear ones, stricken low,
Must yield to death, the reaper;
And you will then be glad to know,
You made no wrinkles deeper.

Little Foes.

IN his letters on Africa, Henry M. Stanley tells that when he was passing through the forests, the most formidable foes he encountered, those that caused the greatest loss of life to his caravan and came near defeating his expedition, were the Wambutti dwarfs. These diminutive men had only little bows and arrows for weapons, so small that they looked like children's playthings: but upon the tip of each tiny arrow was a drop of poison which would kill an elephant or a man as surely and quickly as a rifle. Their defense was by means of poison and traps. They would steal through the dense forests, and, waiting in ambush, let fly their deadly arrows before they could be discovered. They dug ditches and carefully covered them over with sticks and leaves. They fixed spikes in the ground and tipped them with poison. Into these ditches and on these spikes man or beast would fall or step to their death. One of the strangest things about it was that their poison was made from honey. It is thus that Satan wages his destructive warfare. Stealthily, under cover of darkness, by treachery, with weapons seemingly harmless, through the sweets of life, he comes clothed as an "angel of light." Yet how deadly are the little honey-coated sins. How sure the destruction of him who is deceived into wandering from the straight and narrow way!

Profitable Philanthropy.

The following story is one that carries with it a lesson to the reader:

In Connecticut a few years ago, lived a lady who had a beautiful flower-garden, in which she took great pride. The whole neighborhood was proud of it, too, and people drove miles to see it. She fastened two large baskets on the outside of her fence next to the road and every morning these were filled with cut flowers—the large, showy kinds in one basket, and the delicate, fragile kinds in the other. All the school-children going by, helped themselves and studied the better for it; and business men took a breath of fragrance into their dusty offices which helped the day along. Even the tramps were welcome to all the beauty they could get into their forlorn lives. "You cut such quantities," some one said, "aren't you afraid you will rob yourself?" "The more I cut, the more I have," she answered. "Don't you know that if plants are allowed to go to seed they stop blooming? I am like the man in Pilgrim's Progress—the more I give away the more I have."

It is not alone in the garden that this rule holds good. We are constantly learning that giving does not make us poor, but rich; that the more we give to our fellow-men of love and sympathy and kindness, the more we have to give. Kind deeds come back to the hand that sends them forth, whether or no the immediate recipient is grateful.

Plenty of Heroes.

WE have heard people express the opinion that the day of heroes and heroines has past. Great mistake. They are all around us. Here are two young men. The first has a very neat hat, very fine shoes, very costly watch, very beautiful jewels! but he is all wrapped up in himself. His own existence and his own pleasure are the A and Z of his entire planning. Here is another young man, his apparel not quite so good. His joy is the making of other people happy. He loves Christ, and wants everybody to love him; is not ashamed to carry a bundle of clothes down to that poor man in the dark alley. Which of those two young men is the best adorned? Which will have the best prospect for this life, which the best prospect for the life that is to come? I think that one of the finest sights in all the world is a young man trying to serve God. Here is a fallen man: he takes him up. Here is a vagrant boy in the street; he takes him to the mission school. Here is a freezing family; he carries to them a scuttle of coal.

It is easy for a young man to be a Christian in his father's house, where all the influences are Christian; but to stand, as some of our young men do, in stores and shops, where all the influences are adverse to the Christian religion, and maintain integrity of soul and faithfulness to Christ—that demands more concentration and more spiritual strength than a great many think.

Every-Day Events.

IN the days when the mail came once a week, and the news was gathered up only by the slow stage coach, and before the telegraph was invented, men were excusable if they were ignorant of the condition of the world; but now, when every day in the form of a newspaper and through the instrumentality of the telegraph, all the great affairs of nations are brought to our attention, we must be silly and stupid in the extreme if we were not cognizant of what is going on in the world. God is moving mightily among the nations. The monarchies of the earth are crumbling one after another. Events that fifty years ago would have startled all nations, now come so meekly and unobservedly across the people that little remark is excited. Throne after throne is falling, and the time is hastening on when everywhere the declaration of independence will be acknowledged, and "the right of men to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" will be recognized in constitutions and magna chartas. Now, can it be that as Christian men we have never watched the mighty movements of God amid the governments? We need especially to be observant in regard to the condition of the church of Christ. What marvelous changes! You can remember when the great denominations of Christians were in constant hostility about the most insignificant doctrines and about the most unimportant differences in church government. There are those who are now before the throne of God rejoicing in each other's companionship, who only a little while ago were engaged in the most terrific ecclesiastical wars. These things have passed away. The denominations of Christians are now meeting upon a brotherly platform, and those who once were contending with each other about things that are of but very little importance now join hands. And we are coming toward the time when we shall ask but one question in regard to a man's spiritual condition and hope and sentiments, and that is, whether he believes in the Lord Jesus Christ for salvation, and the denominations of Christians all the world over will join hands around the cross of Christ.

The Best of Days.

WE ought to make more and more of the Sabbath, and fight back the invasion of the foreign Sabbath, which is no Sabbath at all. Where did you pass your boyhood Sabbaths? You say in a New England village. You remember the church, and the green in front; and the cry of the swallows in the tower, as the tap of the bell scattered them; and the quiet graveyard beside it, some of the stones leaning over, and the moss almost covering the letters; the long line of horses at the hitching-post; the the group at the church door; the minister, plain, and earnest, and affectionate; the children, with whom you exchanged mischievous glances, and the aged men and women, to whom you looked up with veneration, though they were sometimes asleep at the head of the pew—all of them sound asleep now in the shadow of the church that once they frequented. With some of you it was the Scotch kirk, or the English chapel, or the city church. Somehow, ever since then you loved Sunday to come. Its sunrise seems more golden. Its noonday more bright. Its evening more suggestive. And although you feel, before God, that many of your Sundays have been wasted, you still say: "Sweet Sabbath! Messenger from God! Pillow on which to put the aching head! Day, fragrant of all sweet memories! How I love thee!"

If you are forty years of age, two thousand and eighty of your Sabbaths are gone. Indeed, the whole flock of them is started and the last will soon spread wing. It will break from the East. The bells will ring. There will be the shuffle of young feet and old on the way to church. The baptismal waters will be shed, the sacramental wine poured, the evening service will pass, the Amen will finish the benediction, the lights will be lowered, the gates will jar shut, and the sexton will turn the key in the lock. Nothing peculiar in the looks of the wall that night, or in the sound of the music. But that will be the ending of your Sabbaths. Can you not have one more? Not one more. The last hymn. The last sermon. The last benediction. The last Sabbath.

Healthy Fun.

IT is the earnest man with an earnest work to do, who in unexpected moment puts the lever of his witticism under your soul and sends you roaring with a laughter that shuts your eyes, and rends your sides, and makes you thankful for a stout waistcoat, which seems to be the only thing that keeps you from explosion. Workingmen have a right to be facetious. We have no objection to a hen's cackle if it has first laid a large round egg for the breakfast-table. But we had on our farm a hen that never did anything but cackle. The most rousing wit ever uttered was by stalwart men like Robert South and Jean Paul Richter. With them wit was only the foaming flake on the wave that carried into port a magnificent cargo. It was only the bell that rang you to a banquet of stalled ox and muscovy. But, lackaday! if, at the ringing of the bell, we went to find nothing but a cold slice of chuckle, a hash of drollery, jokes stewed, and jokes stuffed, and jokes panned, and jokes roasted, and jokes with gravy, and jokes without gravy. Professor Wilson, the peerless essayist, could afford to put on "Sporting Jacket," and mould the snowball for the "Bicker of Pedmount, and go a-picnicing at Windermere, and shake up into rollicking glee, Lockhart, Hamilton, Gillies, and his other Blackwood cronies, if, in that way refreshed for toil, he could come into the University of Edinburgh to mould and shape the heart and intellect of Scotland with a magic touch that will be felt a thousand years. He is the most entertaining man who mixes in proper proportion work and play.

The social experiment known as the P aratists of Zoar is to go out of existence a life of over eighty years. It appears that the colony has for some years been dwindling in number, and some of the survivors have become dissatisfied with the arrangements. They own a large tract of land in Ohio, which will be sold and the proceeds divided among the members.

An example of the religious destitution of Utah is given by the Advance in the fact, recently discovered by a Congregational and Presbyterian pastor working unknown to each other, that there are over 250 post office districts in Utah utterly destitute of the Gospel. At these offices only 110,000 get their mail, and to most of them Mormon error is the only religious instruction accessible.

Mr. E. P. Telford has been holding a remarkable mission in Birmingham, England. During the first twelve days of the mission 400 names were taken in the inquiry-rooms. Many husbands and wives, and in some cases whole families, have decided for Christ. One evening Mr. Telford found that he had been instrumental in leading to Christ a grandmother, mother, and two daughters in succession.

Dr. Arthur J. Brown, Secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, says: "Nearly $325,000 is required before April 30 to meet the obligations for the current year. We are doing our utmost to close the year without a deficit, but we cannot succeed without the co-operation of the churches, and more than three thousand have as yet sent no offering, while some contributing churches have diminished their gifts.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions has received intelligence of the death of James M. Thompson, M.D., of the Siam Mission, which occurred at Petchaburee, Siam, on March 31. The brief cablegram gives cholera as the cause of death. Dr. Thompson was only thirty-eight years of age, and was apparently in the beginning of a life of great usefulness. His medical and surgical skill and his earnest faith marked him out as a leader in missionary work in that strange land. His death is widely deplored.

Spain in Anger.

ABLE news from Madrid leaves no doubt as to the attitude of the Spanish people toward this country. Like the people of Athens in the crisis before the Greco-Turkish war, and the people of Paris before the French w with Prussia, the citizens of the Spani capital are wildly clamoring for hostities. Beginning with April 10, riotous dmonstrations on the streets have been almost daily occurrence. In the Puerta Sol, the great square of the city, from hich its eight principal streets radiate, nbs gathered which required a strong nitary force to disperse. They surged out the offices of the members of the overnment, and would probably have ne to the Palace of the Queen if they ld not known that it was strongly rded by loyal troops. Their demeanor s openly menacing, and their shouts inly showed that they were in the od for revolution if concesns were made to the United tes. A significant feature the disturbances was that participants were not chiefly the lower classes, but included many storekeepers and fessional men. Among the leders who were arrested were aro, a prominent lawyer, a dramatist. It is evident t if the soldiery were withdwn to go to Cuba or the st, the Queen and her miniers might be in serious dang. Madrid is a city of about lf a million population, ong which are many Carls and Republicans, both of om are hostile to the dynzy. Should the Queen yield the demands of our Govement, or should disaster atd the Spanish arms, there ittle doubt that there would a dangerous rising in Mad, which might be fatal to dynasty. The same warle spirit has shown itself at rcelona, Saragossa, Valenc, and other large centres, l at Malaga the United tes Consulate was attacked. e well-informed newspaper respondent in Madrid confently asserts that the temper of the peo would not permit the Queen and her nisters to yield to our demands, even they wished to do so. The Queen apurs to be aware of the fact, and she realid, several days ago, that the only alternaes open to her were either a war with the ited States or to face a revolution ich might prevent her son ever coming the throne. Her position is a painful e, but it is the result of long years of sgovernment, which have made Spandominion in Cuba unendurable. The aniards cannot understand why the ited States should interfere, but probly if a Spaniard saw a big brutal man ating a woman or a little child on the ghway, he might feel that he had a right interfere, though the woman was the ate's wife, or the child his own son. We ieve that a man's house is his castle, d that he has a right to resent intrusion, t if he is ill-treating his children or pendants we recognize the right of the ighbors to interfere. This is the right e United States claims, after long pance and forbearance.

Behold the great tumults in the midst thereof, d the oppressed in the midst thereof. For they ow not to do right, saith the Lord, who store up lence and robbery in their palaces. Therefore, is saith the Lord God, an adversary there shall even round about the land, and he shall bring wn thy strength (Amos 3:9, 10).

He Judge an Offender too.

A significant admission was made by a y magistrate at the West Fifty-fourth reet Police Court in New York one day st week. The magistrate is an enthusiastic bicyclist, and while riding his wheel on the Boulevard was hailed by a policeman who told him he was violating a city ordinance by riding on the wrong side of the tracks. The magistrate immediately crossed over to the right side. During the sitting in court on the following day, the same policeman came into court with a prisoner whom he charged with the same offence that the magistrate had committed. The policeman looked at the magistrate in astonishment. "I think I have seen you before," said the magistrate, addressing the policeman. The policeman reminded him of the circumstance and proceeded with his case. The accused expected that a judge so situated would acquit him, but he was mistaken. It was elicited that he had not crossed over when the policeman warned him, and he excused himself by saying that he had a lady with him who was afraid to cross the tracks. The magistrate fined him, but took occasion to say: "You are not punished for riding on the wrong side of the Boulevard but for not crossing over when you were told." The punishment of sinners proceeds on the same principle. The worst offenders are they who continue in sin after they have been warned:

They mocked the messengers of God and despised his words and misused his prophets until the wrath of the Lord arose and there was no remedy (II. Chron. 36:16).

THE PALACE OF THE QUEEN REGENT OF SPAIN, NEAR MADRID.

Hears but Does not Understand.

A teacher in an institution for deaf-mutes in Chicago has made a discovery which may be turned to practical account there and elsewhere. She found that one of the children under her care was conscious of sound. If a book was dropped near to him or any noise was made, the boy was aware of the fact, but had not learned to associate the noise with the cause. He could hear people speak, but the words were unintelligible, as he was unable to discriminate differences of tone. The teacher suspected that the child's affliction was of the same kind as in the eye produces color-blindness. Inquiries in other institutions resulted in the discovery of many persons similarly afflicted. In one case, that of a young man, there had been frequent attempts to talk, but the sounds he made, like the words he heard were unintelligible. His parents thought he was an idiot until he gave up his attempts to talk and learned the sign language. The teacher found that in all these cases it was possible to teach the children to talk, as well as to hear. By showing the child the position of the mouth and tongue he learned to utter a few words distinctly and his ear soon was able to distinguish the same words when uttered by others. Thus the child's own tongue educated his ear, and his vocabulary is daily enlarged. There is reason to fear that some hearers of the Word are in similar need of education. It has no more effect on them than inarticulate sound:

Hearing ye shall hear and shall not understand, for this people's heart is waxed gross and their ears are dull of hearing (Matt. 13:15).

An Oculist's Advice.

The significant reply of a patient who recently consulted a Boston oculist, is related in the Youth's Companion. The patient was an elderly lady, who, for many years has been a most devoted friend in trouble to her neighbors and poor people. She found her eyesight failing, and while on a visit to a niece in Boston, went to an oculist to obtain a pair of spectacles. "My dear madam," said the young oculist, after a careful examination, "there is no danger to be apprehended if you take proper precautions, although your eyes at present are not in as good condition as I could wish. The glasses will be of great assistance, of course. Besides that, however, I should advise entire relaxation of the nerves for some time to come. You should be free from annoyance and excitement, and even from care, for the next six months. And, above all, my dear madam," he added impressively, "you should avoid all trouble and worry. Do not associate with sickness and distress. The effect of such things is to increase the difficulty which you experience." "Why, child," said the old lady, "you mistook my meanin'. I came to get fitted to a pair of specs. I wasn't calculatin' to wear 'em to heaven, but right here in this world o' sin and trouble. I'm afraid maybe you'll have to fit me all over again!" The old lady evidently belonged to that class of people who fulfil the Apostolic injunction:

Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ (Gal. 6:2).

A Thrilling Escape.

A dispatch from Fort Simpson, N. W. T., reports that a sailor belonging to the steamer Orca, of the Pacific Steam Whaling Company's fleet, had reached that place on his way from Point Barrow, on the Arctic coast. He was on his way to Seattle, Wash., where his home is. He brings letters from the survivors of the fleet which tell the story of a terrible disaster. His ship went down off Point Barrow, but all on board escaped to another ship of the same fleet. Later, on the same day, a second vessel was lost, and its crew escaped to the same ship. On the following day, the vessel on which they had taken refuge was crushed in the ice. The crews succeeded in getting on a large cake of floating ice, taking with them food and blankets. They were on the ice for ten days and nights, and were frequently obliged to jump from one ice-cake to another. Eleven members of the crews succumbed. Several of them went raving mad before they died. Among the survivors who reached Point Barrow, was the wife of the captain of one of the boats. She not only saved her own life, but by her cheerfulness and heroism, encouraged the others when they were giving up hope. Probably she was physically the weakest of the party, but her indomitable spirit rendered her useful to stronger natures. So it is in the struggles of life, the weak who know their weakness and look to the Lord for strength triumph where the strong fail.

Therefore I take pleasure in infirmities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake; for when I am weak then am I strong (II. Cor. 12:10).

A Novel Surgical Instrument.

One of the most remarkable surgical cases on record is reported by the Cleveland Leader. It appears that several weeks ago a little girl about five years old whose father lives near that city, while romping on the floor, accidentally ran a needle into her right knee joint. In attempting to pull it out, the father broke off the bit of steel, leaving more than half of it imbedded in the flesh, and when she was taken to the doctor repeated probing failed to locate the fragment of needle. At the latter's suggestion the child was taken to the power house of the Tuscarawas Electric Company and placed on the dynamo in such a manner that the right knee joint pressed against a powerful magnet. The baby was chloroformed, the leg laid open with the knife, and the magnet introduced. When it was withdrawn the troublesome bit of steel clung to it, and the experiment was a success. The surgeons could not explain the power of the magnet to draw the steel out of the limb, but they knew that it would do it and therefore they used it. Ministers of the Gospel are often reproached for acting on the same principle. They cannot give a scientific explanation of the power of faith to eliminate sin from the heart, but they know by experience that it does so.

Therefore we preach Christ crucified, to the Jews a stumbling-block and unto the Greeks foolishness, but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God (I. Cor. 1:23).

Died of Fright.

A sad instance of nervous distress proving fatal is reported from Plainfield, N. J. A man was taken to the Muhlenberg Hospital, a few days ago, who showed all the symptoms of hydrophobia. It appears that eight weeks before he had been bitten by a dog, but the wound had been cauterized and had healed perfectly. The man went to his work and felt no ill effects. But he read somewhere of a victim of a dog's bite who died of hydrophobia after the lapse of several months, and he became uneasy. He tried to ascertain what were the symptoms of the disease that the deceased first noticed, and all the details of his suffering. He heard of other instances and made inquiries about them. Everything bearing on the disease that he could obtain he read eagerly and watched himself carefully, fearing to detect in his own sensations the first symptoms of its approach. At last he fancied that he recognized them and broke down entirely. A doctor, who examined him, assured him that his trouble was only mental, and if he would cease reading and thinking about hydrophobia, he would get well. But the man was positive that he had the disease and declared that he could feel himself getting worse daily. When he went to the hospital, both doctors and nurses tried to convince him that his symptoms were imaginary and endeavored to divert his mind, but without success. Finally he acted as sufferers from hydrophobia do, and it was necessary to strap him down. After raving wildly for several hours, he died. The doctors attribute his death to fright, and say that he did not have true hydrophobia. The result, however, was the same as if he had suffered from the disease. It shows how potent is the influence of the mind over the body. It is a pity that men do not realize the fact in resisting the temptations to sins of the flesh. No man need be the victim of drunkenness or lasciviousness, if his spirit, aided by the Spirit of God, asserted its power:

As a man thinketh in his heart so is he (Prov. 23:7).

Food Cargoes for Starving Cuba.

The Central Relief Committee to Fill a Steamer for the Reconcentrados — Also Helping the Refugees at Tampa and Key West.

ALTHOUGH the situation in Cuba has lately been such as to prevent the landing of relief supplies for the suffering reconcentrados, our Government has decided to take steps looking to the sending of a large cargo of food, through the Central Cuban Relief Committee, within a few days. Arrangements are now being made by the Committee for the chartering of a steamer—probably the State of Texas—which will be loaded at New York with 800 tons of miscellaneous articles of food, 25 tons of rice, 100 tons of corn-meal, 25 tons of lard, $2,000 worth of medicines, and $1,200 worth of beds and bedding.

These supplies will be for the use of the reconcentrados and for the sufferers in the hospitals. As the vessel will sail under the American and Red Cross flags, it is believed that the use of the latter emblem (the Red Cross being an international organization), will protect it from attack or molestation.

In addition to these preparations for further aiding the reconcentrados, the Central Relief Committee has begun relief work among the thousands of Cuban refugees in Florida—at Tampa, Ybor City and elsewhere. Fourteen tons of food supplies have been sent to Tampa, and a committee, headed by Mayor Maloney of that city, and with Consul Hyatt, Dr. O'Farrell, and others as members, are actively co-operating with the Red Cross in the good work.

It is learned through the cable despatches that the relief supplies which U. S. Consul Brice left in storage at Matanzas, are being distributed among the reconcentrados by the British Vice-Consul, Mr. Dacosta. This is in accordance with the understanding between the United States and British governments, that the latter's consular officers should represent American interests during the absence of our consuls, who were recalled in view of the impending war. Should this arrangement be carried out at other points as faithfully as has been done at Matanzas, there is reason to hope that the reconcentrados may not be so wholly neglected as was at first feared.

The present week may bring important developments in Cuban affairs. All indications point to the early release of Cuba from Spanish rule, either by war or by diplomacy. The story of the failure of the negotiations between the Washington and Madrid Cabinets, and the warlike preparations of both governments, is well-known to every reader. Before this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD appears, the great conflict may have begun which is to decide the fate of Cuba and its people. It is gratifying to note that the justice of America's attitude is conceded by almost every government in Europe, and that the proposed intervention, on the ground of humanity and civilization, meets with universal approval.

Last of our Consuls to leave Cuba under the government's instructions was Mr. J. L. Hance, whose station was at Cardenas, Matanzas province. Mr. Hance, speaking of the condition of affairs in his section, says: "A large number of reconcentrados have starved and died in Cardenas and in other districts. For three months or more the average of deaths among this unfortunate class was twenty a day. Eight months ago there were 7,000 reconcentrados in or near Cardenas. Now there are only 1,500. Those figures tell the story. Most of the missing 5,500 have starved to death. A few have gone to what are called the zones of cultivation. So many have died that the daily number of deaths has materially decreased of late, though it is probable that the percentage of mortality is maintained. The relief supplies had only just begun to arrive when my letters of recall came. One installment did arrive before I left and was distributed.

"There has been some excitement in Cardenas over the probability of United States intervention, but no rioting. I received my orders to leave from Consul General Lee about nine days ago, but my departure was delayed. I expect to go back to Cuba in a month or probably less."

The many thousands of Americans who have aided in the work of rescuing the reconcentrados from starvation, are eagerly watching developments and will hail any opportunity that may arise to resume the relief work so grandly begun. That such an opportunity will come soon is very generally believed.

One of the most notable incidents in connection with the relief movement is related by an Omaha, Neb., contemporary:

On April 11th, Mrs. John M. Thurston, whose home was in Omaha, wrote an appeal to the "Mothers of the Northland" to feed starving Cuba. Three days later Mrs. Thurston died. Three days after the death of Mrs. Thurston the World-Herald suggested that the greatest memorial to Mrs. Thurston would be to make generous answer to her appeal for help for the starving Cubans. It opened a "Cuban Relief Bureau" in Omaha and asked for donations. The answer to the appeal was magnificent in volume. A great train of twenty-two cars, each car loaded to its full capacity with high-class provisions, is speeding eastward to New York. In twenty days the World-Herald collected over $11,000 in cash and tons of provisions for the Cubans. These donations were made by the people of Nebraska, Western Iowa and South Dakota. The train started at 3:30 o'clock on the afternoon of April 7th, and its departure was witnessed by a cheering crowd of 10,000 people. The Missouri Pacific transported the train to St. Louis. The Wabash took it in charge there and delivered it to the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western at Buffalo, and the latter road will deliver it to Stephen E. Barton, chairman of the Central Cuban Relief Committee in New York. The transportation is free. A striking feature of this magnificent donation is that the bulk of it came from sections of Nebraska that were, three years ago, the recipients of bounty from generous friends in the East.

Of the many incidents worthy of preservation in connection with the distribution of food in Cuba, our United States Consul at Santiago, Mr. Pulaski F. Hyatt, sends these two:

"Owing to a large amount of work that needed to be done, our distributing committee, one evening, decided not to issue rations the next day. But I awoke early in the morning, and the first thought that came to me was the poor people who held tickets for the day's issue and how disappointed they would be if told to wait until to-morrow; so I got up and calling my man

"'Fred,' said I 'You must get ready to issue food to-day, I cannot send these people home disappointed.'

"'All right, Consul,' said he, 'then I will hang out the flag, that is the way they know it is ration day; and, Consul, you'd better belibe dey am mighty glad to see dat flag swinging ober de consulate; kase dey know dat means a full meal, and dey do love that flag. Maybe I done wrong toder day, and I didn't tell ye, kase I was 'fraid ye might scold; but I couldn't help it, Consul. When dar was a big crowd out dar, dey axed me to pull the halyards and let down de flag until they could kiss it, and ebrybody dat could get near enough came and kissed de flag. And ye won't scold me, will ye, Consul?'

"'No, Fred,' I replied, 'I will not scold you for this once, but you must not do it again.'"

Among the applicants for aid in Santiago was a feeble old colored woman who, after receiving food insisted on seeing Consul Hyatt in person, and her wish was granted; when she took his hand and kissed it reverently. Her voice was so feeble that the consul could not understand her, and he said, "yo no comprendo" (I do not understand you), whereupon the old woman touched the consul's arm with one hand, and with the index finger of the other pointed to heaven saying, "Comprendo Alli?" (Understand there?) Then as she passed out she kissed her hand and waved it towards the American flag, and after the manner of her religion, crossed her breast and bowed her head in silent prayer.

By this act the poor old colored woman captured the consul's heart so completely, that he excused her from the necessity of presenting a ticket from the Ladies' Relief Committee, and in the name of the Lord answered her prayer—"Give us this day our daily bread."

Many letters, expressing sympathy with the Cuban peasants, and concern for their helpless condition, have been receiv during the week. Some of the letters extremely touching, one of which is gi below:

ssion Work Among Lumbermen.

Gpel Songs in the Great Forests—A romising Field—The Woodmen Appreate Christian Effort.

UR readers will be interested in the following letter from Rev. F. E. Higgins, pastor of the House of Hope Presbyterian Church, Duluth, Minn., giving an acnt of his labors among the lumbermen he great Northwestern forests:

I have just completed my third winter's wk in the logging camps. April, 1895, I epted a call to the first Presbyterian urch in Barnum, Minn. In the fall y young men leave the village for the ging camps, where they work during winter. One day, Mr. Cane, a church stee and the owner of some camps, ed me to visit the camps with him. s was a treat, as I had never been in a p before. After supper some of the n asked me to preach, which I did. ving no Bible, I repeated a Psalm rned in my boyhood days at Sabbath ool. We sung "Nearer My God to ee," "Jesus Lover of My Soul," and er songs that me of the men kw. Never have I joyed a service re. It was inspir- to see how at- tive the men ve. Next day I s called to another p, where I held a meeting. These ps were at the d of Little River, Northern Minnesa. After return- home, I felt that d had opened a w field of labor— that I had never ught of before. Xt week I went other camps at head of Dead ose River, thirty es from Barnum, ere we had most ouraging meetings. When spring came, l the men returned home, many of them om I had met in the camps commenced end ng services; and I found that work he camps had attracted to the church n never found in it before.

HAULING LOGS TO THE SKIDWAY.

"Later, what is known as the 'drive' nmences. The logs that were cut and iled to the lake at the head of the river, dumped into the river on the ice, are ted one hundred miles down the stream Stillwater, where they are cut in the wmills. The 'drive' lasts from three to weeks, during which time from fifty to enty-five men are employed for the rk. They camp on the bank of the er wherever night overtakes them. A ge fire is built, and around it the men g their clothes to dry, for they have en in the river most of the day keeping logs off shallow places. Around this mp-fire we held service in the evening, d as the sounds of the grand hymns, earer My God to Thee" and "A Day's rch Nearer Home," went echoing ough that great forest I thought I never fore had appreciated the beauty and piration of Gospel song.

"Early the following fall I again started t as soon as camps were opened, this e carrying hymn books, Bibles, reious papers (CHRISTIAN HERALDS ong them), tracts, etc., to each camp. ch literature is welcomed by the men, d many Christians, seeing my appeal for h matter, sent me papers, also Bibles d tracts, all of which were great helps. at winter, driving a horse and cutter, I en traveled many miles between Monand Saturday, preaching each night different camps, sleeping with the men their bunks, not undressing perhaps e whole week.

"The past winter I held meetings in erd & Clough's camps and Rolland's mps, Pine county, Minnesota; also in ne's camps, Carlton county. Have ld twenty-five services and distributed er five hundred pounds of literature, sides giving a number of Bibles away. o any man without a Bible, and promng me to read it, I always give one.

"I returned to New Duluth, my present charge, for each Sabbath, often tired after my week's work, but always happy when I remember how the men enjoyed the services. I often go out with the men and watch them cutting and hauling the logs to the landing. It is very interesting. Just think of four horses drawing twenty and thirty thousand feet of lumber at one load.

"In the State of Minnesota over 10,000 mer. work in the woods each winter, thirty to one hundred in a camp. For these men, far from home and church privileges, there is a great work to be done. I meet many fine young men in these camps, among them some who, coming from the East and not finding employment, are forced to the camps for the winter, and more than once have I seen tears run down their cheek during meetings as they thought of their home and friends far away. This summer I shall try to build a little church at Nickerson, where, for the three hundred men at a large sawmill and a little village, there is no church nearer than twenty miles, but two saloons running wide open night and day, Sunday being their busiest time. The men having no place to go, gather around the saloons, and thus the Sabbath is desecrated.

"May God direct some kind friends, reading this, to come to my assistance, that we may be able to build God's house. There is room here for many ministers. Dear reader, pray that God may lead his servants into this great work." The forests have been called "God's first temples," and in their majestic silences, men living close to nature's heart, apart from city temptations and distractions, seem exceptionally open to Gospel influences which go away with them.

A LOGGING CAMP.

Gentleness and Wit.

Prof. Adam Hendershott, well-known and well-beloved in his city for his unfailing gentleness and his readiness with the soft answer that turneth away wrath, while on his way to see a friend, requested the conductor to transfer him at the proper station. Before this station was reached he saw his friend from the window, and rose at the next stop, when the conductor challenged him with great rudeness, telling him that he could not change cars there and to go back to his seat. The professor, between signalling his friend outside and explaining to the irate conductor, who was not attending closely, did not make himself understood by the latter, and the conductor snapped out, "Here, you old jay! don't I tell you you can't change cars at this station?" His habit of gentleness preserved the professor's temper, and he asked, "But I can change my mind at this station, can't I?" in a manner that in a single moment turned the laugh of a car full of passengers on the conductor, who could not help joining in the general merriment himself.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Equal Shares in the Home—Little Lies and Their Dangers—Book Borrowers.

I AM uncertain how to advise one of my readers who tells me that her husband and herself have been working for a long time to secure a home—a house and plot. Each holds an equal share in it. The wife has paid by her own earnings for her part in this property. The husband is now trying to induce her to sign her half over to him, because he fancies it will look better in the eyes of the community if he shall be the sole owner. Also, he desires to exchange this home, which is yet not quite paid for, for a farm of forty acres. The farm is a very desirable one if the two can agree to buying it. The house they now reside in is in a pleasant thriving town. The pair are accustomed to town life: the farm life would be to them entirely new. It is an unsolved problem as yet whether they would like the loneliness of the farm; whether they would do as well to go there as to stay where they are. Knowing nothing of the laws which in your State, my friend, regulate the property rights of married women, I cannot advise you definitely as to what you should better do. I think you would best take the advice of some legal friend in whom you can place confidence, or that of your own relations; but simply speaking as one woman to another, I certainly think you would be foolish, unless you see some very good reason for it, to give up your share of a home which you have paid for by your own separate earnings. Can you not persuade your husband, in case you decide upon the exchange of property, to let you have an equal share in the farm? It is a great pity when questions of this kind arise between married people. Money should never be allowed to be an entering wedge of dissention and trouble. Your interests are identical; you have a common right in the home in which you both live; and if you have children, they equally will look to you to be cared for, educated and brought up in the best way. Can you not pray over this matter? Talk it over in all kindness and come to some amicable decision.

Please remember that the change from the town to which you are accustomed will be very great; that you may not like the country; also, that a woman accustomed to city life and conveniences often finds the routine of the farmer's wife and the necessarily hard work very oppressive. Think it all over well before you arrive at any decision. From something you say, I judge that you fancy the farm would be better for your husband. Weigh that, too.

ALICE DAPHNE.—Your question as to whether in any circumstance a person is justified in telling a falsehood, opens up a large subject for discussion. In your case you are slightly under the required age which would enable you to become a student at a certain institution, and the temptation is very great to overstep the limits of truth, declaring yourself older than you are, thus to gain a year in your preparatory work. It seems to you, if I read your letter correctly, that the end in this case would justify the means, and that as time is all important, and you are very anxious to be in a position to earn your own living, that you would be doing very little harm in simply giving your age as somewhat older than you are.

Cases like this do involve hardship to individuals; but, presumably, those who set the age limit, have had a good reason for doing so, and in no circumstances is it excusable or even expedient for one to vary a hair's breadth from the absolute truth. It is an old saying that one lie obliges the teller of it to speak half a dozen more, and that before he or she knows it, the situation becomes terribly complicated; but this is not all. The possibility of one's telling a falsehood in any circumstances shows that the character is wanting in perfect integrity or wholeness. I have seen a very beautiful diamond which had lost a great deal of its value because the eye of an expert had found in it a slight flaw. A person who deviates from the truth in the slightest degree has thus produced a flaw in her character. It is something like the little speck in fruit, which shows the beginning of decay. Having once persuaded yourself to tell what is not true, you will find it easier the second time to deviate from the truth for some fancied reason or other. I must advise you to give up this year now in question to other work, or to such preparation as you can make at home, and then to enter college when the next year comes around, able to look the faculty and yourself and God in the face, assured that you are standing on a firm and solid basis of complete sincerity.

ANOTHER FRIEND writes, saying: "I feel like thanking you personally for your words about books and book borrowers. I have always taken great pleasure in lending my books; but I am sorry to say my experience has been similar to yours. A number of years ago I bought a beautiful volume which I had long desired to own, and thinking it would give a neighbor pleasure, I lent it to him. As time passed and the book was not returned, I referred to it, but my friend still kept the book.

He finally died, and the family moved away, taking my book with them. It was six or seven years before I got my property back. I have similar experiences about other books. I now have a printed form which I paste in my books:

THE STORY OF A LOOKING-GLASS.

... How its Refining Influence Resulted in a Transformation in ... the Lisby Household.

"A NEW lookin' glass? Why! you hain't broke yours have you, Huldah?" and Miss Jane Roadhouse looked anxiously into the room, visions of death and disaster floating through her mind as she thought of the awful consequences likely to follow such a prophetic accident.

"No, I hain't broke mine. The truth is, I bought this one for Nelly Lisby, to pay her for helpin' me to wash comfo'tables last week. Ain't it a nice one?" and she held it up admiringly, its polished surface reflecting with accuracy every detail of Miss Jane's prim attire, from her faded brown hair, combed severely back from her face to the stiffly starched white apron, tied with long narrow strings that hung nearly to the bottom of her dress.

"Huh! I should think you might have paid her in something that would have done her some good," criticised that precise personage, looking with suspicious eyes into the glittering thing. "Why, they're poor as poverty, Huldah. Nellie hain't a second dress to her back. Shoes or a dish-apron would be more like. A body can live without lookin' glasses."

"I s'pose they can; but I mean to do it just the same, Jane, if they be as poor as Job's turkey. I s'pose they be; but I can't help that. If I should buy Nellie a dress, she'd prob'ly make it a shirt waist with the skirt of it draggin' down over her hips, showin' a dirty streak of white for a connectin' link between 'em. Maybe there'd be a safety pin to hold 'em together in front, where she could see it, but that would be all. I think it would be a real charity to give the child a lookin' glass so she could 'see herself as others see her,' as the old sayin' goes.

"She'd maybe catch a glimpse once in a while of them great, gapin' rips in the heels of her shoes, that ought to have been sewed up long ago; and like as not she'd find out some way to fix her hair so it wouldn't always be drigglin' down her back.

"I hain't much to give away, but I believe in makin' what I have got go as far as possible; and I don't see what I could give the child that would be a greater help to her than a good, true lookin' glass," and Mrs. Huldah Cramer nodded emphatically at her angular neighbor, Miss Jane Roadhouse, who shook her head in evident disapproval.

"I don't believe in encouragin' vanity, Huldah. Girl's are all vain enough without any encouragement now-a-days. The most they think of is prinkin' and perkin, before a lookin' glass, and I think, for my part, that 'twould be better if there wasn't such a thing in the world. As Elder Symus said last night to prayer-meetin', 'vanity, vanity, all is vanity,' and I think, Huldah, you ain't exactly livin' up to your Christian privileges, or settin' a good example, when you lead a poor girl like Nellie Lisby into temptation," and Miss Jane adjusted her big, green gingham sunbonnet, and putting on her long-wristed black mitts, departed in virtuous indignation.

"I s'pose now vanity hain't got nothin' to do with Jane Roadhouse's stickin her head into that hot, stuffy sunbonnet where there can't a breath, nor a smitch o' wind or sunshine creep in to put a little healthy tan in her peaked, white face, nor them black worsted mitts, the same as she's worn winter and summer ever since as a girl she displayed the whitest hands of any girl in Hornby," she mused, watching the prim figure retreating around the corner.

"There's vanity and there's proper self respect, and it's hard sometimes to draw the line between 'em exactly where it ought to be drawed, I s'pose. Anyhow I think a lookin' glass of one kind or another is a good thing for most of us, if it was make good use of it. I think it clearly shows us a good many things we never would have found out without it," and Mrs. Huldah Cramer wiped a speck of dust from the polished surface of the mirror and replaced it in its numerous wrappings of paper, writing Nellie Lisby's name on the outer covering. Going to the door she called Lafayette Lindsay, her "help," who was just at this point busying himself over the construction of an automatic cover to the swill barrel, which should open and shut of itself, obviating the necessity of occasionally fishing out the stiffened remains of venturesome spring pullets, and hens of an inquiring turn of mind, whenever he, Lafayette, in his haste, forgot to drop the cover, incurring thereby the displeasure of his mistress at what she termed his "shiftlessness."

Lafayette considered himself a born inventor, and although but fourteen years of age, was always constructing labor-saving devices, which, however, usually failed of their intended use in some little important point, which invariably brought him into disfavor.

It was, therefore, with a certain degree of impatience that he dropped his tools and prepared to deliver the package Mrs. Cramer intrusted to his care with injunctions to "be dreadful careful of it," and to deliver it into "Nellie's own hands."

"A lookin' glass. Huh! I wonder if she'll see that gob of m'lasses I slapped behind 'er ear when she was t' our house. I'll warrant it's there yet," he soliloquized.

"Here's somethin' Mis' Cramer sent ye," he said, peering in at an open door, where a dirty baby sat on a grimy floor, spatting its bare little feet into a cool, brownish puddle of water that had come zigzaging its way across the warped boards from the wash tub, where the week's wash remained unrubbed; and watching a bold chicken that had ventured in from the yard to snatch a piece of bread from his own chubby fist.

Seeing no other occupants, Lafayette advanced into the room, scuffing his feet by way of attracting attention. No one appearing, however, he laid his parcel on a chair; then a brilliant thought struck him; he undid the wrappings, and selecting a large nail from his pockets he drove it securely into the wall between the two front windows, and taking the mirror hung it up by its long scarlet cord.

"Wish I had time I'd make a contrivance t' raise it up, 'r let it down 'thout takin' it off the nail," he thought, then fearing, lest the family should return and frustrate his intentions of surprising them, he silently withdrew and hastened homeward.

The baby on the floor gazed with fascinated eyes on the other baby, who stared straight down at her from the mysterious brown frame between the windows. "Go way," she cried, striking at the stranger with her dingy little hand. Then as the naughty new baby struck back at her she struck up such a wail of anger that Nellie who was hunting eggs in the old shed, came hurrying in at the back door.

At the threshold she stopped short and stared with wondering eyes. Where had the great glittering thing come from? She looked about the room but no one was in sight. Only a pile of wrappings, one of which bore the name of "Nellie Lisby."

Who could have brought it, and was it really meant for her? She had always longed for a looking-glass; but there never had been one in her home before that she could remember. She went nearer and touched with caressful fingers the polished frame. She would protect it from the flies. She knew just how to construct a tissue paper drape such as Mrs. Wallace had over her own.

Was that really her—that untidy girl with the smudge of black over her eye? She flushed guiltily as she remembered that she had forgotten to wash her face. She had expected no one to come, and she was going nowhere, and so the morning ablutions had been omitted. She looked curiously down at her hands. Yes, they were as much in need of a bath as her face.

Over in the corner stood the wash-bench, holding a rusty tin wash-basin and a cracked bowl of brown soft soap beside it; and with vigorous energy she scrubbed her rosy cheeks, wiping them upon the extreme edge of the soiled towel, realizing for the first time in her life the need of a cleaner one. From a crack between two boards in the wall she took a remnant of a coarse comb and began the arduous duty of combing out her tangled locks, which operation was usually neglected when she expected to remain at home. Laboriously she wove it into a long shining plait, which she tied with a faded bit of ribbon, then paused to observe the effect with a sigh of satisfaction.

Over her shoulder she could see little Liza. The dried tears had washed little furrows over her dirty cheeks, and she had laid her head with childish weariness upon the sticky sleeve of her little cotton frock. Hastily taking her up from the floor, Nellie bathed the flushed wee face and straightened out the tangled baby curls that twined themselves anew about the fair forehead.

"How pretty she is," she thought, holding her up to see the rosy baby in the glass who laughed and clapped her hands gleefully.

Over the grimy floor still strayed the inquisitive chicken with another who had come to keep him company. There in the corner were the cobs where Ben had been shelling seed corn in the morning. She had not thought it worth while to clean up the litter. On the ash-strewn hearth still sat the unwashed spider, that had been used in preparing breakfast, and on the table a few dirty dishes were scattered about just as they had been used at the morning meal. A pan of uncovered bread dough sat on the oven and one of the chickens hopping inquiringly upon the fireless stove, began pecking at the sticky mass. All this was reflected in the tell-tale face of the mirror, and although she had looked upon similar scenes day after day it seemed suddenly to impress itself upon her brain with a distinctness that brought with it a rebuke.

Hastily tying little Liza into a rickety high-chair she went vigorously to work, looking into the shining face of the mirror for encouragement and approval at the accomplishment of each arduous task.

"Land alive! Is anybody here?" asked her mother, anxiously peering around as she came in at the door. The clean hearth, singing tea-kettle, freshly scrubbed floors, and smiling tidy face of the girl holding the sleeping baby, struck her as something out of the ordinary course of affairs, and she looked curiously about for the cause, when catching a reflection of the sparkling fire blaze, she turned her eyes to the opposite wall.

There reproduced in life-like counterpart, the pleasant picture smiled up into her face. Only the untidy form of a ragged unkempt woman in the foreground marred its genial spirit.

"It's Mis' Cramer's writin'" she decided, as she examined the neatly folded wrappings, which Nellie had opened for her inspection. "She's like as not made you a present."

"Hold on there! clean your feet, you youngums," she called, as the rest of the Lisbys paused at the door in evident wonderment. "An' jest take this wash-dish out to the pump, an' see of you kin find out what it's for. Land know! a body'd think you'd never seen one afore by the looks of ye," she added, tying a clean apron over her untidy dress.

Searching through a drawer full of tumbled garments, she brought to light a seldom used faded red table cloth which she spread carefully over the table, setting it neatly with dishes from the newly papered shelves and stepping back now and then to observe the effect in the approving countenance of the home missionary.

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

AN ABUSED WORD.

WE are often reminded by quotation of Madame Boland's splendid saying, made on her way to the scaffold. "O! Liberty, what crimes are committed in thy name!" There are, however, other words and sentiments as badly abused as "liberty." One of the unwritten clauses in the code of honor preserved among German army officers is: An officer who permits himself to be insulted by a civilian, without immediately challenging him, will be dismissed." If the insulter belongs to the classes who are not wont to fight duels, then the officer must immediately draw his sword and cut him down or shoot him on the spot with any other weapon. These laws are nowhere to be found written, but they are strictly obeyed. At Augsburg, an officer in private clothes recently received a blow on the face, without having given any indication of offence, from an impudent business man. It chanced that the officer had a revolver with him. He, however, made no use of it, nor did he challenge the clerk, whom he regarded as unworthy of meeting him in a duel. Instead of taking either of these steps, he had recourse to the Courts of Justice, with the result that his assailant was sentenced to twelve days' imprisonment. Thereupon the Regimental Officers' Court of Honor assembled, and compelled the officer to hand in his resignation, because he had not adequately upheld the "honor" of an officer's rank. How far removed is their idea of honor from that of Jesus Christ. The Christian idea is that it is what a man does, and not what his enemy does to him that affects his honor.

Necessity of Judgment to Come.

The death of Tai Won Kun, father of the King of Korea, which recently occurred, relieves the world of the presence of one of the wickedest villains that ever cursed the earth.

He was Regent during the minority of the King, who inherited the throne from a childless uncle, and ruled with the most brutal despotism for a quarter of a century. It was while he was at the head of affairs that we had our little war with Korea, which resulted in opening the country to foreigners. He was the foe of all forms of progress, and particularly hostile to missionaries and modern improvements. He murdered thousands of people who stood in his way, or refused to be led to his will, and it took three years for the government to get rid of him after the King became of age. Twice he was the prime mover in plots to assassinate his own son, and three times attempted the assassination of the Queen. The last attempt was successful in 1898. This monster lived in a palace a few miles outside of the capital city, surrounded by a double guard, one of his own, in whom he had confidence, to protect him against the vengeance of those he had injured, and another provided by the government to prevent him from leaving the palace to injure anybody else. He seems to have died a natural death, and it is strange, for no other man on earth was so viciously hated. It is impossible to reconcile a case like that with a just government of the world, except on the basis of a future judgment, as foretold in the Bible, when men shall be rewarded according to their deeds.

Hiring Another Man for our own Meanness.

The story has recently been told of a lieutenant and two privates in the Confederate army during the war of the Rebellion, who were detailed to search a certain house for a Union spy. After completing the search of the first floor, they crept upstairs and looked over the second story.

In the upper hall there was a ladder leading to a trap-door in the garret. The door was swinging down, and it was evident that some one had climbed up to the ceiling. The lieutenant said that the garret would have to be searched. He told a private to go first. The private refused absolutely. He said it was certain death and if he was a soldier he did not expect to have his head smashed open simply to look for a spy. He said he would take his punishment at the camp, but he would not stick his head through the trap-door. The second private was told to close the swinging door. He refused. His reason was that he had a wife and children at home, and it was not bravery to stick his head in the fire. Without a word the lieutenant climbed the ladder and poked his head in the doorway. It was very dark and he expected every moment to be killed. He remained there a minute and then came down, closing the door after him. He told the privates that he would not report their cowardice to the Captain, but during the remainder of the war those two privates were the bitterest enemies the lieutenant ever had. They could not seemingly forget that he had witnessed their cowardice, and they hated him because he had not shown the same weakness they had. It is hard for us to forgive anybody that we have done an injury to, or when we have been guilty of mean conduct in their presence. On the other hand, if we have done a kindness to any one, or exhibited to them a noble front, our hearts go out to them. The people who find it hard to love their enemies will find it easy enough if they set themselves to work to do their enemies good and be helpful to them.

The Danger of Insignificant Enemies.

It is said that there is no place in the country where mosquitoes are so bad as on the Yukon River, in Alaska. They not only attack men and overwhelm them, but they drive the moose, deer and caribou up the mountains to the snowline, where these animals prefer not to be in berry time. They kill dogs, and even the big brown bear sometimes succumbs to them.

Bears come down to the river in the early fall to get some of the salmon that are abundant in the streams at that season. If bruin runs foul of a swarm of mosquitoes and has not his wits about him, his day has come. The insects will alight all over him. His fur protects his body, but his eyes, ears and nose will soon be swollen up and bleeding, and unless he gets into a river or a strong wind, he will be driven mad and blind to wander about helplessly until he starves to death. These mosquitoes are like many small trials and difficulties that beset our human life. There are many people who seem to be nerved up to face some great lion of opposition, who go down before a swarm of petty annoyances. Many an overthrown man did not meet death at the paw of a lion, but was nibbled to death by mosquitoes. It takes a wise Christian spirit to fight the mosquito-like perplexities of daily life with success.

Childhood in a Cell.

There was a sad scene the other morning in the Cleveland police court. A husband had called in regard to his wife and child. The wife had been arrested on the street for intoxication, and the little four-year-old boy had been taken with her to the jail, and had spent the night in her cell.

The woman came into court holding the sweet little child by the hand. The eyes of the little boy were red with weeping. The husband was so indignant and outraged at his wife's drunkenness that he at first refused to pay her fine, and was determined to let her be sent to jail, but the little boy went over to his father and pleaded in childish lisps for "papa to help mamma and bring her home," that the man at last relented. A sight like that suggests the horrible work of the liquor traffic in blighting the lives of little children from their very birth.

God's Crown Jewels.

It is said that the Empress of Austria is a great lover of precious stones. The Austrian collection is the finest collection of jewels in Europe.

The jeweled arms are quite magnificent, and among the most noticeable of them is the lance of St. Maurice, blazing with precious stones, and containing in the handle the most authentic relic—a nail from the true cross; while the regalia of Charlemagne, taken from his tomb at Aix-la-Chapelle, is another valuable item. But the Empress's own jewels are almost equally magnificent. She possesses the largest emerald in the world, weighing 3,000 carats. Another, nearly as large, is hollowed out as a bonboniere; and one of her prettiest ornaments is a watch composed of one dark emerald hanging on a chain of emeralds and diamonds, which was the gift from the late Shah of Persia when he visited Europe some years ago. The King of Kings also has his jewels, that shine like stars from his crown. They are the souls of those whom he has redeemed, and who have yielded him their hearts, to be polished until fit to adorn the King. We are assured that of all the beautiful things in the universe he has chosen ransomed human souls to be his jewels.

The Frail Tenure of Human Power.

There was a strange auction in London the other day. Three mummies of people who once had soldiers at their command, and wore crowns of royal power, were sold at auction thousands of miles away from the scenes of their former glory. The three mummies were the mortal remains of a Babylonian Queen and two other potentates:

The female mummy was once Alpina, Queen of Babylon, wife of Seleucus; while the second was Ptolemy II., Philadelphus, son of even the greater Ptolemy I. And the third was Antiochus Soter, King of Assyria. Letters certifying to these facts from Dr. Birch of the British Museum, and other famous scholars, accompanied the mummies. They were finally all sold together for seventy-five guineas. Such a sight illustrates how frail a tenure any man has on human power in this world. Surely the Bible is right when speaking of our physical existence, we are compared to the flower of the field that flourishes in the morning, but withers in the afternoon. All physical life should be used as a stairway toward the higher life of the soul. Our brief earthly epoch is only a school-time for the free life of the spirit to which we are coming.

Alum Endangers the Heart.

Many people are suffering from some form of heart disease who have no idea of the cause of it.

It has been discovered that the use of baking powder made from burnt alum coagulates the blood rapidly. This interferes with its free flow through the arteries and valves of the heart. Formerly alum was used as a specific for children's croup, but, owing to its liability from this cause to produce heart failure, physcians no longer employ it. With the overwhelming medical testimony as to the poisonous and dangerous effects of alum when permitted to contaminate our food, the use of an alum baking powder merely to save a few pennies in price, is inexcusable, almost criminal.

Where alum powders are not branded as such, nor their sale prohibited by law, it is better to avoid the use of any new or doubtful brand of powder until it has been analyzed. The purity of all baking powders may be suspected if they are sold at a price lower than that of the best standard brands. In view of the recent serious case of poisoning of a whole family near Logansport, Indiana, from the use of alum powder, the greatest care in the purchase of a baking powder in order to be sure that it is pure and wholesome is imperative upon every housekeeper.

Everyone knows the Royal to be a first-class cream of tartar baking powder and if consumers insist upon having this brand they will be sure of a pure, healthful article which has been shown by the U. S. Government tests to be the very best of the cream of tartar brands.

A Mother's Story

From generation to generation the taint of impure blood is transmitted, and in the same way the beneficial blood-purifying effects of Hood's Sarsaparilla are spread through families. If the life stream is purified at its source or immediately when evidence of impurity first appears, much suffering will be avoided. The beneficent work of Hood's Sarsaparilla for young women, wives, mothers, and little ones of all ages has won the highest praise, and is another gem in its crown as America's Greatest Medicine. For illustration of this thought please read this letter:

"The end of one of my fingers began to itch and soon there was a collection of watery blisters under the skin. In a short time the blisters came to the surface and broke, discharging a watery substance and the flesh became inflamed around my finger nail. I was told that the trouble was salt rheum, and was given a prescription and began taking medicine. I found it hurt my nursing baby and stopped taking it. The disease then appeared around the nails on every one of my fingers and my suffering was terrible. I couln not attend my boy and was advised to wean him, but I hesitated about this as he was punny and his digestion was poor. At this time I concluded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla and Hood's Pills In a very short time my hands were getting better. I kept on with Hood's Sarsaparilla and my hands continued to improve and now they are perfectly healed. My little boy is strong and healthy. Hood's Sarsaparilla has given me strength to do my housework." MRS. PROSPER ANTOINE, Box 23, Justus, Pennsylvania.

TRIUMPHS ACHIEVED.

Things Our Denominations have Accomplished. Eph. 5: 25-27; Ps. 87: 1-7.

One of the most convincing proofs of the divine origin of Christianity is the progress it has made, in spite of its divisions and in spite of the mistakes and misapprehensions of its leaders. That there must be enormous vitality in its principles, is evident from the fact that denominations based on a mere fragment of the truth, which is almost smothered in accretions of error, thrive and grow. Every denomination has its trophies of victory to show. It has met some want of the people and has reached men who would probably have been reached by no other means. And this consideration is, after all, a true basis for the tolerance that is growing among us. When we see a Roman Catholic kneeling before the crucifix, we pity him and wish that he had a clearer and truer idea of what Christ's mission really was; but when we see him renewing his struggle with temptation with revived strength after his prayer, we are thankful that he has obtained power in some way. To some, the noise and the methods of the Salvation Army are repellent, but the Army has planted the truth in hearts which were unmoved by the churches and for this we are thankful, by whatever means it is attained. In reviewing the victories achieved by the denomination with which we are individually connected, we have a right to rejoice over them and to be thankful that God has used it for the extension of Christ's kingdom. That is the essential consideration which should wholly eliminate from our rejoicing any disparagement of other denominations, or any sense of rivalry with them. We are comrades with every man who has taken on him the name of Christ and should be glad at every victory gained by any division of the great army. Whether the victory is in heathen lands or in our own, in the Sunday School or in the slums of our cities, the conversion of souls is a cause for rejoicing no matter who has the honor of effecting it. To the great Head of the Church belongs all the glory, and to him we look for the wisdom, strength and energy to occupy the ground still unsown with the Gospel seed.

CLEANSING BLOOD.

A Mysterious Doctrine Proved by Revelation and Experience. Heb. 9: 13, 14; 10: 1-7.

The mystery of the cleansing blood remains a mystery in spite of all the sermons that have been preached and all the books that have been written upon it. Nothing can ever convince the reason of an intelligent man that there is justice in the innocent suffering in the place of the guilty. No one can ever clearly understand why the shedding of the blood of Christ makes it easier for God to forgive sin. All kinds of illustration have been used, and all kinds of argument, from the crude idea of substitution up to the nobler idea of the sublime revelation of the love of God, but human reason revolts against it. The sinner asks why, if God is willing to forgive sin, he does not forgive freely, but demands that one who is innocent of sin should suffer and die in order that he may forgive. Thus we shall understand hereafter, and we must be content to wait. But it is undoubtedly true. It is stated in the Bible in the most explicit terms, and with so much emphasis and frequency that it cannot be explained away. Besides this, our experience confirms the doctrine. Multitudes of men, realizing that they are sinners, have sought forgiveness in every conceivable way. Some have practised self-torture in their anxiety, but by that path no peace ever comes. Nor can the intelligent man rely with confidence on the mercy of God. He knows that the difference between right and wrong is eternal, and that he must be condemned in spite of any mercy that may be extended to him. But once let the doctrine of salvation through the blood of Christ be preached to him and thoroughly grasped and he feels safe. He has in his own soul a conviction, that nothing can shake, that his sins are forgiven. He cannot understand it, but he knows that it is so. He accepts the assurance of the Gospel, and his soul enters into rest and peace. He starts to live a holy life in the profound conviction that the past has been blotted out by the blood, and he has courage for his struggle against new transgressions. So God's servants preach Christ, "to the Jew a stumbling-block and to the Gentile foolishness, but to them that believe, whether Jews or Gentiles, the power of God and the wisdom of God."

PATIENCE.

A Grace Within Reach of Every Christian. 1. Peter 2: 20; Luke 21: 19; Romans 5: 3.

Here is something for which the young Christian often pines, something which one, speaking with authority, says, "is acceptable with God." The question is often asked, "What can I do to show my gratitude to God? It is not possible for me to go as a missionary, nor to preach the Gospel at home, nor to give large sums to charity; I wish there was something I could do to prove that I am thankful for all Christ has done for me." Here is one answer: Manifest patience in all circumstances; "this is acceptable with God." On the face of it, it does not seem much of an offering, but whether it is great or small, the fact that it is acceptable with him should be sufficient for us. Whatever will please him we should gladly render.

Patience may prove, however, to be a more difficult attainment when we try to practise it, than appears on the surface. It is needed in so many circumstances, that the demand is universal and continuous. It is needed in sickness. The weariness produced by days of pain and nights of sleeplessness, begets an irritability which is trying to the patient and to those who attend to him. Patience is needed in the home, where frequently some annoying habit on the part of some other member of the family irritates and exasperates one. It is needed when our plans are thwarted, when hope is deferred, when we are misunderstood, when some obstinate person resists an obvious benefit, when some weak brother falls under the power of temptation who we had hoped was delivered, when we are unjustly accused, when a stupid blunder of our own, or of some one else has caused loss, and in a thousand other ways. Anyone who sets himself earnestly and conscientiously to cultivate the grace of patience, will not lack opportunities for exercise, and will need patience in the very effort to attain patience. Yet the effort is worth making, for, "this is acceptable with God."

We can easily understand why it is acceptable with him. It is a standing proof of his power. Every one who knows himself knows that patience is not a natural growth. The natural course under injury or insult is resentment; under suffering, to repine; under annoyance, to be angry. If, therefore, we find a man uniformly cheerful, forbearing, obliging, we admire him, and wonder how he attained such superiority. Here is the opportunity for honoring God. As a physician gains new patients through the testimony of people whom he has cured, and as a lawyer who has brought one client triumphantly out of trouble gets new clients, so people who see what God has done for one of his children may seek his help for themselves. The patient man shows how the power of Christ can transform human nature; he is a living example of grace, because he shows the possession of qualities which are difficult of attainment.

Thus the humblest Christian may render an offering acceptable to God. And as is the case with other things which are done with that motive, the attainment is a blessing to himself and others. This grace of patience saves the wear and tear of soul, it relieves us of the misery of fretfulness; it soothes the wounded spirit; it keeps us out of quarrels, and it adds immensely to the power for work. The strength of mind, which neither insult nor injury can disturb, leaves its possessor free for the service which an angry, or fretful man is incapable of rendering. So valuable is the attainment that the apostle counts it cheap, even at the cost of affliction: "We glory in tribulation, knowing that tribulation worketh patience."

WAR BROUGHT SUFFERING.

The People of Crete and Thessaly Prostrated by Greece's Recent Disastrous War.

MR. KAISER, of Austin, Tex., a reader of this journal some time ago sent five dollars to be forwarded through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the relief of the Greek sufferers in the late war with Turkey. The gift was duly transmitted to the Hon. W. W. Rockhill, United States Minister at Athens. Mr. Rockhill has just acknowledging the contribution enclosing a most courteous letter from the Chamberlain of Her Majesty, Queen Olga, conveying the thanks of the Queen for the gift to her suffering subjects. This letter we forwarded to Mr. Kaiser.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has just received under date of February 25, a letter from which the following is a partial translation, from G. Typaldo Kosak, President, and B. Patrikios, Secretary-General, of the Greek Red Cross:

"We have the honor to advise you of the receipt of the sum of $5, which you have been good enough to send to our Society through the medium of His Majesty, the Queen of Greece. In thanking you for this aid we believe it our duty to place briefly before you the exceptional situation in Greece at the present moment. * * * The woes of which Crete and Thessaly were about one year ago the theatre have proved to the expatriation of a great part of the Christian population of those provinces to the autonomous provinces of Greece. This emigration tends not to increase than to diminish, while those who have remained in or who have returned to Crete and Thessaly endure all sorts of hardships. The resources of public and private charity in Greece are being exhausted in the efforts to relieve the suffering. There is pressing need of food, of clothing, of medicine, of clothing, of alimentary substances, condensed milk, etc., not only to succor the multitude of grown-up people in want, but especially to save from death the generation of Cretan and Thessalian children, now in abject misery."

Accompanying the letter was a photograph which tells more eloquently than words, of the results of war upon the people and industry of Crete and Thessaly. Many years will be required for the process of recuperation to the condition of comparative prosperity which prevailed before the war. Meanwhile the women and children have been the greatest sufferers.

The Volunteers' Anniversary.

THE second anniversary of the Volunteers of America, which was celebrated on the evening of April 4, at Carnegie Music Hall, in New York City, was an occasion of unusual interest. The great hall was crowded, boxes, as well as floor and galleries, being occupied. Many prominent clergymen and philanthropists, among whom were Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, the Rev. Dr. R. Huntington, Charles D. Strickler, Miss Livingston and Dr. Thompson, showed their interest in the Volunteers by their presence. The stage picture was effective. Like a flower-bed in the centre was a group of little Volunteer Sunday school maidens in white dresses, with sashes of red, white and blue. Behind them sat the Hope Hall boys, once Sunbeams of Sing Sing, Auburn or Clinton prisons. At the front of the stage were Commander and Mrs. Booth, surrounded by their officers. The rest of the platform was occupied by the Headquarters' Band, by a number of uniformed Volunteers and friends and patrons of the organization. Over all floated the red and stripes and the white standard of the Volunteers.

The meeting opened with a prayer by Commander Booth and the singing of America. Messages of good will were read from William McKinley, Governor of New Jersey; John Wanamaker and other prominent Americans. In a brief address, the Commander reviewed the progress of the Volunteers during the past two years, and expressed his gratitude to God for the advance they had made and the success they had been able to accomplish. With deep feeling, he thanked God for the recovery of his wife and her presence again among the Volunteers. Mrs. Booth, still weak from her late illness, was greeted with enthusiasm when she arose to address the crowd. Her remarks were chiefly concerning her prison work. She said that she did not appeal for sympathy for her "boys" because they were deserving of punishment. "My little son," she said "was recently suffering the penalty of some offense he had committed, and my little daughter was greatly concerned over his distress and insisted that something should be done about it; that somebody should go to him and put their arms about him and comfort him. 'But he has been naughty,' she was told. 'O! I know all that,' she said, 'but he's my brother, and he's crying in the next room.' That is the nature," said Mrs. Booth, "of my interest in the convict. He's my brother, and he's crying in the next room. Whenever you hear that I am visiting any State, and you desire to write to me and are ignorant of my address, you may be safe in addressing me at the State prison." A ripple of laughter followed her assertion that she spent most of her time in State prisons. A banner was presented to her for the State prison, Joliet, Ill., where the Volunteer Prison League numbers 500. Gospel hymns were sung by the little girls, the Hope Hall boys, by the Volunteers and the audience. A number of interesting talks were made, and a collection of over $1,000 taken up.

A COMMON QUESTION.*

IN regard to prayer, you ask, "Why pray, when the plan of each of our lives was marked out from the beginning, and with God there is no variableness, neither shadow of turning?" Here you sacrifice God and his kindest promises to your philosophy. Who told you that there is any such inflexible plan? Nature is full of mysterious facts; and we accept these undeniable facts, without pretense of having fathomed their mystery. Enough for us that we can in like manner believe whatever God pleases to tell us of himself, and of his rewarding prayer.

You ask, "Why not merely pray for strength to bear whatever comes?" And I might answer, On your ground, why pray for that? since it is all ordained; all down in the plan. Your very question betrays how forlorn and disheartening is unbelief. To all such questionings, my answer is: God says "Pray!" and I will. Why, even Zeno may instruct you. He was the prince of your school of fatalists. When his servant stole his silver, and pleaded in his master's words, "I was fated to do it," the prompt response of the philosopher was, "Aye, and I was fated to flog you for it."

Do you remember the day you first came to me? It would not surprise me to learn that while you, uncertain, hesitating, were debating with yourself the question, Shall I call? your friend, who desired you to call, was praying God to sway your mind to the wise conclusion. Is it difficult to believe that God heard that prayer, and gave that weight to the suggestion which offered themselves—nay, which God offered to your mind—which prevailed on you to come? Remember, that if it was foreordained that you should come, it was equally foreordained that your coming should be secured by the prayer of your friend. So you see that temporal results may easily come in answer to prayer: just as easily as spiritual gifts.

Here is my conception of prayer: 1. Jesus says, Pray; pray always. He says it to all men. He has the unqualified right to say it; and it is reasonable to believe that he says it most kindly, with solicitude for our welfare. 2. This command is variously received. That is natural. It accords with man's liberty of choice, and freedom of will, and various education. It is not God's design, were it possible to force men to heaven. 3. The Lord gives instructions how to pray. He says, "When ye pray, say, 'Our Father.'" And not only say it, but believe and feel it. Now suppose that your first deep, agonizing cry was not "Give!" but, "Be my Father." What would be the result, think you? Your agonizing entreaty to him to give, may spring from a total and most serious mistake. But if God will only be your Father—which he will delight in being, if you desire it—then will he surely give you, not only what you ask, if his infallible knowledge and care for your happiness prescribes and approves what you ask, but he will give you all things; for all things are yours, when you are Christ's.

Still are you so slow to conceive that your Lord may have a better design, and a larger love, heartily at your service than that which you are asking. Let me illustrate. I had a fiery, passionate, irritable temper. When converted I had an intense desire to be delivered from it. Among the many thoughts of my newlife, was this: I shall surely expect to be rough in the furnace of grace the much dross of which I am conscious. Why if he loved me, did not my Lord deliver me wholly from my evil nature and its corresponding sorrows? The first time I asked him I know I was [illegible] and pious too, in the asking, for I really wished to honor God by an irreproachable temper, by perfect self-control. Now do you know of any experience more fitted to develop the truest, purest, strongest faith in God, than the experience which comes of trusting in an unseen, unheard Friend, not only for all one's needs, but also for time, and place, and manner of his interposition, and none the less when he makes no perceptible response to all my supplications? The very breath of life in true prayer is, "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt."

A Meeting in the East Side Chapel.*

ON a mid-winter Sunday night, a year after that June day in Thornton, Stephen Castle is preaching to a motley crowd in the little downtown chapel. The atmosphere of the room is neither clear nor fragrant. The floors are bare, the pews plain benches, and the speaker stands upon a small platform destitute of a pulpit. Many of the faces before him are hard. In the corner to the right of the platform a choir of a dozen girls is gathered around a cabinet organ. These girls have an air of intelligent self-possession, which shows that some refining influence has been at work among them; nor is this influence far to seek. Among them, as the leader, with the pure brow and clear eye, we remember, sits the wife of Stephen Castle, his joy, the crown of his life, and his spirited co-worker.

While the hymn is being sung, before the sermon, the door opens, and a lady, attended by a maid, enters the chapel. Stephen Castle does not see the stranger as she enters, but she is seen and recognized by one person in the room. There is but one woman who Emily Castle has ever seen whose form and movements have the peculiar grace which marks the newcomer, and although she cannot distinctly see her face beneath its veil, she knows it to be her husband's old friend, Stephanie Loring, now the wife of Lloyd Petersham. She has been married while abroad, and Emily has heard of her recent return to New York, but neither she nor Stephen has met her.

Stepping forward, at the close of the hymn to the edge of the platform, Stephen, with a small Testament in his hand, reads a few verses from the Sermon on the Mount. Hardly has he read the verses when his eye, accustomed now to the rough-hewn type of feature of his chapel hearers, notes that other face, and he knows that after many months he is again face to face with Stephanie. A ray of uncontrollable joy in the recognition crosses his face, but as he goes on to interpret the passage chosen, it is plain that he is neither stimulated nor troubled by her presence. . . . At the close of the service he and Stephanie meet, with a warm clasp of the hand. Emily joins them, and the women meet with unaffected kindness. The lights in the chapel are extinguished, and the three come out together in the frosty street, where a carriage is waiting. For a moment Stephanie pauses on the threshold.

"You will let me say, will you not, how glad I was to know of your marriage? Petersham is the noblest fellow!" Stephen speaks earnestly.

"Yes, we care for each other very truly. . . . You will come to the house and bring your wife, I hope. She is a beautiful woman."

It was kind of you to seek us out away down here. I thank you for coming."

"I wanted to see for myself," she says; "I thought you were mistaken in this hard, hard thing you have done but I find I was the one mistaken You have done well."

"It is much to me to have you say this." Stephen speaks as one deeply moved.

"Yes, I know. It must be so. Once I hurt you. I was cruel, but you forgave me. All that I said then I can unsay now. When I heard you preach to-night, I believed in you and in the Christ you preached. Good-night."

*From Him of the World. By Caroline Atwater Mason. Ben's Home-Coming.*

I turned, and there riz up before me
A man lookin' some like a tramp,
Tho' scared as I was, suthin' told me
He wasn't an aout and aout scamp.
"I'm cold, and tired, and hungry,
Can you give me some supper and bed?"
"I gave our last victuals to Caleb,
And he went away hungry," I said.
"And you?" asked the voice, kinder gentle.
"Well, I ain't sharp-set—not to-night—
Men are apt to be hungry, and Caleb
Didn't know he ate up the last bite."

She gave him the bed of Bennie, her missing boy, and they divided their meagre fare with him when Caleb brought home the "bread and pertaters." Next morning they went to church leaving the guest asleep. When they came back, a great fire crackled on the hearth, the table was spread.

As in old days of comfort,
With cloth of snowy white;
With the dear old-fashioned china,
And the tea-pot silver bright.

The best of all was that the table "was surely laid for three," and that the third—the tramp—was Ben, the lost boy whom God had brought back to them.

Stomach Trouble

Stomach trouble may mean inability to retain food or to digest it; nausea, pain after eating, fullness inordinate craving for food, or entire lack of appetite. If you have stomach trouble, you will be interested in this letter from a man who had it and was cured by

Ayer's Sarsaparilla

"For nine years I suffered from stomach trouble. I tried the aid of the best doctors in vain. One day while waiting a train in Bellaire, O., I picked up a paper with a notice of Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla I got one bottle to try it. It did me so much good that I purchased five more bottles. I took four of them and gained in flesh, my appetite improved, and now I can eat anything. My stomach is all right, thanks to the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—

A Rocky Mountain Poet.

NSON RUDD, of Canon City, Colo., now in his seventy-eighth year, has lived among the Rocky Mountains for fifty years, and is much esteemed by many who know him as a scholarly recluse and a man of excellent Christian character. He is a poet, too, and his verses have been read with admiration by many critics in the far Western States. Two of his shorter productions are given below:

ANSON RUDD.

HE GRAND CANON OF THE ARKANSAS.

nen time was young and people few,
nd earth and all its scenes were new, nd this Grand Gorge was scarcely then re than a fairy-peopled glen;
nd this mad stream a brooklet mild, at wantonly its hours beguiled merrily tossing up its spray sparkle in the sunbeam's ray.
ut Time, who never sleeps nor drones, ill bent on labor, bared his bones, nd dug this awe-inspiring chasm,
o give the tender a spasm.

WONDER MATERIALIZED.

his thy handiwork, O God! or has e demon, crazed, from Pandemonium's hall, ought these fantastic shapes; this depth profound!
se weird, unearthly shadows on the walls this herculean chasm? Or was it rent mighty earthquake's power, deep hidden in sterious depths below? What'ere the cause, e wondrous, awe-inspiring fact remains!
a stand within its gloom with bated breath;
ur vision steals with furtive glance around,
if expecting from some cavern dark see stride forth, majestic in his wrath, e guardian spirit of this mystic place.
tinctively, your vision upwards turns, seek escape from fancy's horrid shapes.
, as you trace the giddy heights above,
ined against the very dome of heaven, nsfixed, you gaze upon the awful scene—nscending all your wild imaginings—
, soul and sense yield to the mystic spell.
ntity's absorbed; your wonder's cloyed;
nconsciously, you shrink within yourself, fade, comparably, to nothingness.

GRAND CANON, COLORADO RIVER.

For His Enemy.

During the Revolution, Miller, a Dunker ler, entered the presence of General shington and besought mercy for one, dman, sentenced to be hanged as a tish spy. "I would like to release dman," said General Washington. "bese he is your friend, but I cannot, even that consideration." "He is not my end," said Miller. Someone explained t Widman had grievously insulted the n who was pleading for him. "Why you plead for him?" Miller was asked.
ller's answer was that Christ bade us love our enemies. Washington, whether he pardoned the man or not, was deeply touched by the simple faith and obedience of the man who was trying to save another because he was his enemy.

Children who Helped Cuba.

Before the closing of the Cuban ports, causing the temporary cessation of relief work, the following interesting letter and also the accompanying photographs were received by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"ST. LOUIS, Mo.

"Herewith find a small offering, sent by the originals of the enclosed pictures. My little girl, Ethel Harris, reading your paper, was so impressed by the sad condition of the little ones in Cuba that she enlisted the sympathy of her friends to get up an entertainment, and we send what they made, hoping it may help swell the amount a little. I tried to get it to you in time for the Easter number, but could not. They are anxiously looking forward to seeing their little faces in your paper. MRS. H. W. HARRIS."

Archaeology in Mexico.

"Dead men tell no tales" is an old adage that time is proving false. The excavator's shovel is continually wresting secrets from the history of the past. Dead men of Pompeii, of Egypt, and Babylonia, have borne strange and positive, if silent, witness, to events of their day; and in the New World, archæologists are seeking in the testimony of buried cities, and dead men, the revelation of America's past, and the origin of the red men who inhabited it when Europe found it. Mr. William Niven has unearthed many pre-historic ruins and relics in the State of Guerrero, Mex., where he has been conducting explorations, and among his most interesting discoveries was a large cave, hermetically sealed, and containing skeletons of a number of men of a pre-historic age. He has also discovered, near Zumpagno del Rio, evidences of a flood, or earthquake, in which many people perished.

The Temple of Angkor-Wat.

The great mystery about Indo-China, says the Singapore Free Press, and one which must ever be insoluble, is the story of the lost race and the vanished civilization of that strange country. The mighty walls of Angkor-Wat, rising in the midst of sparsely populated jungles, remain as the lasting memorial of a great empire which has utterly disappeared and is altogether lost to history. No one will ever know who planned this gigantic temple, or what tyrant hounded on his myriads of people to build up those immense blocks of stone and cover them with the most elaborate of sculptures. Angkor Wat is one of the most astounding monuments in the world, and this forgotten temple was built so as to endure as long as the earth itself, were it not for the irresistably destructive effect of plant-life on the strongest walls that man can raise. This edifice, whose name means "the city monastery," is five miles south of Thom, the Cambodian capital, a ruin as marvelous as Angkor-Wat and likewise in the depth of the Indo-Chinese forest.

Only a very highly civilized and exceedingly wealthy people could have erected Angkor-Wat — a very different race to the Annamite of modern days. The whole nation has disappeared as utterly as the busy myriads who once populated the wastes and solitudes of the ancient Memphis.

Where Prayer Helps.

In these disturbed times the President should have the repeated and earnest prayers of all Christian hearts in the land, that he may be enabled to do the right, in the fear of God, whatever that may mean. The burdens of an executive are severe at all times, but in a season like this are fairly crushing. We doubt not that President McKinley is glad, as was Lincoln, of every prayer offered to strengthen his hands and his heart in the direction of true Christian statesmanship.

Dedicating Tuskegee's New Chapel.

One of the most interesting events that ever occurred in the Black Belt, took place in Tuskegee during the last week in March. This was the dedication of a large and attractive chapel, to which previous mention has been made in these columns. The work was done by the students, two generous New York ladies supplying the necessary means, $20,000. The chapel, one of the finest religious edifices in the South, is the handsomest of the forty-eight buildings on the Tuskegee campus. It supplanted a rude and uncomfortable structure. In the dedication services, the music was a feature of marked and peculiar interest, inasmuch as classical anthems and plantation melodies followed each other, the trained choir of Afro-American voices following the chant, "Oh, be joyful in the Lord, all ye lands," with

> Reign, oh, reign, oh, reign,
> Reign, Master Jesus, reign,
> Reign salvation in my soul,
> Reign, Master Jesus, reign—

in which the vast congregation joined with electrical effect.

> My Lord says there is room enough,
> Room enough, room enough;
> My Lord says there is room enough,
> In the heaven for us all was happily chosen, for black and white, rich and poor, high and low, were gathered together in the new chapel, and perhaps just such a service as this dedication never occurred before, north or south. The first lesson was read by a black elder of Tuskegee; the second by a white Episcopal clergyman of Montgomery, a white Methodist preacher of Tuskegee offered prayer; Rev Dr. W. S. Rainsford of St George's church, New York, an Englishman by birth, was the speaker of the day, in the auditorium sat 1,000 young men and women whose parents had been slaves, the dominating influence was that of Booker T. Washington, born a slave

A Conscientious Physician.

A good true story is told of a San Francisco woman and a doctor with a conscience, says a contemporary. The doctor performed a successful operation for a rich woman, and when asked for his bill, presented one for $50. The lady smiled and said "Do you consider that a reasonable charge considering my circumstances?" The doctor replied: "That is my charge for that operation; your circumstances have nothing to do with it." The lady drew a check for $500 and presented it to him. He handed it back, saying "I cannot accept this. My charge for that operation is $50. "Very well," the lady replied. "Keep the check, and put the balance to my credit." Some months after, she received a long itemized bill, upon which were entered charges for treatment of various kinds, rendered to all sorts of odds and ends of humanity, male and female, black and white, who had been mended at her expense. She was so delighted at it that she immediately placed another check for $500 to his credit on the same terms, and it is now being earned in the same way.

The Cremation of Miss Willard

An Official Statement of the Matter by the W. C. T. U.

SO many conflicting reports have been published in the daily papers regarding the final disposition of the remains of the late Frances E. Willard that the W. C. T. U. has seen fit to authorize the publication of the following brief statement on the subject:

"Miss Willard's personal convictions on the subject of burial were thus stated by her in her Autobiography, written in 1889:

"'Holding these opinions, I have the purpose to help forward progressive movements even in my latest hours, and hence hereby decree that the earthly mantle which I shall drop ere long when my real self passes onward into the world unseen, shall be swiftly enfolded in flames and rendered powerless, harmfully to affect the health of the living. Let no friend of mine say aught to prevent the cremation of my cast-off body. The fact that the popular mind has not come to this decision renders it all the more my duty, who have seen the light, to stand for it in death, as I have sincerely meant in life, to stand by the great cause of poor oppressed humanity. There must be explorers along all pathways, scouts in all armies. This has been my "call" from the beginning, by nature and by nurture. Let me be free to its inspiriting and cheery mandate, even unto this last.'

"The casket containing the outward garment of Miss Willard's soul was placed in the vault at Rose Hill on the 24th of February.

"On Saturday morning, April 9, a little group gathered in an upper chamber in Chicago, where, at the request of Miss Anna Gordon, a prayer service was held. A few relatives and intimate friends went to the crematory in the beautiful cemetery of Graceland, to which the casket was borne on the last stage of its journey. It rested in the chapel amidst palms and fragrant flowers, while Rev. Dr. M. L. Terry, of Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, read appropriate Scripture selections and offered tender words of prayer. Then the company followed the casket into a little room. The casket was carried through a flowery avenue to the crematory furnace. No flame came in contact with casket or body. The action of pure white flameless heat through a day and night set free all that was not 'of the earth, earthy' in a literal sense.

"The following afternoon a hushed and reverent company gathered at the Willard lot in Rose Hill Cemetery. As the ashes were committed to the dust, they mingled with roses, above which were placed sprays of evergreen, sent from the birthplaces of Miss Willard's parents, her brother and sister and herself, from Forest Home and from Rest Cottage. Those present sang several hymns. Rev. Dr. Waters, of Emanuel Church, Evanston, read the Scriptures and offered prayer. Rev. Dr. Terry spoke fitting words, and Rev. Charles F. Bradley pronounced the benediction, after which the grave was filled and covered with the floral tributes.

Summer Study of the Bible.

THE Summer Session of the Moody Bible Institute in Chicago is approaching. A feature will be the course of study conducted by the eminent teacher, Dr. J. M Gray, of Boston, whose past work at the Institute has proven very popular and instructive. Dr. Gray is the author of what may be termed the synthetic study of the Bible: a plan which is rapidly taking hold of the people of this country. In addition to the large number studying along this line in the West the past winter, other classes, numbering 3,000 or more, have been organized and taught, the majority of them under Dr. Gray's personal charge. He had a class of 1,000 or more Christian Endeavorers in connection with the Boston Union, and the Boston Leaguers are contemplating a similar class under his instruction next season. The course of study, as planned by him, will deal in a plain and popular way with three subjects: 1 Bible Introduction, 2 Christian Evidences, 3 Homiletics. In the four months the whole Bible will be practically covered.

The regular work of the Institute embraces a study of the Bible in course, and Doctrinal teachings by Dr. R.A. Torrey; Missionary and Bible History course by Mr. W. R. Newell; Harmony and Notation course in singing by Prof. D. B. Towner; Musical course by Prof. Edward Howells; and Vocal Culture course by Prof. Warren C. Coffin. Mr. D. L. Moody will answer any inquiries that may be addressed to him regarding the work of the Institute.

Miss Willard's Successor.

MRS. LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS, who succeeded the late Miss Frances E. Willard as President of the W. C. T. U., is a native of Dover, M She spent her early womanhood as a acher, and married at the age of twen- tne. Her husband sympathizes with h in her work, and her only child, Ger- tle, now Mrs. Leavitt, of Portland, Me., ser mother's helper in much of her pub- work. In the summer of 1874, when Ms Willard went to Old Orchard, Me., to peak on temperance and to organize a WC. T. U., Mrs. Stevens was there, as- ted in the organization of the Maine ion and was chosen its Treasurer, w h position she held for three years. s was then elected President, and unani- sly re-elected to that position each ceeding year. For thirteen years she ws Assistant cording Sec- ry of the Na- al W. C. T. U for one year cording Sec- ry, and at the veland Con- tion in 1894, w. on nomina- n of Miss Vlard, elected Ve-President- a.arge of the tional Union. Se has for rs been the Nine represen- tive in the Na- al Confer- ee of Chari- and Cor- ion. In 1892 s was appoint- e one of the managers the World's Columbian Ex- ition; and dentire rge of pre- ing Maine's ibit of Char- i's and Correc- n (homes, hos- ls, asylums,) which ap- red in the thropological Building at the Fair. r three years she was Treasurer of t National Council of Women of the ited States, and upon voluntarily re- ng from that position, was placed in Cabinet of the Council and given the tfolio of Moral Reform.

Mrs. Stevens has always been a woman progress. When in 1876 Miss Willard oduced into the white-ribbon ranks the cussion of the ballot for woman as the st helpful method of temperance re- m, and led the argument for four years the great conventions. Mrs. Stevens s one of her stanchest and most helpful es, and it was at this time that their ndship was cemented by that unbreak- e bond forged in the furnace of contra- tion.

No woman in the organization is more al to its fundamental principles; none ssess in greater degree the universal nfidence of its friends, men and women, l the good-will of its opponents, than Irs. A Great Burmese Idol.

A WRITER in Travel gives this strik- ing description of a visit to the great Burmese idol temple, the way Dagohn: "As the Shway Dagohn the most holy of all Buddhist temples Indo-Chinese lands, there was a con- nt flow of picturesque pilgrims. Dis- guished by their long yellow robes, aven heads, shaven faces, and general sterity of mien were the priests, who lked dourly along carrying jars before em into which the faithful put the rice d other food. For the Buddhist who votes his life to sanctity and contem- ation can never become a portly divine d own a carriage and pair.

"Without warning, we found ourselves on e terrace of the Shway Dagohn. Right in front rose the golden shaft. Around the base clustered dozens of shrines, grotesquely shaped, with pillars flower-festooned, and dark recesses where glimmered faint ruby lights, and the solemn, sedate Buddha sat with unmoved countenance. Burmans touched the earth with their forehead, and then squatting, sitting on their heels, gazed into the face of the image. The Burmese women knelt, and crossing their hands, lapsed into mental passiveness. Here and there a wise man, shrivelled, with drawn cheeks, eyes piercingly bright, learned in astrologic lore, would be drawing strange designs and foretelling a new-born child's fate, while four or five women sat around listening eagerly. Close at hand were musicians, droning wretchedly to the groans of weird, harsh instruments. Ascetic priests flitted noiselessly among the contemplators—for the Buddhists do not worship or pray, but sit before the image of Buddha and contemplate and secure peace of mind—and as a setting to the unworldly picture were thousands of shrines, many dazzlingly gorgeous, flashing with rare stones; many were just like alcoves with a modest moss-grown image crumbling at the back; but all startlingly different to anything we Westerners could imagine in wildest fancy. Rampant dragons with fiery tongues reared as though ready to hiss flame; strange disproportioned abortions of humanity grinned with villainous glee; repellent foul animals, that were no animals at all, scowled fury and hate, and standing prominent were figures with two bodies and the head half-lion, half-man. In the far past a king's son was abandoned in a forest, and he would have died had not a lioness suckled him. When he grew up he ran away, and the brute was so disconsolate that it died of a broken heart. And it is in remembrance of the love of this lioness that the images of lions always surround pagodas."

TO IRA D. SANKEY.

(On his journey to Egypt and Palestine.)

SWEET singer of the newer world,
We lend thee for a while.
Go on thy way in peace to-day,
Go singing up the Nile;
Go to Egypt! land of darkness!
Where they toiled, that captive host,
Till their God, strong to deliver,
Led them onward to the coast.

Onward still, through swelling currents,
Till the "Promised Land" they view.
Let his wonder-working glory
Thrill thy being through and through,
From that land of Bible story—
King and prophet, long ago—
To the scenes of brighter glory;
Onward, singing as you go.

To the soil the Cross made holy,
Where the precious blood was shed;
Where the Nazarene so lowly,
Had not where to lay his head.
Sing aloud the songs of Zion,
Where the royal Psalmist sang;
Where the Shepherd's harp so tuneful,
O'er the plains of Judah rang.

Sing where once the angel chorus
Sang to men of "peace, good will."
Human hearts are often lonely,
Longing for that message still,
Where the Israelites are waiting
For their long-expected King;
Of the Christ, so meek and lowly,
With a "holy boldness," sing.

On Mount Zion, lovely Zion!
Jay of all the earth, so fair;
Sing of Jesus and him only,
Bowing low in humble prayer.
Sing, to tell the blessed story;
Sing, to right the ancient wrong.
Seek to spread the Saviour's glory
With the wondrous gift of song.

CRUEL CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED.

The "Slocum System" the Most Marvelous Discovery of the Age.

Three Free Bottles of This Wonderful Treatment to all "Christian Herald" Readers for the Asking.

Coughs, Consumption, Catarrh, La Grippe and Other Lung Troubles at Last Annihilated.

Are You a Consumptive? It is Safe to assume that you are, for nine-tenths of the human family suffer from one form or another of this King of Diseases, this despoiler of homes, this common enemy of health, which strikes rich and poor alike and is no respecter of persons.

Heretofore wealth has been a necessary part of the cure—wealth to take you to the green fields and the sunshine of climes that know naught but summer and none but the blue skies of June; wealth to enable you to partake of the elaborate systems of high-priced treatments; wealth to buy this fleeting hope that leads you on and on to the inevitable end—death.

But now all this has been changed. The poor, aye, the poorest of the poor, may be saved from the clutch of Consumption, La Grippe, Catarrh, Coughs and the kindred evils that belong to the consumptive family.

Any Afflicted who desire to avail themselves of the benefits of this marvelous discovery (the Slocum System), which is offered in a philanthropic spirit to all who suffer, have but to "ask and you shall receive."

The Slocum System is "bottled Life." It builds up the tired and worn-out bodies of those who suffer. It goes at once to the seat of the disease and drives out the germs that are living on your vital strength. It takes hold of your blood, and where it was once sluggish and slow it causes it to leap and dance through your veins with the vigor of health.

It makes rich, rosy blood, and rich blood means health and strength.

The Slocum System is a crystallization of the mighty minds of the medical world. It is a practical condensation of the investigations of Koch, Pasteur, Virchow and Metchnikoff, all put in practical form by one of the foremost medical scientists of the country. It is putting at the service of sufferers the result of years of study and research of eminent men, which result they could not have bought with kingdoms.

The Entire System is fully explained in a new pamphlet brimful of testimonials, which will be sent with three free bottles of this remarkable system of treatment to any and all readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who will send their name and address to Dr. T. A. Slocum, the Slocum Building, New York City, and who will agree to use them for the relief of those who suffer.

It is a Hindoo maxim, and first appeared in the Berartha, as the last Mishna of Sola. There is no equivalent phrase to be found in the Bible.

R. J. A., Wolseley, N. W. T., Canada. Is not life insurance a species of gambling?

We cannot see that it is. The principle seems rather one of mutual helpfulness. Every man who has loved ones dependent upon him, is anxious to leave behind him some provision for them, but there is always a fear lest death may come before a sufficient sum has been saved. Now, if a number of men, similarly situated, agree that if one of them is cut off prematurely, the survivors will care for his wife and children, the arrangement is beneficent, though none of them can tell who will benefit by it. There is the element of uncertainty in it, but none of the gambling spirit. When the arrangement is conducted by a life insurance society, the principle is the same. The society collects from each of its policyholders a yearly premium, the aggregate being sufficient, when the society is in a sound financial condition, to pay the amount due on the policies of those who die during the year. Men do not insure as a speculation, but to protect their families from poverty in the event of their early death.

Loyal Christian, Paterson, N. J. Our brave soldier boys are gathering in camp at Chickamauga Park, where many thousands of them may be stationed for months during the heated term unless ordered to the defense of the seacoast cities. I, with many others of your readers, would be glad to hear of some organized Christian work among them. Cannot we do something, at least to supply them with good religious books or periodicals? I will gladly give my quota for such a purpose. Let me know whether any others who may be like [illegible] are willing to join us in such an effort.

Our correspondent's suggestion is an excellent one. There can be no better field for religious work than the central military camp. We would be glad to hear from any of our readers who are interested in the spiritual welfare of the soldier. The splendid work accomplished by the American Commission during our Civil war was an evidence of the great practicability of effort of this character.

M. L. H., San Francisco, Cal. In case of war with [illegible], would American citizens on a neutral vessel be subject to capture? 2. Would American goods on a neutral vessel be subject to capture?

Solicitor Penfield of the State Department at Washington, has lately answered these questions as follows: 1. A neutral vessel, not being in service of a belligerent as a transport, may lawfully carry both the diplomatic agents and his private citizens. The seizure of such persons is illegal." 2. The second article of the Treaty of Paris, 1856, says that the neutral flag covers the enemy's goods except contraband of war. Spain, the United States and Mexico, not acceding to this declaration, are not bound by it, yet the precept that the neutral flag protects the goods is old, was adopted in our treaty with Spain in 1795, has usually been respected by nations, and in view of its long observance, may almost be regarded as an accepted principle of international law. Rivier, an authority in such matters, says it is the actual law of nations.

Reader, Westgrove, Pa. Is it a sin for first cousins to marry?

It is not forbidden in Scripture. The canon law at one time forbade it, but even then, by the payment of a sufficient sum of money, the prohibition was removed in special cases. There is, so far as we can see, no sin in it. Whether it is prudent may be doubted, but physiologists are not agreed on that question.

J. J., Cross Roads, Va. What does the pope mean by claiming to be the vicar of Christ?

That in Christ's absence, he is the visible head of the church and is entitled to rule and govern in his name and to settle disputed questions. It is an assumption repugnant to all true Protestants.

M. C., Burlington, Mo. I was raised in the Roman Catholic Church and baptized in infancy. If I join a Protestant Church must I be baptized again?

Ask the minister of the church you intend to join. In some denominations such as the Baptist, you would be expected to be baptized again, but not in others. It is so simple a ceremony that it need give you no concern if they wish you to go through it.

Concerning the question of free or rented church pews, one of our readers in Toppenish, Wash., sends us this letter:

The church is not intended to be any kind of a banking or monetary institution. If people will not buy the church of their free will, they are not to be forced to buy it. Christ says, "Make not my Father's house an house of merchandise."

A. L., Broadway, Union County. Does a man going to Europe for a short time have to have a passport?

It is well for an American who is traveling in any foreign country, except perhaps in Great Britain, to provide himself with a passport. It is a positive means of identification and is a great saver of trouble and annoyance. You may have considerable difficulty in proving your identity or in establishing your rights when traveling without a passport. In dealing with consuls or with bankers, a passport in many countries, is almost indispensable.

Harry V., Wykoff, Minn. 1. Is it true that there are more followers of Mohammed than of Christ at the present time? 2. Give the estimated number of the followers of Christ and also of Mohammed.

1. No. There are nearly three times as many Christians as Mohammedans. 2. According to Meyers, a German authority, there are 448,000,000 Christians and 200,000,000 Mohammedans. According to the American Statistical Society, the figures are: Mohammedans, 176,834,372; Christians, 477,080,158. These figures, of course, include Catholics.

Bible Student, Cincinnati, O. Were the disciples of John the Baptist required to be baptized on their becoming Christians?

There is nothing to show what the usual practice was, but it appears probable that they were. In one instance, at least, the rite was repeated. (See Acts 19: 3-5).

Reader, Newport, R. I. In THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of April 13, appears an account of a wonderful clock. It seems to me, upon calculation, that the jeweler has some claims to celebrity also. He calculates that two minutes per day for the remainder of his life will use up sixty days. Let us see: 60 days = 1,440 hours = 86,400 minutes: divided by 2 = 43,200 days = 118 26-73 years. Evidently the jeweler has expectation of a life considerably beyond the normal length. It may be, too, that his calculation is based on the eight hour day, thus making three days out of twenty-four hours, usually considered one day.

1. A patriotic body of Cubans, who, as a secret society, with headquarters in New York, have done much to keep alive the war in Cuba and to give aid to the insurgents. 2. They are issued by and in the name of the Crown in those countries where legalized piracy is still tolerated. The letter of marque is simply a commission to seize, sink, and destroy, or appropriate the property of the enemy wherever found on the high seas or on the enemy's coast and harbors. 3. It would expose American vessels to attack wherever found, except when in neutral waters or the shelter of a neutral port.

How can we be happy in heaven without our loved ones? 3. What did Christ mean by saying, "Let the dead bury their dead"?

1. You may depend that God, who "knoweth our frame and remembereth that we are dust," will deal justly and mercifully in all such cases. Many good and useful men have been greatly depressed in their last days. One, who had been an eminent minister, firmly believed that there was no hope for him. A friend who was sure that the cause of his depression was purely physical, as it generally is, listened to him patiently as he proved that he was one of the worst of sinners, a backslider, etc. At the end he quoted the passage: "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin." (1 John 1:7), and asked him whether he believed that. The poor distressed man had to admit that he did, and from that time to the end he was at peace. (2). A CHURCH OF MANY ACTIVITIES.

The Suburban Church which has Summoned Dr. George F. Pentecost from London to its Pastorate—Its Origin, History and Characteristics.

THERE are two kinds of churches that experienced ministers often urge their younger brethren to avoid. One is the down-town church with a famous history, the old members of which have moved to more aristocratic neighborhoods and have left their church to struggle. The other kind is the suburban town, which is dwarfed into insignificance by the churches of the adjacent city. It is proverbial that an invitation to preach of either kind means a request to undertake hard and often discouraging work. It may cheer the minister of a suburban church, and perhaps give him some suggestions, if we tell the story of one that is growing and flourishing and is just now putting out new energy and entering on new activities.

In the year 1847, the town of Yonkers, N. Y., was only a small hamlet with a consistent stay-at-home population. In religious privileges, the people had the choice between three churches. One was the Protestant Episcopal Church, and the Methodist Episcopal Church, each of which had its own special and particular adherents, who could not very well have been content to go any other kind of church. The third was the Reformed Dutch Church, which had a mixed congregation, composed of people who though not connected with that denomination for their previous history, preferred it to either of the other two. It was Evangelical, and its government had no galling restrictions, nor disagreeable peculiarities. So beside the members who belonged to the church by conviction, there were in it, Presbyterians, Baptists, Congregationalists, and possibly others who made themselves at home there.

It was safe to predict that if any future time there should be any large accession of membership, there would be a liability of disintegration. While matters are as they are, the denominational tendency is sure to assert itself. It did so at Yonkers. About 1852, the hamlet changed its character. The Hudson River Railroad was built, and it brought Yonkers within easy reach of New York. Business men who could afford to live as far away from their stores and offices settled in the village; farm lands were bought and transformed into city lots, streets were laid out, and the Yonkers of the present day took form and shape. Several families of the new settlers connected with the Reformed Dutch Church and the Presbyterian contingent in the membership increased. It was found that forty-six of the members were Presbyterians, and these advocated making the church a Presbyterian Church. The preliminary steps were taken, but at the last moment difficulties arose, and the Presbyterians decided to leave the church and build for themselves. Their house was begun in September, 1853, and by the following May it was ready for dedication. The pastor of the old church, Rev. Dwight M. Seward, went with them and was formally received into the Presbytery, and the church was taken under its care as the First Presbyterian Church of Yonkers. He continued to serve the church as its pastor for a period of eighteen years. He was succeeded by Dr. T. Ralston Smith, whose friendship and attachment to the church are still cordially maintained and heartily reciprocated. After him came Rev. John Reid, who continued in the pastorate until an influential church in Detroit, Mich., persuaded him to occupy its pulpit. An interval of about two years followed, and then the church looked across the Atlantic and finding there a minister who belonged to America but was ministering to a London church, it called him back to his own land.

THE FIRST PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, YONKERS, N. Y.

This pastor is the Rev. George F. Pentecost, D.D., whose work at the Marylebone Presbyterian Church had won the hearts of the Londoners, and had attracted large crowds of men of all denominations. The London church vigorously protested against Dr. Pentecost leaving, but the Yonkers call found a weak spot in his heart. It was a call home. Enthusiastic as the London church was, hearty and cordial and loyal as were its members, Dr. Pentecost could not but feel himself an exile. True, he preached the same Gospel and the services were the same as here, but when he stepped out of the church-door, he stepped into a London street and never felt really at home. After long consideration, and in spite of the entreaties of his English friends, he decided to accept the call, and on April 20, 1897, he preached his first sermon to his new church.

He found the church one after his own heart. It was active and aggressive. Already three new church organizations had grown out of its efforts. Members of the church had opened a Sunday School in a neglected district of the city. Preaching services were added a year afterwards, and in two years more it had grown so large and strong that the Presbytery took it under its care as the Westminster Presbyterian Church. The same process in another district issued in the Dayspring Presbyterian Church. The original membership of forty-six, which had constituted the mother church at its organization, must have mightily increased, for when these two offshoots came into being, the mother church could give letters of dismissal to one hundred of its members who were casting in their lot with the young causes, while retaining a good working membership. Still later, another Sunday School was opened in another neighborhood, and has become Immanuel Mission Chapel.

The church has a number of societies and organizations of various kinds for prosecuting the aggressive work that is the sign of its vigorous life. Among these are the following: The Church Missionary Association for giving aid and sympathy to the destitute, and for carrying the Gospel message to them. The Ladies' Missionary Association, whose work is three-fold: home, local, and foreign. From this society gifts have gone to missionaries in the south and west, to missionaries in foreign lands, and to the treasury of the Presbyterian Societies. In the local branch are included Mothers' Meetings, Children's Sewing Classes, a Church Periodical Club, a Loan Relief Department, etc. To these has recently been added a Men's Association, to bring into pleasant personal relations the male members of the church. Besides these, there is, of course, a thriving Sunday School, which last year increased its number of pupils by nearly one-half.

Add to these various activities the fact that the church and its societies are free from debt, and the picture becomes a very attractive one. The income of the church is derived from pew rents. But Dr. Pentecost has recently introduced an envelope system for free-will offerings to supplement the income from the pews. This is in lieu of the collections for incidental expenses. The result has fully justified the experiment. It has been in operation only three months, and the total receipts from the envelopes have been $2,689, or more than $200 average for each Sunday, while under the former system of plate collections the proceeds were not more than $50 a Sunday.

The new pastor, who has now occupied the pulpit for a year, has an interesting history. The traditional origin of his significant name dates from another land and century. It is stated that a Bohemian who went to France was converted among the Huguenots and became a preacher. So many persons were brought to Christ under his preaching, and so frequently did a revival of religion follow his labors, that the grateful people, who had some difficulty in pronouncing his Bohemian name, called him "Old Pentecost," and by that name he was thereafter known. His descendants, however, lapsed into unbelief, and it was not until this generation that the name again became appropriate. The childhood and youth of the present pastor of the Yonkers Church were years of poverty, sorrow and wandering. It was in 1860, when he was eighteen years of age, that he was finally led to Christ and gave himself to the Lord's service. He was living at the time with his mother at Henderson, Ky., and was induced to attend services which Dr. G. C. Lorimer was holding in that town. There he was led to give up the world and its pleasures and pledge his future life to God. He at once became active in Christian work, and was very successful in appeals to young men. Occasionally he gave a brief address in public. Since that time he has labored in many fields, and always with success. Twice in Brooklyn, N. Y., he has held pastorates which have been wonderfully blessed. He was also for some time pastor of a church in Boston, and as previously mentioned, more recently in London. But it is probably as an evangelist that Dr. Pentecost is most widely known. He has been one of Mr. D. L. Moody's most enthusiastic helpers, following his services, at Mr. Moody's request, with preaching directed to the deepening and perfecting the work Mr. Moody had begun. In this way, and in independent evangelist campaigns, Dr. Pentecost has preached in every State of the Union.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

A BRAWNY RELIGION.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Acts 17: 6 . . . . . } These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also.

THERE is a wild, bellowing mob around the house of Jason, in Thessalonica. What has the man done so greatly to offend the people? He has been entertaining Paul and his comrades. The mob surround the house and cry, "Bring out those turbulent preachers! They are interfering with our business. They are ruining our religion! They are actually turning the world upside down!"

The charge was true: for there is nothing that so interferes with sin, there is nothing so ruinous to every form of established iniquity, there is nothing that has such tendency to turn the world upside down, as our glorious Christianity. The fact is, that the world now is wrong side up, and it needs to be turned upside down in order that it may be right side up. The time was when men wrote books entitling them "Apologies for Christianity." I hope that day has passed. We want no more apologies for Christianity. Let the apologies be on the part of those who do not believe in our religion. We do not mean to make any compromise in the matter. We do not wish to hide the fact that Christianity is revolutionary, and that its tendency is to turn the world upside down.

Our religion has often been misrepresented as a principle of tears, and mildness, and fastidiousness; afraid of crossing people's prejudices; afraid of making somebody mad; with silken gloves, lifting the people up from the church-pew into glory, as though they were Bohemian glass, so very delicate that with one touch it may be demolished forever. Men speak of religion as though it were a refined imbecility; as though it were a spiritual chloroform, that the people were to take until the sharp cutting of life were over. The Bible, so far from this, represents the religion of Christ as robust and brawny—ransacking and upsetting ten thousand things that now seem to be settled on firm foundations. I hear some man in the house say, "I thought religion was peace." That is the final result. A man's arm is out of place. Two men come, and with great effort put it back to the socket. It goes back with great pain. Then it gets well. Our world is horribly disordered and out of joint. It must come under an omnipotent surgery, beneath which there will be pain and anguish before there can come perfect health and quiet. I proclaim, therefore, in the name of my Lord Jesus Christ—REVOLUTION!

The religion of the Bible will make a revolution in the family. Those things that are wrong in the family circle will be overthrown by it, while justice and harmony will take the place. The husband will be the head of the household only when he is fit to be. I know a man who spends all the money he makes in drink, as well as all the money that his wife makes; and sometimes sells the children's clothes for rum. Do you tell me that he is to be the head of that household? If the wife have more nobility, more courage, more consistency, more of all that is right, she shall have the supremacy. You say that the Bible says that the wife is to be subject to the husband. I know it. But that is a husband, not a masculine caricature. There is no human or divine law that makes a woman subordinate to a man unworthy of her. When Christianity comes into a domestic circle, it will give the dominancy to that one who is the most worthy of it.

As religion comes in at the front door, mirth and laughter will not go out of the back door. It will not hobble the children's feet. John will laugh just as loud; and George will jump higher than he ever did before. It will steal from the little bones neither ball nor bat nor hoop, nor Tree. It will establish a family altar. Anthems will hover over it. Ladders of light band reach down to it. The glory of Mexico will stream upon it. The books of remembrance will record it; and tides of everlasting blessedness will pour from it. Not such a family altar as you may have seen, where the prayer is long, and a long chapter is read, with tedious explanation, and the exercise keeps on until the children's knees are sore, and their backs ache, and their patience is lost, and for the seventh time they have counted all the rungs in the chair; but I mean a family altar such as may have been seen in your father's house. You may have wandered far off in the paths of sin and darkness; but you have never forgotten that family altar where father and mother knelt, importuning God for your soul. That is a memory that a man never gets over. There will be a hearty, joyful family altar in every domestic circle. You will not have to go far to find Hannah rearing her Samuel for the temple, or a grandmother Lois instructing her young Timothy in the knowledge of Christ, or a Mary, and Martha, and Lazarus gathered in fraternal and sisterly affection, or a table at which Jesus sits, as at that of Zaccheus, or a home in which Jesus dwells, as in the house of Simon the tanner. The religion of Jesus Christ, coming into the domestic circle, will overthrow all jealousies, all janglings; and peace, and order, and holiness will take possession of the home.

Again: Christianity will produce a revolution in commercial circles. Find me fifty merchants, and you find that they have fifty standards of what is right and wrong. You say to some one about a merchant, "Is he honest?" "Oh! yes," the man says, "he is honest; but he grinds the faces of his clerks. He is honest; but he exaggerates the value of his goods. He is honest; but he loans money on bond and mortgage, with the understanding that the mortgage can lie quiet for ten years, but as soon as he gets the mortgage, he records it and begins a foreclosure suit, and the sheriff's writ comes down, and the day of sale arrives, and away goes the homestead, and the creditor buys it in at half-price." Honest? when he loaned the money he knew that he would get the homestead at half-price. Honest? but he goes to the insurance office to get a policy on his life, and tells the doctor that he is well, when he knows that for ten years he has had but one lung. Honest? though he sells property by the map, forgetting to tell the purchaser that the ground is all under water; but it is generous in him to do that, for he throws the water into the bargain.

Ah! my friends, there is but one standard of the everlasting right and of the everlastingly wrong, and that is the Bible; and when that principle shall get its pry under our commercial houses, I believe that one-half of them will go over. The ruin will begin at one end of the street, and it will be crash! crash! crash! all the way down to the docks. "What is the matter? Has there been a fall in gold?" "Oh no." "Has there been a new tariff?" "No." "Has there been a failure in crops?" "No." "Has there been an unaccountable panic?" "No." This is the secret: The Lord God has set up his throne of judgment in the Exchange. He has summoned the righteous and the wicked to come before him. What was 1837? A day of judgment! What was 1857? A day of judgment! What was the extreme depression of two years ago? A day of judgment! Do you think that God is going to wait until he has burned the world up before he rights these wrongs? I tell you, Nay! Every day is a day of judgment.

The fraudulent man piles up his gains, bond above bond, United States security above United States security, emolument above emolument, until his property has become a great pyramid; and, as he stands looking at it, he thinks it can never be destroyed; but the Lord God comes, and with his little finger pushes it all over.

You build a house, and you put into it a rotten beam. A mechanic standing by says, "It will never do to put that beam in; it will ruin your whole building." But you put it in. The house is completed. Soon it begins to rock. You call in the mechanic and ask, "What is the matter with this door? What is the matter with this wall? Everything seems to be giving out." Says the mechanic, "You put a rotten beam into that structure, and the whole thing has got to come down." Here is an estate that seems to be all right now. It has been building a great many years. But fifteen years ago there was a dishonest transaction in that commercial house. That one dishonest transaction will keep on working ruin in the whole structure, until down the estate will come in wreck and ruin about the possessor's ears—one dishonest dollar in the estate demolishing all his possessions. I have seen it again and again; and so have you.

Here is your money-safe. The manufacturer and yourself only know how it can be opened. You have the key. You touch the lock, and the ponderous door swings back. But let me tell you that, however firmly barred and bolted your money-safe may be, you can not keep God out. He will come, some day, into your counting-room, and be will demand, "Where did that note of hand come from? How do you account for this security? Where did you get that mortgage from? What does this mean?" If it is all right, God will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant. Be prospered in this world. Be happy in the world to come." If it is all wrong, he will say, "Depart, ye cursed. Be miserable for your iniquities in this life; and then go down and spend your eternity with thieves, and horse-jockeys, and pick-pockets."

You have an old photograph of the signs on your street. Why have those signs nearly all changed within the last twenty years? Does the passing away of a generation account for it? Oh no. Does the fact that there are hundreds of honest men who go down every year account for it? Oh, no. This is the secret: The Lord God has been walking through the commercial streets of our great cities; and he has been adjusting things according to the principles of eternal rectitude.

The time will come when, through the revolutionary power of this Gospel, a falsehood, instead of being called exaggeration, equivocation, or evasion, will be branded a lie! And stealings, that now sometimes go under the head of percentages and commissions, and bonuses, will be put into the catalogue of State-prison offenses. Society will be turned inside out and upside down, and ransacked of God's truth, until business dishonesties shall come to an end, and all double-dealing; and God will overturn, and overturn, and overturn; and commercial men in all cities will throw up their hands, crying out, "These that have turned the world upside down are come hither."

The religion of Jesus Christ will produce a revolution in our churches. The non committal, do-nothing policy of the church of God will give way to a spirit of bravest conquest. Piety in this day seems to me to be salted down just so as to keep. It seems as if the church were chiefly anxious to take care of itself; and if we hear of want, and squalor, and heathenism outside, we say, "What a pity!" and we put our hands in our pockets, and we feel around for a two-cent piece, and with a great flourish we put it upon the plate, and are amazed that the world is not converted in six weeks. Suppose there were a great war; and there were three hundred thousand soldiers, but all of those three hundred thousand soldiers, excepting ten men, were in their tents, or scouring their muskets, or cooking rations. You would say, "Of course, defeat must come in that case." It is worse than that in the church. Millions of the professed soldiers of Jesus Christ are cooking rations, or asleep in their tents, while only one man here and there goes out to do battle for the Lord.

"But," says some one, "we are establishing a great many missions, and I think they will save the masses." No; they will not. Five hundred thousand of them will not do it. They are doing a magnificent work; but every mission chapel is a confession of the disease and weakness of the church. It is making a dividing-line between the classes. It is saying to the rich and to the well conditioned, "If you can pay your pew rents, come to the main audience-room." It is saying to the poor man, "Your coat is too bad, and your shoes are not good enough. If you want to g to heaven, you will have to go by the w of the mission chapel." The missi chapel has become the kitchen, where t church does its sloppy work. There a hundreds and thousands of churches this country—gorgeously built and su ported—that, even on bright and sunshi days, are not half full of worshippers; a yet they are building mission chapels, l cause, by some expressed or implied re lation, the great masses of the people a kept out of the main audience-room.

Now I say that any place of worsl which is appropriate for one class appropriate for all classes. Let the ri and the poor meet together, the Lord t Maker of them all. Mind you that I s that mission chapels are a necessity, t way churches are now conducted; l may God speed the time when they sh cease to be a necessity. God will rise and break down the gates of the Chu that have kept back the masses; and w be to those who stand in the way! Tl will be trampled under foot by the v populations making a stampede heaven.

I saw in some paper an account o church in Boston in which, it is s, there were a great many plain peo The next week the trustees of that chu came out in the paper, and said it was so at all; "they were elegant people, highly-conditioned people that went the Then I laughed outright; and whe laugh, I laugh very loudly. "Those p ple," I said, "are afraid of the sickly timentality of the churches." Now, ambition is not to preach to you so m It seems to me that you must be far sumptuously every day, and the marks comfort are all about you. You do need the Gospel half as much as do s who never come here. Rather than priding myself on a church in front which there shall halt fifty splendid eq ages on the Sabbath day. I would ha church up to whose gates there sh come a long procession of the suffer and the stricken, and the dying, begg for admittance. You do not need Gospel so much as they. You have g things in this life. Whatever may your future destiny, you have had a pl ant time here. But those dying pop tions of which I speak, by reason of t want and suffering, whatever may be t future destiny, are in perdition now; if there be any comfort in Christ's Gos for God's sake give it to them!

Revolution! The pride of the ch must come down. The exclusiveness the church must come down! The cial boastings of the church must c down! If monetary success were chief idea in the church, then I say the present mode of conducting fina is the best. If it is to see how many lars you can gain, then the present is the best. But if it is the saving of s from sin and death, and bringing mighty populations of our cities to knowledge of God, then I cry, Rev tion! It is coming fast. I feel it in air. I hear the rumbling of an earthq that shall shake down, in one terrific ch, the arrogance of our modern Christia

The sea is covered with wrecks, d multitudes are drowning. We come with the church life-boat, and the pe begin to clamber in, and we shout, "S stop! You must think it costs nothin keep a life-boat. Those seats at the are one dollar apiece, these in the m fifty cents, and those seats in the two shillings. Please to pay up, or se flounder on a little longer till the mis boat, whose work it is to save you p less wretches, shall come along and you up. We save only first-class sin in this boat."

The talk is, whether Protestant chu or Roman Catholic churches are co out ahead. I tell you, Protestants, truth plainly: that until your chur are as free as are the Roman Cat cathedrals, they will beat you. In cathedrals the millionaire and the be kneel side by side. And, until that comes in our churches, we cannot e the favor of God, or permanent spi prosperity.

Revolution! It may be that, befor church learns its duty to the masses, will scourge it, and come with the of omnipotent indignation, and driv the money-changers. It may be that is to be a great day of upsetting b that time shall come. If it must

O rd God, let it come now! In that ju e day of the reconstructed Church of Ch t, the church-building will be the most ri t and cheerful of all buildings. In ste of the light of the sun strained thr gh painted glass, until an intelligent au ory looks green, and blue, and yel- low and copper-colored, we will have no suc things. The pure atmosphere of heaven will sweep out the fetid atmos- phe that has been kept in many of our ch ches boxed up from Sunday to Sun- da The day of which I speak will be a da of great revivals. There will be such a t e as there was in the parish of Shotts, whe five hundred souls were born to God in one day; such times as were seen in s country when Edwards gave the al , when Tennent preached, and Whitefield thundered, and Edward Pay- son orrayed: such times as some of you remember in 1857, when the voice of pr r and praise was heard in theatre, warehouse, and blacksmith-shop, and fac ry, and engine house; and the auc- tio er's cry of "a half, and a half, and a ha " was drowned out by the adjoining pra r-meeting, in which the people cried ou "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" In those days of which I am speaking, the services of the Church of God will be mo spirited. The ministers of Christ, ins ad of being anxious about whether we are going to lose their place in their co , will get on fire with the theme, and to the living truth of God upon an ex ed auditory — crying out to the ri eous, "It shall be well with you:" an to the wicked. "Woe! It shall be ill wi you." In those days the singing will be ery different from what it is now. The music will weep, and wail, and chant, an triumph. People then will not be afr d to open their mouths when they sin The man with a cracked voice will no sit on "Windham," and "Ortonville," an "Old Hundred." Grandfather will fin the place for his grandchild in the hym-book; or the little child will be spectacles for the grandfather. Hosanna will meet hosanna, and together go climb- ing to the throne; and the angels will hea : and God will listen; and the gates of heaven will hoist: and it will be as when two seas meet — the wave of earthly song min ling with the anthems of the free.

Oh, my God, let me live to see that day! Let there be no power in disease, or acci- dent, or wave of the sea, to disappoint my ex ctations. Let all other sight fail my eye, rather than that I should miss that vis n. Let all other sounds fail my ears, rat er than that I should fail to hear that sou d. I want to stand on the mountain- top to catch the first ray of the dawn, and w flying feet bring the news. And, oh, wh n we hear the clattering hoofs that bri g on the King's chariot, may we all be ready, with arches sprung, and with han on the rope of the bell that is to sou d the victory, and with wreaths all twi ted for the way: and when Jesus dis- mo nts, let it be amidst the huzza! huzza! of world redeemed.

Where and when will that revolution be gin? Here, and now. In your heart an mine. Sin must go down; our pride mu go down; our worldliness must go do n, that Christ may come up. Revolu- tio ! "Except a man be born again, he ca not see the Kingdom of God." Why no now let the revolution begin? Not on Sabbath, but now! Not to-morrow, wh n you go out into commercial circles, but now!

Archias, the magistrate of Thebes, was sit ing with many mighty men, drinking wi e. A messenger came in, bringing a let- ter informing him of a conspiracy to end his life, and warning him to flee. Archias too the letter, but, instead of opening it, put it into his pocket, and said to the mes- sen er who brought it: "Business to-mor- row!" The next day he died. Before he open ed the letter, the Government was ov tured. When he read the letter it was too late. To-day I put into the hand of ev ry man and woman, who hears or rea s these words, a message of life. It say s: "To-day, if ye will hear his voice, har den not your heart." Do not put away the message and say: "This business to- mor row." This night thy soul may be re- qui red of thee!

GENERAL BOOTH'S WELCOME.

The Salvation Army Leader Warmly Greeted East and West—Ovations in Seattle, Washington, New York and Other Cities.

THE past few months have been full of golden days to the Salvation Army in America. Since January, their great General has been here, and from the time his feet first pressed the soil of the United States, vast crowds have greeted him, and forces of darkness have given way before the onslaught of his eloquence and the renewed enthusiasm of his followers under the inspiration of his presence.

The General went from New York to Canada, from Canada to the West, and April 19th to 26th, he was in New York again, holding councils of war with officers and soldiers, storming citadels of sin in public engagements, and leading grand marches to open-air battles. That particular week of April, 1898, was indeed an occasion for a grand rally of Salvation Army forces, and one which will long be remembered in the New World's metropolis.

The first month of General Booth's visit to America was spent in Canada; on his return to United States territory, he went first to Washington. One of the most dramatic pictures ever presented in our beautiful Senate chamber was when the venerable Commander-in-Chief of the Salvation Army opened the Senate with prayer. Our President and Vice-President with his two daughters, Field-Commissioner Eva Booth, who had accompanied her father from Canada, and Consul Booth-Tucker, who with her husband, Commander Booth-Tucker, received General Booth on American soil, and an aide-de-camp, mounted a temporary platform, followed by His Honor, the Mayor of the city. It was an interesting spectacle—those figures on the rough platform, the red lights of the corps' torches flashing across the dark field of humanity, as the Mayor welcomed the General to the city. The General, stately, picturesque and calm, threw his words to the uttermost fringe of the crowd.

"I am on the way to Klondike. Three years ago when I was in your city I was bound for Klondike. I am on the same road to-night. My Klondike is the Kingdom of God. What is yours?" So spoke the General in the square on the night of his reception to Seattle. The sight of that multitude of miners waiting attent on the words of the venerable speaker, is such as was witnessed many times in General Booth's northwestern campaign.

Later, at Tremont Temple, Boston, we hear Mayor Quincy commending the Salvation Army's good works in great cities, its colonization plans as inaugurated by Commander Booth-Tucker, and saying in conclusion, "from the standpoint of a municipal magistrate who is constantly studying the problems that particularly concern and affect the people of a great city, I welcome the entrance into the field of this organization, which comes under the name of the Salvation Army. I welcome it as one of the unofficial agencies in this city side by side with our municipal governments in the work of endeavoring to lift up our great cities to a higher plain of moral, social, and religious life. And let me express the wish that General Booth may be spared for many long years to continue the work which originated with him, and which it has been his privilege to see grow to such great dimensions, and to such vast beneficence all over the civilized globe."

treated the distinguished guest with hospitable consideration; and in the many towns in which he has held campaigns, governors of states, mayors and councils of municipalities, prominent business men and clergymen of note, have welcomed General Booth, presided at his meetings and have sought to do him honor in various ways. From Washington to Pittsburg, Cincinnati, St. Louis, Kansas City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, thence up the Pacific Coast to Portland and Seattle, taking in some towns on both sides of the Canadian and United States border, coming back again by Minneapolis, Chicago, Cleveland, Buffalo, Boston, Philadelphia, appearing on the way in many less prominent places, the General's path was one continual triumph. After he reaches his native England, he will doubtless be able to look back upon an altogether pleasant record of adjusted differences, assured conquests, and army work well ordered for future victories.

In our northwestern towns, where gold fever rages, and Yukon's magnetic attraction has drawn together all manner of men from the four corners of the earth, General Booth's journey was of telling effect and replete with incident.

"Here is my Klondike!" these were the words with which he greeted a multitude of upturned faces at Seattle, where The War Cry tells us there were men on the sidewalk, men peering from balconies and windows, men impeding the traffic, crowding Klondike outfit stores, all intent upon the movements of the General, when

In his New York campaign the General was assisted by the international and national staff, including such eminent leaders as Commander Booth-Tucker, Commissioner A. Nicol, Colonel J. Lawley, and the entire American Field Staff and 3,000 officers and soldiers; and great and enthusiastic audiences met the General at Memorial Hall, Carnegie Hall, the Academy of Music, the Metropolitan Opera House, and Union Square Park; prominent citizens and distinguished clergymen giving him warm and honorable greeting.

May the winds that bear him to his native England be kind and calm. And may the God, whose soldier he is, abide with and bless his children and officers, and the great and noble army he leaves in the wide battlefield of America.

The direct spiritual fruits of the General's American campaign number nearly 1,500 penitents by actual count. Over one hundred and twenty meetings have been conducted, 175,000 people have attended the same; 9,400 miles have been traveled. These figures, applying to a man in the seventieth year of his age, speak for themselves.

God Loved their Lad.

An Appeal from Across the Sea Bears Fruit in the Bowery Mission.

A LETTER, dated August 3, 1897, Lancashire, England, came to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD last summer from one, who in addition to his name, signed himself "A broken-hearted father." In a later letter he spoke of himself and wife thus: "Me and mother have turned sixty years." The first letter ran:

"With our prayers, and with yourself and God helping us, you may find and help our son. He is given to drink and is gone away in your country. We have read THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the last twenty years, and we trust in God you will try to see our lad. Mind, how you get about him. He is a very tender lad. I wish you to see him personally, or some of your kind helpers, and drop in on him, and not say I have written you. His name is ——, and once he was at ——, Brooklyn. I know nothing of the shop, except that it works men Sundays. But, you know best, and we leave it all in God's hands, with tears. Find him and try to get him into Sunday school or Bible class. If you receive this letter, please write to me as it will relieve us of great trouble. We put our trust in God."

The second letter, dated September 13, read:

"I received your letter August 24. Glory be to God! Mind what you say to him. Kindness and a good word will have all the effect. He was brought up to it but drink took him away. Please write all particulars. I've been sick seven weeks, but now I feel better. God save the lad and bless your Bowery Mission! Do all you can. God help you save one soul."

The third was dated September 16.

"I received your kind letter this afternoon with great joy. We have been praying for him. I went to bed last night but could not rest. I got up at midnight to pray again and to write to you. All glory to God for his abundant love toward us. I cannot thank you too much for your trouble. Please find him something to do for Christ, and if not too much trouble, see him as often as you can, and have some good friends to meet him when he comes from work, and get him to some good place to pass his time.

"I am but a laborer, but I have done my best. God helping, we shall succeed. I conclude with our thanks to you and all the Mission workers. I have just turned to the place in my Bible, Luke 9:38. 'And behold a man in the company cried out, saying, Master, I beseech thee, look upon my son; for he is mine only child.'"

To this there is a postscript:

"This morning we got a letter from him, and he wrote me all about you, and the fight he had with sin and the devil, not to go to the mission; but, thanks to God, he went, and he says he has given up drink and is trying to lead a Christian life. The shops he is working in are not good for a Christian, but do your best, and God will help us. Me and mother are so happy and thankful."

Across the first letter is written in Superintendent Wyburn's hand, a simple and eloquent record like that found on many letters received by the Bowery Mission Superintendent. It was this: "Boy found, came to Mission and was saved."

The Pew-Owner and the King.

The ownership of a rented pew puts its possessor in the position of demonstrating perfect breeding and Christian hospitality, of obeying the divine command, "Be ye kind, therefore, to strangers;" or it affords room for the display of very different qualities—to the selfish one's confusion sometimes—as the following story shows: One day a scholarly-looking man, plainly dressed, went into a church in Holland and took a seat near the pulpit. A few minutes later a haughty lady swept up to the pew, and seeing a stranger in it, ordered him by an imperial gesture to leave it. The stranger obeyed, and going into one of the seats reserved for the poor, joined devoutly in the services. After they were over the lady's friends gathered around her and demanded whether she knew who it was that she had treated so rudely. "No. Some pushing stranger," she replied. "It was King Oscar, of Sweden," was the answer. "He is here visiting the Queen." Her mortification may be imagined.

OUR WAR WITH SPAIN BEGUN!

The American Fleet Blockades Havana—Spanish Vessels Captured by our Warships—Europe Neutral—Tremendous National Enthusiasm—Spain's Fleet Menacing Our Atlantic Seaboard—Our Army and Navy Fully Prepared for Emergencies.

WAR with Spain, long threatened, is now an actuality. After many months of futile negotiation between the Madrid Government and our own, the rupture which Spain's conduct in Cuba and her responsibility for the loss of the Maine rendered inevitable has at last occurred and all diplomatic relations between the two nations have terminated. A powerful American fleet is now blockading the northern coast of Cuba, and a second fleet is preparing to meet the Spanish squadron which has been lying for several weeks at the Cape Verde Islands, in readiness for sailing to Cuban waters. A great army, including regulars, national guards and volunteers, is at Chickamauga, which has been selected as a central camp from which large bodies of troops can be quickly transported to different points on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts. Our coast defenses have all been strengthened and made well-nigh impregnable by the addition of heavy modern ordnance at every available point, and our rivers and harbors are protected by powerful monitors, torpedo craft and gunboats, while every available entrance, which an enemy might seek to penetrate, is doubly guarded by mines and submarine explosives. Our navy has been supplemented by a great fleet of swift auxiliary vessels—steamships built of steel and armed with heavy ordnance and quick-firing guns of smaller calibre. The spectacle is presented of the sudden transformation of a nation, lately at peace with all the world, to one that is bristling at every point with the grim paraphernalia of war, and which is preparing to make sacrifice to the utmost of its blood and treasure in defense of the cause it has so resolutely and unswervingly championed—the cause of humanity, and for the release of Cuba from the brutal yoke which has kept it in a turmoil of slaughter for many years and sent nearly half a million of helpless peasants to their death within the last six months. Spain's long career of cruelty in the West Indies, of which the starving of the innocent reconcentrados and the wanton destruction of the Maine were the characteristic climax, is rapidly nearing a close and when the Spanish flag disappears forever from the Western hemisphere, the whole world will regard it as a triumph of justice and a fitting retribution.

Our readers are already familiar with the history of the negotiations that have led up to the present crisis, and the persistent effort of our government to induce Spain to stop the reckless and devastating warfare in Cuba, and to adopt a humane policy toward the Cuban peasants. All our efforts were met by evasion and duplicity. Even our attempt to rescue the surviving reconcentrados from famine were opposed and the sending of the food cargoes—which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S readers, with others, had contributed—was mocked and derided in both Madrid and Havana and only permitted on sufferance. The well meant efforts of President McKinley and our State Department looking to the restoration of normal conditions in Cuba were contemptuously spurned, and it was plainly intimated that Spain desired no interference with her policy of slaughter and starvation in that unfortunate island. It deserves to be recorded that nothing was left undone by our government to accomplish by peaceful measures the needed reforms in Cuba, and that war has been accepted only as a last alternative, when all other means have utterly failed. Spain, by its absolute refusal to concede what was justly and righteously due to Cuba, to this country and to civilization, is alone responsible for the war. Our conscience, as a nation, is clear, knowing that we have taken our stand in a righteous cause. As our readers well know, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, throughout the negotiations, has strongly advocated a settlement by peaceful measures, if possible; but with the absolute refusal of Spain to do justice in Cuba, all our hopes of peace vanished, and it remained for our government to intervene to restore peace to Cuba.

On the rejection of our ultimatum by the Madrid Cabinet which act was universally accepted as equivalent to a declaration of war, preparations were made for the blockade of the Cuban ports. Congress had previously adopted a resolution authorizing the President to employ the naval and land forces for the purpose of forcible intervention. President McKinley issued a proclamation announcing the blockade, and on the evening of April 22, our blockading squadron appeared off Havana. Alarm guns were fired by the Spanish batteries, and the townspeople turned out by thousands and followed Gen. Blanco to the battery of La Reina, which overlooks the harbor. Our fleet, spread out in fan-like formation, lay some four miles off shore. Soon the Spanish guns began to roar, but no shot reached the American warships, greatly to the surprise of the fleet, as the distance was supposed to be within range. Our fleet did not reply as it had instructions not to bombard Havana, if the blockade could be accomplished peaceably, without the loss of life or the destruction of the city.

Early incidents of the blockade were the capture of six Spanish vessels—the Buena Ventura (a merchantman), by the gunboat Nashville, the Pedro, a large steamer with a valuable cargo, by the New York, the schooner Mathilde by the gunboat Porter, the steamship Miguel Jover by the gunboat Helena, and the steamships Catalina and Saturnina by the Detroit and Wilmington. A Spanish schooner was taken almost under the guns of Morro Castle. The prizes were conveyed to Key West.

It is the programme of our fleet to make the blockade of Cuba as thorough as possible, and to open the way for the landing of four American army corps—aggregating 120,000 men—at some well-chosen strategic point, where they can co-operate with the insurgent army under General Gomez in a land attack upon the Spanish defences. Gomez has probably 30,000 men in active service and ready to move on Havana. Our government is arranging to land 40,000 rifles and several million rounds of ammunition for the use of the insurgent army.

A call is to be issued by President McKinley for 125,000 volunteers. Gen. Miles will have command of the army of invasion, and among others who will serve under him in important positions will be Gen. Lee, late Consul General at Havana, and Theodore Roosevelt, who resigned his post as Assistant Secretary of the Navy, to accompany the army to Cuba. A great wave of patriotism is sweeping over the country, and enlistments are proceeding so rapidly that the desired number will soon be secured.

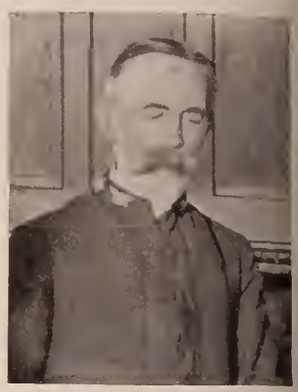
The battleship Oregon and the gunboat Marietta are now on their way from the Pacific to reinforce our Atlantic fleet. As they will pass within 1,500 miles of St. Vincent, Cape Verde Islands, where the Spanish squadron is supposed to be, it is believed that the latter may try to intercept the American warships. Little is really known concerning the intentions of the Spanish fleet, which was expected to have sailed for Porto Rico long ago. It is known to have been short of coal, which may account for the delay. It may be Spain's purpose to prey upon our commerce by attacking our merchant ships as they pass near to the Cape Verde Islands when homeward bound from the East.

S. S. "STATE OF TEXAS" CARRYING RELIEF SUPPLIES—CAPT. F. A. YOUNG.

Simultaneously with the campaign on the Atlantic, our Pacific and Asiatic fleets have been prepared for service. The former will guard the Pacific Coast against any meditated attack by Spanish warships, and all our Western harbors have been strengthened and abundantly fortified for the emergency. Our Asiatic fleet, under Admiral Dewey, will probably move against the Philippines, Spain's island possession in the Pacific, where an insurrection has been in progress for several years.

Many notable instances of patriotism have been brought out by the presence of actual war. Millionaires have vied with humble workers in their ardent desire to help the nation in its emergency. One rich man offered the government $10,000,000; another gave up his fine steel yacht, to be used as an auxiliary warship—an example which many others have followed. Two others are raising and equipping a regiment each. These are only a few of many such instances that are now of almost daily occurrence. The great steamship companies have offered their magnificent ocean liners, and a number have already been accepted and will be employed as auxiliaries. Among them are the Paris, the New York, the St. Louis the Fuerst Bismarck, and the St. Paul—all swift liners of the first class.

As soon as practicable, the blockade will be extended to include Porto Rico. That island, like nearly all of Spain's colonial possessions, is in rebellion and under martial law, and the insurgents will doubtless seize the opportunity, when the American squadron acts, to make a strong hostile movement against the Spanish garrison. Meanwhile, news has been received of the departure of several powerful Spanish warships from Ferrol and Cadiz, ostensibly to reinforce the Cape Verde fleet, but as our naval officials suspect trickery on the part of Spain, it is believed to be quite likely that the latest hostile squadron, which includes the Pelayo (Spain's finest warship), four torpedo destroyers, three torpedo boats, and two cruisers, may suddenly appear at some point on our Northern Atlantic coast, and possibly may threaten New York. It is evident that the policy of Spain to mislead and employ trickery, rather than to court a fair fight on the open sea. Some naval experts even assert that she will at no time during the war fight squadron to squadron, but will play a game of hide-and-seek, and by putting into commission a thousand or more privateers, will inflict as much damage as possible upon our ocean commerce and prolong the war. Even now, the Madrid naval authorities are reckoning on the capture of a number of fine American yachts in the Mediterranean.



REAR ADMIRAL SAMPSON.
(Commanding fleet in Cuban waters.)

Great Britain and the Continental powers of Europe united in regarding Spain's dismissal of Minister Woodford at Madrid as the actual beginning of the war. Spain took the initiative when she gave our Minister his passports. Several days later, on Sunday, April 24, the Madrid government gazetted a decree announcing the breaking off of diplomatic relations and the existence of a state of war between the two countries, declaring all treaties with the United States annulled, and asserting that the "injustice and provocation" had come from the United States, whose "detestable conduct has caused this grave conflict."

Our Government has sent a formal note to Portugal with the view of compelling that nation either to refuse further shelter to the Spanish fleet at the Cape Verde Islands or to assume the attitude of an ally of Spain. No neutral power will permit the ships of either contestant to remain in a neutral harbor after the formal declaration of war.

In accordance with the order of the United States Government the Cuban Central Relief Committee on Saturday, April 23, despatched the steamship State of Texas from New York to Key West with 1,100 tons of supplies for the Cuban reconcentrados. She will await Government orders at Key West, and will probably be sent to Matanzas or Sagua la Grande under naval convoy. As the vessel flies the Red Cross flag, an emblem recognized by thirty nations under international treaty, it is believed her mission will be respected even by the Spaniards. Three Red Cross representatives accompanied the cargo, and it is expected that Miss Barton, who will join the vessel at Key West, will proceed to Cuba and personally superintend the distribution of food among the suffering peasants. A large part of the cargo represents the contributions of our readers.

Delayed acknowledgments of contributions for Cuban relief will appear in next week's CHRISTIAN HERALD.

A Righteous War.

IT is inevitable that many Christian people of the United States should be distressed and perplexed by the decision of our government to engage in war. They cherished the hope that we should adhere to our policy of not interfering in the affairs of other nations, and that if a quarrel should arise, we should refer it, as we have done other disputes, to arbitration. The fact, however, that we maintained an army and a navy, showed that we have always been aware that circumstances might arise in which a resort to force would be a duty. There are times in the history of nations when it would be a sin and a shame to hold aloof from quarrels, and when interference by force would be a righteous course. A modern instance in point is the horrors of Armenia. We held then, that, as a Christian nation, England ought to have interfered to prevent the Sultan massacring his subjects. It is quite true that Christianity is a religion of peace, but it would not prevent, but would rather impel, a man to go to the help of a neighbor, whose house was entered by a burglar, or to face a frenzied assassin, who was about to slaughter a woman. It would not be gentle appeals, or polite remonstrances, that he would use in such cases, but all the strength he could summon to render his interference effective. We can imagine that if the Good Samaritan, whom our Lord commended, had arrived a little earlier on the scene, the robbers would have learned that his sympathy with their victim was not limited to pouring oil and wine into his wounds. With nations, as with individuals, the peace-makers, who as Christ said, are the children of God, cannot in every case perform their beneficent functions, if they are determined that under no circumstances will they draw the sword.

We believe that it is such a situation that now confronts us. As we read of the horrors in Cuba, of women and children being deliberately starved to death, of nameless outrages perpetrated on inoffensive people, of innocent men thrust into prison and murdered in their cells, it would, of course, be possible for us to fold our hands and say it is no business of ours, and thank God that no foreign power can enslave or oppress us, but would that be a Christian course? Should we turn a deaf ear to the appeals for sympathy that come to us from the brave men who are contending against all the might of Spain for the right to be free, we should be false to Christian principles. To whom should such men turn for succor but to their great neighbor who enjoys the privileges for which they long, and to attain which they are laying down their lives?

True, the sword is the last resort, but have we not tried all others? We have been patient beyond precedent. We have appealed and remonstrated; we have tried to alleviate the suffering entailed by Spanish brutality, we have waited to see if pity and the sense of justice would not lead to a reform of Spanish rule, but we have seen that Spain has no method of treating a subject people but the dungeon and the bullet. In Cuba as everywhere else, where Spain rules, there is oppression, cowardly wrong, and heartless cruelty. She acts after her nature, and she has not changed during the centuries. Brutal to the core, her very sport the degrading bull-fight, remorseless, vindictive, she is a public nuisance among the nations. But we bore with her presence in this hemisphere, respecting her ancient rights and tolerating her miserable misgovernment. Even when, with dastardly treachery she forgot the duties of hospitality and destroyed our ship, anchored peacefully in her harbor, and sent our sailors to a cruel death, we did not threaten, as a less patient nation would have done. But now, seeing no signs of improvement in her policy, realizing that there is no hope in her of reform or decent government, we have stepped in, in the name of humanity, and declared that the cruelty shall cease. These poor people whom she has harassed and robbed and outraged shall be free. Their cry to God for many generations: "How long, O, Lord, how long," has been heard, and God has stirred up his people in this land to interpose on behalf of the down-trodden and enslaved. Unhappily, there is but one way. Words have been tried, and have failed; we have now to see whether the argument of force, which is the only argument Spain seems able to understand, can make her withdraw her teeth from the throat of her victim.

Toward Sunrise.

THE world is going on toward six o'clock in the morning instead of six o'clock at night. Instead of listening for the night-hawk and the whip-poor-will on the edge of the darkening woods, let us be watching for the getting up of the lark. Oh, for more tents pitched toward sunrising!

Commercial men say things are flat down, notwithstanding all the prophecies of business revival. Man alive! were things flat down in 1837? In 1857 the failures amounted to two hundred and ninety-one million dollars, and yet the chief fortunes of the country have been made since then. Every two or three years, since we were five years old, we have heard the cry of hard times, yet there always came a day of resuscitation. As certainly as you read these lines, business will rise, all the factories will be started, the burden of taxes will be removed, capitalists will get large revenue from their investments, and ten thousand men who, in this particular pass, have hard work to supply their families with bread, will make fortunes great enough to allow them brown stone fronts. We pitch our tent toward sunrising.

The submarine telegraph will some morning announce that a nation has been born in a day. We are only just planting our batteries on the coasts of China, Japan, India, and Africa, and when the Lord once opens the fire all along the line, you will see such a complete rout as the Midianites experienced when they mistook the splitting of Gideon's pitchers for the smashing of everything. Day-dawn for the dark places of our own land! Day-dawn for all the countless islands of the sea! Day-dawn for all the continents!

RESURRECTION.

"THOU art the Resurrection; thou, oh Christ!" In this glorious refrain of the oldest burial hymn of the Christian Church we ought to find the keynote of all our funeral ceremonies. Do we? No, from the first moment of that mysterious change called death, every circumstance of the last rites imply more the cessation of life than the entrance into life eternal. Can anything be more dismal than our black robes, and darkened rooms, and the funeral procession with its awful hearse, and its long row of black carriages winding slowly in silence and gloom, through the busy streets?

If we indeed believe that "Christ is risen, and become the first fruits of those that sleep," then death and the grave are emblems of victory, not of defeat. And if this is our good hope concerning the dead, why should we go mourning? Rather, let us rejoice for their enlargement; keep them in remembrance in our households, and never forget them in "the Communion of Saints." Why should we not abolish the emblems of death? The skull and cross-bones, the hearse and feathers, the silence and black robes, for something like what the Gospel teaches. No gloomy figure is there represented at the grave-mouth. It is an angel in celestial, shining white, that says, "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" He is risen, and therefore all that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

It is worth while asking if much of the dolefulness of our funeral rites does not come from a lurking doubt as to the salvation of the body. Yet, in that solemn clause of the Apostle's creed, "I believe in the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting," the salvation of the body occupies the central point between forgiveness and eternal life. How seldom we take in the vast and wonderous promise included in this clause. Even in the pulpit, how little is said about the body's future inheritance. Nevertheless, its salvation is pointedly spoken of in Romans 8: 23, and its future glory and likeness to the body of Christ taught in Phil. 3: 21. Whatever dignity or promise is attached to the word "resurrection" in the New Testament, applies to the body as well as to the soul; for the body is not only intimately connected with the resurrection, but with other three vital points of the most holy faith—the visibility of the church; Christ's intercession in his human body in heaven, and the judgment day. Without the body, where would be the visible communion of saints? Without the body, how shall we be justly judged for the deeds done in the body? And if there be any point dear to the Christian heart, it is the one expressed in the verse:

> See where He stands at Thy right hand,
> And pours the interceding prayer;
> Points to His hands, and shows His side,
> And says that I am graven there.

Christ redeemed our whole nature, and our bodies were ransomed at no less a price than the body of Christ.

We may not deny this in words, but in deeds we too often do so. Why? If we go down into the depths of our being for this disinclination to give the body its due honor, shall we not find the true reason in sensuality? There is great restraint in feeling that we are mystical members of Christ's body; it is hard with such a feeling to do things unbecoming that relationship; so it suits sensuality to speak contemptuously of the body; to call it vile, and then use it vilely. For if indeed we recognize the body as the temple of the Holy Ghost, we must keep pure and under surveillance the sacred place. This is a healthy question to face honestly, if we guide our lives by the answer.

As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall bear the image of the heavenly. In Christ's resurrection from the dead we see the model of our own resurrection and the grandeur of our destiny. We see what is glorious in his glorified humanity, and we look for nothing less in ourselves; therefore the honor and mystery of that marvellous change in which the mortal puts on immortality, should not be surrounded with the elements of despairing woe; it should be brightened on every side with hope; and carry with it an air of triumph.

If we want an example, consider St. Paul's beautiful death song: II. Timothy, 4: 6-8. No passage in all the epistles is more finely touched. Its noble rhythm is charged like a river full to the brim, with exalted utterances, and tender thought and feeling. In it there is no fear, no doubt; it is the expression of a soul knowing its labor ended, its storms gone by, it is the triumphant song of Christian faith, full of its sense of victory in the presence of the last enemy.

"For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand.

"I have fought a good fight. I have finished my course. I have kept the faith.

"Henceforth, there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing.

BRIEF NOTES.

There are at the present time, throughout the world, 5,945 corps of the Salvation Army, with 13,241 officers.

The result of the Salvation Army's recent self-denial week was that a sum of $165,680 was added to the funds, nearly $40,000 more than the amount raised last year.

Miss Annie Taylor, writing from Yatung, Thibet, says she has a school of eight children whom she teaches to sing and instructs in Christian truth. She also does medical mission work.

Rev. Morgan Wood has been holding a successful revival meetings in Toronto. They were held in the Bond Street Church and continued for two weeks. A large number of conversions are reported.

The income of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel which was established in 1701, and is one of the oldest missionary societies in the world, amounted last year to $1,587,560, the highest it has ever received in any year.

The International Lesson Committee in arranging the Sunday School Lessons for the next years from Jan. 1, 1900 to Jan. 1, 1906, has decided to devote two and a-half years to the study of the Old Testament and three and a-half to the study of the New.

Gammon Theological Seminary, of Atlanta, Ga., will celebrate its fifteenth anniversary May 10. Bishops Ninde, Hartzell, Gaines and many other men eminent in the Methodist Episcopal Church have promised to attend and take part in the exercises.

Mr. John Wanamaker has promised all of his employees who may go to the war that he will keep their places open for them; will pay their salaries in full to their representatives while they are away, and if they should fall, will pay a thousand dollars to their heirs.

The steamship Catalonia will sail on April 29 from Boston, Mass., carrying the official party of delegates from the United States to the World's Convention of Sunday Schools to be held in London in July. As the Catalonia is a British ship there is no fear of any trouble arising with the Spanish.

Mr. W. E. Stephens, of St. Louis, has given interesting Bible talks at the First Congregational Church of Morristown, N. J. They were illustrated by his model of ancient Jerusalem in the time of Christ, which gives an excellent idea of the city. Mr. Stephens' address is 889 Park Place, Brooklyn.

German scholars have recently succeeded in fixing some important dates in ancient history by the aid of astronomy. The mention of solar and lunar eclipses by the ancient chroniclers has enabled them to do this, as Prof. Genzel has computed the various eclipses of past centuries for a considerable period.

The present peaceable, temperate, and civilized condition of the Ukiah and Digger Indians who are accounted among the best tribes, is largely due to the labors of Rev. J. C. Burchard, of Santa Rosa, Cal., and his wife. Mr. Burchard is special adviser and lawmaker for them. They call him "father," and come to him with all their troubles.

There are now no fewer than 93 associations in the Indian National Union of Y. M. C. A.'s. Madras has 424 members, Calcutta 500, and Bombay even larger number; while exceedingly good work is being done also at Lahore, Poona, Nagpur and other of the more important centres. The Colombo Association in Ceylon has the names of 209 young men upon its membership roll.

The total receipts of the American Board for March were $55,498, a gain of $12,681 over March, 1897, and for seven months, $360,488, a gain of $77,613. Each department shows a gain except "Special Objects," which shows a loss of $25,514. There is a gain of $65,544 in legacies and $8,135 in donations from churches and individuals. The receipts include $22,886 for the debt.

Gen. Booth, of the Salvation Army, has received a royal welcome in New York. At the Union Theological Seminary the president, Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall introduced him to the students, and Prof. Briggs and other members of the faculty warmly commended him. At the meeting in Salvation Army Head-quarters and at the Academy of Music, on Sunday, April 3, the enthusiasm was unbounded.

The American Bible Society reports that in the southern part of the province of Kiong-sang, Korea, many people have professed Christianity entirely through the influence of Christian visitors and Christian literature. Rev. Mr. Miller and two Korean helpers visited some of these spontaneous converts, at their own request, and in one village 140 Koreans enrolled themselves as desirous to become Christians.

The revival conducted by Rev. Thomas Harrison at Beekman Hill M. E. Church, New York, continues with unabated fervor. An all-day Pentecostal meeting will be held on Sunday, May 8, commencing at ten o'clock in the morning. Friends coming from a distance will be able to obtain refreshments at noon and in the evening at the church. This service was to have been held on May 1, but Mr. Harrison was persuaded to delay his departure for another week.

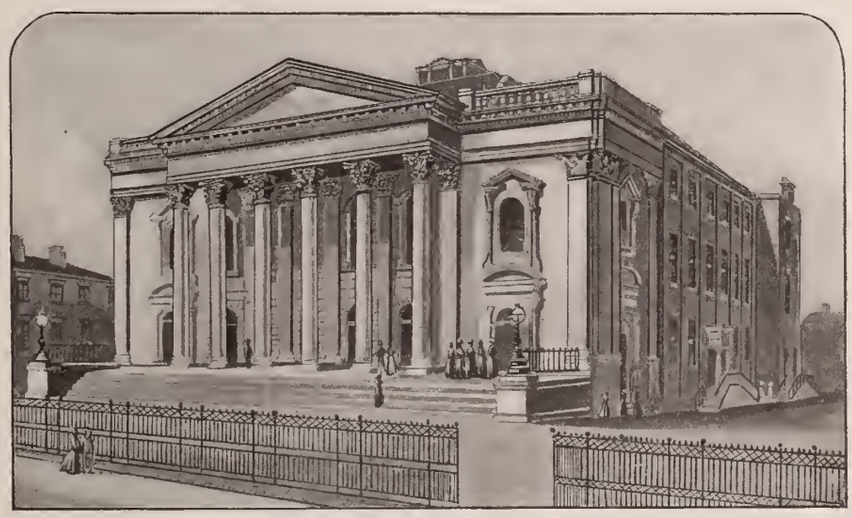
The Rev. William Carey, of Dhaka, East Bengal, India, the great grandson of the famous missionary, writes of a special visit to Calcutta and of a tour through Assam, which were full of results for the Christian Endeavor movement. He says: "A fine opening has been found for Christian Endeavor among the Hindoo girls in our mission day-schools. We have three societies among them in Dhaka, and three more in Calcutta. My Assam trip was very encouraging. In one village seventy of the hill Christians (Khasis), signed the pledge at one meeting."

Leavenworth, Kansas, has been the scene of a remarkable revival under the leadership of Major Cole. The Standard, of that city, says that it is many years since such a revival has been known there. "The evening meetings were held in the Baptist Church, that being the largest room in the city, and day meetings were held in various churches, in homes, or on the street, in Y. M. C. A., in shops and offices, in the State Prison, the United States Prison, at the Soldiers' Home, Home of the Friendless and Fort Leavenworth. More than fifteen hundred men, women and children have signified a desire to lead a Christian life, many of the conversions being very prominent." The meetings lasted eight weeks.

THE BURNED SANCTUARY.

A BRIEF cable dispatch from London announces that the Metropolitan Tabernacle, the great church so long identified with the labors of the late Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, has been burned to the ground. The fire broke out about noon on April 20th, and in less than three hours the church was a heap of ruins. No further details are given in the dispatch, so at present we know nothing as to the origin of the fire or the reasons for its strangely swift destruction. With the exception of one or two great cathedrals the Tabernacle was the largest place of worship in Christendom. It had accommodations in the main edifice for six thousand persons, and there were under the same roof a lecture hall capable of holding nine hundred more and a Sunday school with room for a thousand children. It was built specially for Mr. Spurgeon after various large buildings had been tried in various parts of London and found inadequate. During his life it was crowded at every service, and it was his custom to ask his regular hearers to absent themselves on a certain Sunday evening once a month to give strangers an opportunity of attending. On those occasions the great church was crammed almost to suffocation, and hundreds were shut out through want of room. The church was built in 1861. It was severely plain in style, but with excellent acoustic arrangements. There were two galleries running completely around the great room one above the other. The entire cost was $156,660, which was all subscribed before the building was dedicated. After Mr. Spurgeon's death, Dr. A. T. Pierson, formerly of Philadelphia, occupied the pulpit for a time, but Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, one of the twin sons of the great preacher, is now the pastor. The destruction of a building hallowed by so many blessed memories and so useful in its ungodly neighborhood, is one of the mysteries of providence. We should have expected that it would be specially protected from accident; but in this as in many mournful events, we have had to learn that the Christian must not expect immunity from the ills of life, but must learn to trust God in calamity, as in prosperity, believing that in the end all will be well.

"We went through fire and through water; but thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place. (Psa. 66: 12.)



PASTOR SPURGEON'S TABERNACLE, LONDON, RECENTLY DESTROYED BY FIRE.

A Dangerous Fire.

One of the fires so much dreaded by miners, because of the months of idleness they often involve, broke out at Hazelton, Penn., on April 11th. The flames started in an oil shanty on a slope of the Milnesville colliery, and had spread to the timbering when discovered. The superintendent at once gathered a large force of men, and a 1,000-foot hose was run down the slope from the breaker, and the miners were about to go to the bottom to direct the stream of water when it was remembered that there were dynamite cartridges, with the detonators attached, stored in the burning shanty. Everybody was at once ordered out of the slope, and nothing could be done but to await the explosion of the dynamite. This came finally and with such tremendous force as to scatter the waiting men. After the explosion, however, the men could approach the oil house and go on with the work of fighting the flames. With great difficulty and after two hours of the hardest kind of work, they reached the seat of the trouble and extinguished the flames. It was well that they remembered the cartridges in time; otherwise many lives might have been sacrificed. When the cartridges were put there the men did not foresee the possibility of fire. The same risk is sometimes incurred in morals and education. The fire of temptation sometimes produces ruinous disaster when it assails a mind in which the love of money or some other dangerous principle has been instilled:

Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you as though some strange thing happened unto you (I. Peter 4: 12).

Telephoning without Wires.

A dispatch from Kansas University reports that Prof. L. I. Blake is about to leave that institution to take charge of an operation on the basis of an invention he has been perfecting for several years. Its object is to communicate with ships at sea without the aid of wires. Prof. Blake went to Sandy Hook two years ago to explain his invention to several eminent naval officers who witnessed his experiments and were convinced that his scheme was practicable. In the present situation Prof. Blake did not feel justified in giving the details to the public, but the facts that were disclosed two years ago enable us to form some idea of the principles of his invention. It is based on the belief that sound waves too fine to be detected by the human ear may be caught and understood by something more sensitive, and this "something" he is convinced that he has produced. Just as the receiver of the long-distance telephone collects the tones of the voice of a man speaking miles away, Prof. Blake's receiver collects the sound waves which cannot be carried by wire. The sensitive apparatus is connected with a wire carried from the hold of a ship to the top of the highest mast and the sound waves from the shore or from another ship striking the wire are made articulate by the receiver. In the experiments, two years ago, Prof. Blake communicated easily with ships fifteen miles away. If our forefathers had heard that a communication was held with a ship fifteen miles away, they would have either refused to believe it, or have declared it miraculous. In view of such facts scientists who ridicule the miracles recorded in the Bible, might do well to be less positive.

Thus saith the Lord: If it be marvellous in the eyes of the remnant of this people in these days, should it also be marvelous in mine eyes? (Zech. 8: 6.)

In the Grave of the Pharaohs.

News from Egypt has been received of a most interesting discovery. M. Loret, Director General of the Antiquities Department, while excavating recently near the ruins of ancient Thebes, has found a double tomb which had not been disturbed. The laborers in digging came upon a steep inclined gallery which led to a well 26 feet deep. M. Loret descended this well and found himself at the entrance to a magnificent chamber in perfect preservation. The roof, which is supported by massive square columns, is painted a deep blue, studded with golden stars, and the walls are entirely covered with paintings, the colors of which are as vivid as if laid on only yesterday. At one end of this chamber, in an excavation sunken several feet below the level of the rest of the floor, was the sarcophagus of a king, placed upon a massive block of alabaster. The sarcophagus was of sand-stone, artificially colored a bright rose hue, and contains the mummy intact, with chaplets of flowers around the feet and neck. In a chamber to the right were nine more mummies, two of them bearing no name, and the others those of the Kings Thothmes IV., Amenophis III., Set Nakht, Seti II., Rameses IV., Rameses VI., and Rameses VIII., whose reigns are believed to have covered the period between 1500 and 1150 B.C. The tomb was apparently prepared for Amenophis II., and is supposed to have been opened later to receive the mummies of the other kings, probably to save them from violation. The floors of all the chambers are covered with a mass of objects—statues, vases, wooden models of animals, boats, etc., requiring immense care in sorting for removal. The whole constitutes one of the most impressive sights that can be imagined. For the first time on record, the body of an Egyptian king has been found in the tomb prepared for him, as previously discovered royal mummies had been removed from their tombs and secreted for safety at Deir el Bahari. It is not intended to disturb the bodies, but to leave them exactly as they were found and to run a gallery around the vault, from which visitors can look down upon them. Thus are the men fallen whose names were once a terror in the earth. The spectacle may well remind the visitor of the prediction uttered by God's servant when these kings were in the zenith of their power:

To whom are thou thus like in glory and in greatness? Yet shalt thou be brought down unto the nether parts of the earth. This is Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord God (Ezek. 31:18).

Naturalizing a Spaniard.

Several Spaniards living in New York have not availed themselves of the offer of the Spanish Government to convey them to Havana free of charge, but have instead applied to the courts for naturalization papers. They expressed their desire to become American citizens, and were examined as to their reasons and intentions. One of them who was examined by Justice Cohen, of the Supreme Court, gave answers typical of the others. In reply to questions, he said that he had taken out his first papers twenty years ago, but had never completed the formality. His wife was an American, and he wished to be an American, too. He understood the difference between this government and that of Spain, and he preferred to belong to the United States. He was aware that in any difficulty between his native country and the country of his adoption, his duty would be to give his services to the latter, and to implicitly obey the Government of the United States, and to do whatsoever was required of him as an American citizen. All this he took an oath that he would faithfully perform, and the Justice thereupon ordered him to be sworn in and naturalization papers to be given to him. It is not often that a man allows twenty years to elapse between obtaining his first and second papers. Probably this man would not have taken out his second papers at all, but for our present trouble with Spain. That made it necessary for him to declare his attitude. The same principle requires the follower of Christ to declare himself because war between the principles of good and evil is always being waged.

Whosoever therefore shall confess me before men, him will I also confess before my Father, who is in heaven; but whosoever shall deny me before men, him will I also deny (Matt. 10: 32, 33).

Pigeons as Witnesses.

A dealer in pigeons residing in St. Louis, Mo., lost a large number of birds recently. He searched the city for them and employed the police. Eventually, the police found a number of pigeons answering to the description of those that had been lost, in the possession of a young pigeon dealer. The young man was arrested, but as he had previously borne an excellent character there was some doubt of his guilt in the minds of his friends. At the trial, the issue seemed to narrow down to a question of veracity between the witnesses on the two sides. Each set was positive about the ownership and identity of the birds. There was little evidence outside of this to guide the court and the issue hung in the balance. At last the defendant proposed a test. He said: "Let a box of the pigeons be brought to court and released. If they go to the prosecutor's dovecote, I am guilty; if they go to mine, I am vindicated." The court accepted the test, and immediately a policeman was sent for a box of fifty of the pigeons. It was set on the window-sill of the court and the judge himself opened the door. The pigeons rose, circled about for a minute or two, and then flew off in the direction of the prisoner's home. The judge thereupon pronounced him not guilty and discharged him. It would be well if the same kind of proof were always furnished when the question is raised as to the kingdom to which a Christian belongs. It is very sad if when the restraints of home and church influence are temporarily removed, he finds his pleasure among the haunts of worldlings. The example of the apostles should always be followed:

And being let go, they went unto their own company (Acts 4: 23).

War on Mosquitoes.

A meeting was held last week of the residents on the south shore of Staten Island, N. Y., to discuss a question of common interest. Last year one of the gentlemen who attended the meeting, finding the ravages of the mosquitoes around his house almost unbearable, tried the experiment of spraying a part of his garden, in which there is a pond, with kerosene oil. He noticed that after this application the number of the pests sensibly diminished. He spoke of his success to his neighbors, who have now held a meeting to arrange for an extensive application of his method. It was agreed to seek the assistance of the Government in the experiment. The meeting decided to operate on a tract of about two square miles, running from the beach and extending to the ridge of hills in the neighborhood. It is proposed that every pond and pool of water be covered with the oil. The work will be undertaken by the end of the present month, in order to destroy the larvæ before they reach maturity. Every six weeks, or oftener, the district which contains water will be sprayed again until the end of the summer. The marshes in the rear of the beach are to receive a thorough spraying to prevent any breeding there, and they also will be treated constantly during the summer. The work will be done under the superintendence of an expert in entomology. They are acting wisely in beginning the process at the larvæ stage. If society acted on the same principle, much trouble might be saved. We build penitentiaries and expend large sums in attempting to reform criminals who might never have become criminals if they had been properly cared for trained and educated in their childhood.

Withhold not correction from the child; thou shalt beat him with the rod and shalt deliver his soul from hell (Prov. 23: 13, 14).

WATCHFULNESS.

S. S. Lesson for May 15. Matt. 24 : 42-51.
Golden Text, Matt. 24 : 42.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

"WATCH therefore: for ye know not on what day your Lord cometh." Watch; be awake, "Let us not sleep as do the rest, but let us, if we are sons of light and sons of the day, watch and be sober" (I. Thes. 5 : 5, 6. R. V.). Watch because the supreme hour of the church of Christ is at hand, the supreme hour of our own lives, when it shall be proved if we are indeed of "them that wait for him," to whom he shall come "a second time, without sin, unto salvation" (Heb. 9 : 28, R. V.), to receive us unto himself, that where he is there we may be also (John 14 : 3). "Let us not sleep as do the rest." Why? Because the history of the flood is to be repeated. Men will be absorbed with their ordinary life in the present; eating, drinking, marrying, etc., as though nothing better were in prospect; and as though Christ had never announced his return. And just as at the time of the flood, although Noah had for one hundred and twenty years preached of its coming, and warned men to be ready, yet "they knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so shall be the coming of the Son of Man" (Matt. 24 : 37-39).

At the time of the flood almost all the inhabitants of the world were taken by surprise; likewise when Sodom was destroyed. The testimony of Noah and the testimony of Lot were alike rejected. Men are mocking now at those who look for the coming of the Lord, and who know from the Scriptures that days of judgment are at hand, "they walk after their own lusts," as did the men of Noah's time, and of Lot's, and they say, "Where is the promise of his coming? for from the day that the fathers fell asleep all things continue as they were from the creation of the world" (I. Pet. 3 : 3, 4). They wilfully forget how creation came about by the Word of God, and how the heavens that now are, and the earth are by the same Word, stored up for fire [or, margin, stored with fire], being reserved against the day of judgment and destruction of ungodly men. "Let us therefore not sleep as do the rest, but let us watch and be sober."

Our Lord brings forth figure after figure to enforce the need for watchfulness. He speaks of the "fig tree," the people of Israel, as the first and all-important sign: "From the fig-tree learn her parable: when her branch is yet tender and putteth forth its leaves, ye know that the summer is nigh: even so, ye also, when ye see all these things, know ye that he is nigh, even at the doors" (Matt. 24 : 32, 33). And we do see before our eyes the budding of the fig-tree, the signs of life in the Jewish nation; we live in a time such as has never been since Christ ascended, and the angels said to the disciples, whose eyes had followed their disappearing Lord: "This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him going into heaven" (Acts 1 : 11, R. V.).

Again, the Lord uses the figure of a man whose house is broken into by a thief. If he had watched he would not have suffered his house to be broken into. Therefore he says again: "Be ye also ready; for in an hour that ye think not" — when ye are wholly unprepared — "the Son of man cometh." Again, he speaks of servants put in charge for an absent lord, who take advantage of his prolonged absence, who ill treat their fellow servants, and "eat and drink with the drunken," and he says: "The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he expected not, in an hour when he knoweth not, and shall severely scourge him, [margin] and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites" (Matt. 24 : 51, R. V.). This is a servant, one of the household, not a stranger; it is one who has been trusted with the Master's service, but who was not found watching. Will his part be with those who have to face the horrors of the great tribulation?

We find the mass of mankind ignoring the coming of the Lord, and it shall come suddenly as a snare upon all them that dwell on the face of all the earth (Luke 21 : 35), as terrible as that which took by surprise the men of Noah's and of Lot's time. But what of the master of the house who is robbed by the thief? What of the man in the field and the woman at the mill, who are left behind when others are taken? What of the unfaithful servant who counts upon his lord delaying his coming, and is taken by surprise? What of the foolish virgins, what of the servant who hid his Lord's money? Surely we have a picture here of children of God who are unready, and who might have been ready; Christian people who are taken by surprise when they might have been on the watch for their Lord's return. "Hold fast that which thou hast that no man take thy crown," is a warning which has an intense meaning in our day.

Surely we may learn by the grace of God the great lesson which these Scriptures teach us, to live always on the outlook for our Lord. If, indeed, the day-star has arisen in our hearts (II. Peter 1 : 19), everything takes its color from the one vanishing point in every view of the future; every line of the perspective converges at the one hope, the one event for which we are watching; the coming of our Lord. The great matter with us will not be where we are; in the field, at the mill, asleep in bed, busy trading with our talents; but are we doing all as we would be found doing it when our Lord shall come? Are we, indeed, in all else watching for him? Do we so live from day to day, and from hour to hour, that if he should come, "whether at even or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning" (Mark 13 : 35), we shall be found watching?

Even if he should tarry beyond this year, or yet longer, are we so living and working that we cannot be taken by surprise? One who has prepared for a coming guest, who has made provision, arranged the rooms, etc., cannot be startled by the bell or the knocker which tells that he is come, all the preparation was for him. There is such a thing as to live so, that eating and drinking, sleeping and talking, marrying and giving in marriage, planting, building, the work of the mill, and the cultivation of the fields is all carried on in such a spirit that the coming of the Lord would not be a dreaded interruption, but the expected consummation of all.

How then are we to attain this spirit of watchfulness? Not by effort. A wife does not watch for an absent husband as a hard and difficult duty, but if she is expecting him she cannot help it; her heart goes out to him. And, if indeed, we have so yielded our hearts and lives to our Lord that he has taken full possession of them, we cannot but be on the outlook for our Lord. We shall read the papers with the Word of God, so that we may recognize the signs of his coming. We shall in our conversation, and in our habits of life be sober, lest anything should carry us away or engross us, so that we miss the moment of moments which is at hand. We shall not be intoxicated by joy, nor depressed by sorrow. Mere transitory things lose their power when we are watching and praying that we may be "counted worthy to escape those things that shall come to pass and to stand before the Son of man."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

LEAVING the temple for the last time, Christ was very sad and sorrowful. He must have felt lonely, too, for there was not a person among all his friends and followers who could understand the things that he knew. Oppressed by the conviction that his ministry was closed, that there was not the slightest hope of his being accepted by the leaders of his people; foreseeing that within a few days he would be arrested and put to death, he was in no mood to listen to his disciples, when, like children, they wanted him to go with them to look at the splendors of the famous building. His prophetic gaze sees the desolation of all this magnificence, which would occur forty years afterwards. On his way back to Bethany, as he ascends the Mount of Olives, he speaks of it, and to the disciples, saturated with Jewish ideas, the picture he draws seems like the end of the world.

AN ORIENTAL SENTINEL ON GUARD AT A PALACE DOOR.

They conclude that he is about to establish a kingdom, which would supersede the Jewish, and they ask him when it would be? He does not satisfy their curiosity, but enjoins a practical duty. They were to watch. But he will not leave them altogether in the dark. He proceeds to speak of the destruction of Jerusalem, and is led on to speak of that other momentous event which is still in the future, the end of the dispensation and his coming in glory for judgment. He does not distinguish between the two events. Perhaps he did not himself know how far apart they would be. Another evangelist says (Mark 13 : 32) that he explicitly said he did not know when his coming would be, but he was probably aware that it would not be at the destruction of Jerusalem. It is evident that he fully expected to come again. No other meaning can be put upon his words. But he is anxious that his people should concern themselves with their duty, rather than with speculations as to his coming. He would have them live in such a way as that whensoever he might come, he would find them doing their duty, and so thoroughly in his spirit, that they would be glad, not terrified, at seeing him.

Shall cut him asunder. The penalty for a sentinel sleeping on duty under Roman law was death. The sentinel set to give warning of the approach of enemy, and if he slept, the enemy m come and the whole army, sleepin fancied security, might be butche Gurnal tells the story of a general finding a sentry asleep on his post, d his sword and ran him through on spot. INDIA SENDS THANKS.

low he Gifts of "The Christian Herald" Readers to the Famine Sufferers Were Appreciated by the Missionaries.

HE accompanying list of acknowledgments of contributions to the fund for the relief of the famine in India has been delayed from week to week by the demands on our space for the Cuban d We now gladly keep our promise o readers and thank them for their ce.

t ill be a pleasure to the contributors o th fund to see on this page a picture a roup of children who were saved n starvation through their gifts. The ot raph is sent us by Miss Lillian E. ei ch, who is in charge of the work of omen's Union Missionary Society Cnpore. The children were received he station in a most woebegone condi- n nd many of them were on the verge th by starvation and needed all the he and her helpers were able to to save their flickering lives. Miss ch writes: "I feel as though mere rd could but very poorly express our t de to your readers for all their help n the saving and support of these ttle famine sufferers, but I feel sure ul you but have seen them in all their se and suffering upon their arrival, en see these same children to-day heir bright, happy faces glowing health and happiness, your readers u feel more than repaid for all they ve one. The change in their spiritual d oral life, too, has been fully as great s i their physical life; and time and ga have our hearts gone up in gratitude o d at some fresh manifestation on the part of the children of the power with which the word of God has taken hold upon their minds, taking the place of the former idolatry and superstition which they had been taught in their heathen homes from the days of babyhood." Miss Deitrich is concerned about the future of her young charges, but as money has already been cabled to the International Missionary Committee, which has charge of the distribution of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD fund, we trust that by this time her anxiety has been relieved.

ORPHAN FAMINE GIRLS NOW UNDER THE CARE OF MISS DEITRICH, AT CAWNPORE

Another acknowledgment comes from a regularly organized church authority through Rev. J. E. Robinson, Secretary of the Central Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church of India. Mr. Robinson writes: "I have great pleasure in forwarding you enclosed a copy of a resolution passed unanimously and with great cordiality at the recent Central Conference. I may add that in my editorial capacity, numerous instances come under my notice of the grateful regard of those in this land for the good friends across the sea, who wrought so nobly in behalf of the suffering people. Their splendid service will never be forgotten."

Following is the resolution to which Mr. Robinson refers: "At the Biennial Session of the Methodist Episcopal Church of India and Malaysia, held at Lucknow, the following resolution was unanimously passed: 'Resolved, That the Conference place on record its thankful acknowledgment of the sympathy and generosity with which the people of other lands have responded to the cry for aid in the Indian famine of 1897. And that we make special mention of the great help given through the agency of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and also to the Rev. R. G. Hobbs and the Rev. George Lambert, through whose agency the shipload of grain was distributed to famine sufferers in India, and that we assure these gentlemen that not only was their generous service thankfully accepted by all who shared in their gifts, but also that this exhibition of international friendliness and sympathy has made a profound and pleasing impression upon the people of India, both rich and poor."

As our readers are aware, Dr. Hobbs sailed on the City of Everett with the corn contributed by the friends of this journal. Dr. Lambert also kindly served as a member of the International Missionary Committee organized by Bishop Thoburn to distribute our fund and corn.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Home Life in Holland.

Peaceful Dwellers in Cottage and Boat-House—Dutch Thrift and Economy.

"THE true house and home," says a traveler of many lands, "is in Holland. Is it the sturdy, honest Dutch character which makes Holland home life what it is, or is it Holland home life which makes Dutch character? We commend this question to discussion in the family and home circle. The little woman in our picture, in helping mamma, is taking her first lesson in good housewifery at somewhat heavy cost to the potatoes, from which she cuts such heavy peelings. Mamma and sister (who, it will be observed, is an industrious knitter), are busy nevertheless over baby's good will and earnest endeavor, if it does cost a few potatoes. Before she is many years older, baby will be able to make as good sauerkraut as anybody.

Over the doorways of Dutch homes, appear such inscriptions as "Peace is Mercy," "We are content," "Repose and Pleasure." Perhaps, a canal and drawbridge is in front, and the home has a look of being cut off from worldly interference and gossipy distractions; it suggests modesty, discretion, and a combined candor and reserve forbidding all thought of intrigue. Wagons do not rumble by; merchandise floats past on boats. Boat-houses with little Dutch homes—cat, dog, the flower-pots, bird-cage, baby and all, drift by. People are born, live, and die on boat-houses. As boat passes boat, a young man on the other, make each other's acquaintance; daily greeting and courtesies lead to love-making; they marry and go to housekeeping on a boat of their own. To cottages on shore and to passing boat-house, neighboring church-bells ring out the hour. On green and flowery meadows, large black and white cows graze. Perhaps there are sheep also. In Holland they use not only goat's and cow's milk, but also the milk of sheep, which is made into small cheeses that are considered great delicacies. Butter, particularly that of Friesland, is a valuable article of export, and dairy-rooms are models of coolness and cleanliness. A Spaniard showed a Friesland an orange, exclaiming, "This is the fruit my country produces twice a year." The Friesland replied a pound of golden butter, saying, "This is the fruit my country produces twice a day!" This Friesland butter, fragrant as a cowslip and sweet as new-mown hay, is shipped in vast quantities to London, where it sells at extraordinary prices. The farms, usually two and a-half acres each, are cultivated as carefully as gardens, and their industrious and economical owners generally manage to lay by something for a rainy day. And they always have enough to buy white curtains and mantel-piece ornaments.

A Little Life-Saver.

London papers tell about a little girl, ten years old, who saved a boy from drowning. She saw the little fellow struggling in the water, plunged in, and by the presence of mind and skill as a swimmer, rescued him. The little lady is Jessie W. Kitson, the daughter of a solicitor. In an interesting function in the town hall at Bolton, England, she was presented with the Royal Humane Society's bronze medal and testimonial, receiving these awards from the hands of George Harwood, member of Parliament. Had the little lady not known how to swim, this act of heroism would have been impossible to her; had she known how to swim, if she been unpossessed of clear head and steady nerves, it would still have been impossible, for there is always danger attending the rescue of a struggling person from the water even by an expert swimmer. Yet it is possible for each of us to perform daily such acts of service as Jessie's. Though we be not expert swimmers and have not nerves of steel, we may give the kind word, the kind look, the helpful deed that may, though we know it not, save some struggling soul ready to sink for the last time under the waves of temptation and trial.

Curfew and the Home.

There is a word which needs to be said in connection with the curfew ordinance, whose successful operation in reducing crime among the youth of towns where it is in effect, has been noticed in these columns. This word is distinctly not against the curfew ordinance; but it is a word of deep regret that such a law should be necessary. It does seem strange that a law is needed to make little children go into their own homes at night—the time that young things naturally seek the rest and the shelter of the mother's wing. Is it not possible that there is something wrong with homes into which children have to be driven by law? And what is that something? In the slums it is the liquor curse in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred. In the higher walks of life the same cause of child eviction from the home continues to exist. No cause is so fruitful of dissension among parents, and dissension between parents will always drive children, large and little, from the home. Let us pray God that America's homes—and the world's homes—may become so sweet that, when outside duty demands, bells may be rung to call the children out, but never to ring them in.

THE DUTCH MOTHER AND HER LITTLE HELPERS.

King Christian's Eightieth Birthday.

Christian IX., of Denmark, celebrated his eightieth birthday on April 8. He has been called the "Lucky King." Much of his good fortune has been due to his wisdom. Exaltation did not turn his head when the treaty of London, May 10, 1852, called him to the Danish throne. One of his daughters became Czarina of Russia, another wife of Great Britain's heir-apparent; his second son is King of Greece. His children seem to be "gilt-edged" consorts in the royal families of Europe. Christian's mode of life has ever been modest, wholesome and manly; all of his leisure from official labor has been devoted to his family; and the unpretentious castle of Bernstoff, near Copenhagen, has ever been a model home, where parents, brothers and sisters practiced kindness and love to one another. Poverty has not been unknown in it, and the girls who were afterwards called to such high places in Europe's greatest empires, often manufactured their own dresses, using much deftness and skill under the direction of their good mother, to make the best appearance on very slender incomes. King Christian is very popular. He is called the modern Haroun Al-Raschid because of his daily walks through his capital, seeing that everything is in proper order, and, it is said, settling differences on the spot between his contending subjects, even if they be but quarrelsome old women, to the satisfaction of everybody. "Wait till the king comes and we shall see," the good dames tell each other. And sooner or later he comes on his rounds, his two great Danes, the best known dogs in Denmark, running ahead of their master, and heralding his approach to the neighborhood, who rush to their doors with a stock of waiting grievances ready for royal ears.

Since God Doth Will.

Since God doth will that some shall dwell at ease,
And others shall know hardness; this is sure,
The lot that fits each nature he forsees;
And wherefore murmur when we must endure?
Some day his loving wisdom will be plain
As the sweet sunshine following after rain.

—MARY BRADLEY.

A SLEEPING CHILD.

WEARY and worn out with playing and fun—
Romping from morning till set of the sun
Slow over brown eyes the lids softly creep;
Dear little dreamer! sweet, blest be thy sleep!

As thou art lying in peaceful repose,
Angels are guarding thee from unseen foes;
Spirits of evil have no power to harm
While these kind beings are using their charm.

Bright be the visions that, thronging thy dreams,
Lead thy pure spirit by heavenly streams!—
Dreaming of pleasures to childhood so dear;
Childish contentment that knoweth no fear.

Oh, may thy innocence, sweetness and love
Rule in thy whole life, our darling! our dove!
When, in this earth-life, thy mission is done.
Angels of heaven will welcome thee home!

—WALTER SCOTT WELLER.

Pure Food In the Home.

"SOMETIMES my people, who are mostly from Western Russia," writes a Lutheran pastor, "tell me that they looked healthier, felt better, and were able to resist cold weather more readily and to work harder in Germany, where they had meat perhaps two or three times a week, than they can in this country, where they have meat in abundance. I tell them they had better bread." "Better bread! Why, it was coarse and dark," they say. "Yes," I answer, "that is why it was better. Life had not been rolled and bolted out of it."

The "black" or "rye" bread used by peasants in foreign countries, and of which we sometimes speak disparagingly, seems to be much more nourishing than our fine white flour, and hence the pitied peasant has rather the advantage of rich folks in palaces, who have to live on what Dr. Cutter, of Harvard University, calls, "the white and foolishly fashionable flour," from which the "life-sustaining value" has been almost entirely removed, for the sake of whiteness and powdery fineness, a "pretty complexion," as it were. Scientific investigation has demonstrated that life can be indefinitely sustained on the coarse, dark bread of the Italian peasantry, while a dog would starve in forty days on bread made of ordinary white flour. The fact is, bread as the "staff of life" is a matter for almost sacred consideration. To well-to-do men and women, who supplement their bread by an abundance of nourishing delicacies the question is not so serious as in the case of little children and of very poor people, to whom bread is the real life sustainer. It may be observed, however, that movements encouraging the production of pure food products are being instituted in America chiefly by wealthy and cultured members of society, who have intelligent realization of the importance of good bone, muscle, brain and nerve sustaining diet. Easily digested cereals multiply, and their consumers multiply. Whole wheat products become more and more popular, and civilized table dainties become simpler, more wholesome and nutritious. The modern house-mother knows that the moral as well as the physical nature of her children depends largely upon the food which they eat, and which keeps them in good health and good temper, or otherwise. Cooking classes are springing up all over the land, and bread-making is a fad with fine ladies, who begin to be very wise as to what sort of flour the advanced cook should use, and in response to their demand for perfect food stuffs, food shows are blossoming out all over the land.

Holland's Young Queen in Paris.

Her very interesting and youthful Majesty, Queen Wilhelmina of Holland, is now completing her education by a course of foreign travel—an education, which, by the way, will be quite finished when the fair sovereign of the Netherlands comes to her throne next fall. She speaks many languages quite fluently. The young lady is no book-worm, however; she is very fond of out-door sports, skates gracefully, as a true Dutchwoman should; rides a wheel, and is frequently met driving her own carriage on the Hague. She is accompanied by her mother, the Queen Regent Emma, traveling incognito. Queen Wilhelmina is now in Paris, delighted with her opportunities for seeing the world, and, it may be added, delighting her hosts, who are pleased beyond measure to entertain such a charming guest.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

FAREWELL TO ITALY.*

WE strolled in the yellow gloaming
(Our speech with musing still),
Till the noise of the militant village
Fell faint on Calvary Hill.

Then the dead seemed the only living,
And the real seemed the wraith,
And we yielded ourselves to the vision
We saw with the eye of Faith.

Then one said, "Let us go no farther:
'Tis fit that we make farewell
While forest and lake and mountain
Are under the vesper spell."

As we rested, the leafy silence
Broke like a cloud at play,
And a browned and burdened woman
Passed singing down the way.

'Twas a song of health and labor
Of childlike gladness blent
With the patience of the toiler
That some have called content.

"Nay, this is the word we have waited,"
I said, "That a year and a sea
From now, in our doom of exile,
Shall echo of Italy."

Just then what a burst from the bosket—
As a bird might have found its soul!
And each by the halt of the heart-throbs
Knew 'twas the rossignol.

The Gold-Digger's Hunger.†

"IT must be terrible to be without food and money."

"No one knows what it means till he experiences it. I worked all day without food. It seemed as if I must strike it then. Besides, I took a sort of morbid pleasure in abusing myself—as if I were to blame. I had been living on canned beans, and flapjacks, and coffee, without milk or sugar, and I was weak and sick—but it all had to end. About four o'clock I dropped my pick and staggered to the light. It was impossible to do anything more."

There were tears in her eyes now, for his voice unconsciously took on the anguish of that despair.

"I sat there looking out toward the mountains and down the camp. The blasts were coming from all hills—the men were going home with their dinner-pails flashing red in the setting sun's light. It was terrible to think of them going home to supper. It seemed impossible that I should be sitting there, starving, and the grass so green, the sunset so beautiful. I can see it all now as it looked then, the old Sangre de Christo range! It was like a wall of glistening marble that night.

"Well, I sat there till my hunger gnawed me into action. Then I staggered down the trail. I saw how foolish I had been to go on day after day hoping, hoping, until the last cent was gone. I hadn't money enough to pay the extra postage on a letter which was at the office. The clerk gave me the letter and paid the shortage himself. The letter was from my sister, telling me how peaceful life was at home, and it made me crazy. She asked me how many nuggets I had found. You can judge how that hurt me. I reeled down the street, for I must eat or die. I knew that."

"Oh, how horrible!" the girl said softly.

"There was one eating-house at which I always took my supper. It was kept by an Irishwoman—a big, hearty woman, whose husband was a prospector, or had been. 'Biddy Kelly's' was famous for its home cooking. I went by the door twice, for I couldn't bring myself to go in and ask for a meal. You don't know how hard that is—it's very queer, if a man has money he can ask for credit for a meal, but if he's broke, he'll starve first. I could see Biddy waiting on the tables—the smell that came out was the most delicious, yet tantalizing, odor of beef stew—it made me faint with hunger."

His voice grew weak and his throat dry as he spoke.

"When I did enter, Dan looked up and said, respectfully, 'Good evenin', Mr. Clement,' and I felt so ashamed of my errand I turned to run. Everything whirled then, and when I got my bearings again, Dan had me on one arm and Biddy was holding a bowl of soup to my lips."

Philadelphia's First Public Library*

By BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, Projector.

AT the time I established myself in Pennsylvania, there was not a good bookseller's shop in any of the colonies to the southward of Boston. In New York and Philadelphia the printers were indeed stationers; they only sold paper, etc., almanacs, ballads and a few common school books. Those who loved reading were obliged to send for their books from England. The members of our club had each a few. We had hired a room to hold our club in. I proposed that we should all of us bring our books to that room, where they would not only be ready to consult in our references, but become a common benefit, each of us being at liberty to borrow such as he wished to read at home. This was accordingly done.

Finding the advantage of this little collection, I proposed to render the benefit from the books more common by commencing a public subscription library. I drew a sketch of the plan and rules that would be necessary, and got a skillful conveyancer, Mr. Charles Brockden, to put the whole in articles of agreement to be subscribed, by which each subscriber engaged to pay a certain sum down for the purchase of books, and an annual contribution for increasing them. So few were the readers at that time in Philadelphia, and the majority of us so poor, that I was not able, with great industry, to find more than fifty persons, mostly young tradesmen, willing to pay down for the purpose forty shillings each, and ten shillings per annum. On this little fund we began. The books were imported; the library was opened one day in the week for lending to the subscribers, on their promissory notes to pay double the value if not duly returned. The institution soon manifested its utility, was imitated by other towns, and in other provinces. The libraries were augmented by donations; reading became fashionable, and our people, having no public amusements to divert their attention from study, became better acquainted with books, and in a few years were observed by strangers to be better instructed and more intelligent than people of the same rank generally are in other countries.

The Christian Gentleman.†

The true Christian gentleman, then, is not only the man who is honest, upright, and wholesome in his outward life, but the one whose quiet meditations, hidden musings, and secret longing are in harmony with the pure and noble spirit of Jesus Christ.

If any who who hear me are painfully conscious of falling below that standard, and are ready to cry out in despair, "How can I save myself from the evil imaginations that tempt and torment me from day to day?" I bring you the good news of the divine Christ who once met a man who had an evil spirit—a spirit so vile that it drove him from his home and made him an outcast among the tombs of the dead. And when Christ met this man he had compassion on him, and cast out the evil spirit, and the after life of that man was full of peace. It may be so with any man who hears me this day.

the Perfume of the Soul.

eople so resist the divine influ- they are only brought to wisdom rd school of experience in dis- d chastisement. How much is when we follow the Lord in ield the perfume he merits from us without requiring to be crushed in the mill of sorrow!

Heretofore, the only method of extracting the perfume of flowers has been to cook them in beef fat, but a man in San Diego, Cal., who has been experimenting with flowers and perfumes for a great many years, has studied out a new method of collecting the sweet odors by which he gets the fragrance without destroying the flower. He takes a glass funnel and heats the thin end until it can be drawn out to a fine point. Then the funnel is filled with ice and placed on a retort stand, with the pointed end in a small glass bottle, whose neck it must not touch. Then the whole thing is carried into a greenhouse, and placed among the flowers whose odors it is desired to collect. The vapor which rises from the flowers is filled with their fragrance, and as it meets the colder surface of the funnel it is condensed into drops on the outside of the glass, and trickles down into the bottle. A large amount can be gathered in a surprisingly short time, and of very strong quality, for it has been found that ninety per cent. of the contents of the bottle will be perfume. It is thought that this new method will revolutionize the perfume industry.

Church Atmosphere.

The atmosphere of a Christian church should be fragrant with the reverent and brotherly spirit of Jesus Christ. Not only prayer and song are necessary to create such an atmosphere, but the loving service of the membership of the church, seeking to be helpful to the poor and sinful, as was their Master. The very air breathed in such a church is inspiring because of the presence of the spirit of Christ:

Probably there is no spot on earth where more highly inflammable matter lies exposed to such monster conflagrations, as that recently reported from Baku, than in the district lying just beyond that town on the shores of the Caspian Sea. Everything seems saturated with petroleum; the air one breathes is laden with the odor, and the waters of the bay are covered with an iridescent sheen which at night may be set on fire with most weird effect. Not only is black naphtha to be seen in giant fountains playing from the very earth, but white naphtha flows of itself in places, and a short way off are the natural gas vents over which the natives do their cooking without coal, and which once fed the sacred Zoroastrian fires. No wonder that the ancient Persians looked on this as holy ground, where the eternal heaven-fed flames of life burst forth in sacred buildings, the remains of which are still extant.

The Value of Adaptability.

Great talents often fail of achieving success through lack of tact and adaptation. To study to know how to adapt one's self to the situation in hand, so as to make all one's powers count for a good purpose, is the duty of everybody:

A recent observer saw a black snake try to capture a lizard for its dinner. The lizard had the better of the snake in the contest, which took place in a cluster of saplings. The lizard would run up a sapling clear to the top, and patiently wait until the snake would slowly wind its way about half way up the sapling, when the lizard would jump from the top of the tree to the ground, and the snake would fling itself from the tree, both striking the ground about the same time, but before the snake could get itself straightened out, the lizard which did not have to uncoil, would scale up another sapling, when the snake would repeat its efforts to procure the dinner. The snake, not being the ready climber that the lizard was, was at a great disadvantage in the contest, and, after many efforts, apparently gave it up as a fruitless job.

The Tartarlithine Club.
In one of the principal towns of the North-west there has been formed one of the most curious clubs in existence at the present time. It is called the "Tartarlithine Club," and its membership is composed only of persons suffering from gout and rheumatism.
The club was started by one of the leading pharmacists in the North-west, who was cured of rheumatism by taking Tartarlithine. The members meet at his store every day for the purpose of taking the mid-day dose. Each member has his own bottle, labeled with his own name, and these are arranged on a shelf in a corner of the store. At last accounts the membership was gradually decreasing, owing to the fact that the patients were no longer able to comply with the requirements for membership.

Mr. Sankey at Athens.

The Singing Evangelist now on his Way Home after his Oriental Tour.

MR. IRA D. SANKEY, who for several months past has been journeying in the East, is now on his way home. He sends us this letter from Rome, which will be read with interest:

IRA D. SANKEY.

ROME, April 7th. We have only time for one more short letter before leaving for London, where we are to take part in a number of the "May meetings" before sailing for New York.

Our visit of over a week at Athens was one of great interest and pleasure. The city is much larger than we had expected to find, and much more cleanly than any place we had visited since leaving home last January.

We had the pleasure of visiting the Royal Palace, located in the centre of the city, also of seeing the King and Queen on several occasions, as they were driving about the city. The people are very kindly in disposition, and fond of Americans, as they believe that the people of the United States are in favor of freedom for all men everywhere.

We visited the wonderful Acropolis, with its magnificent marble columns and shattered temples; but to us the most interesting place of all was the spot on Mars Hill, now marked by the Archæological Society as the place where St. Paul probably stood when he preached to the Athenians the wonderful sermon found recorded in the 17th chapter of Acts.

After passing through several towns, visited in the older times by St. Paul—such as Corinth, Patras, Corfu and Brindisi—we called at Naples, a city very beautiful for situation. One of our first excursions was to the top of Mount Vesuvius. We had a look into the lake of fire, but were glad to get away from the ascending smoke and gas at the summit of the mountain. There is no telling when another great eruption may take place.

A day was given to visiting Pompeii, and the excavations now going on. It was a day long to be remembered. We went back to Naples in silence, and with heavy hearts.

Rome is a most interesting city. We have visited St. Peter's twice and expect to go again on Easter morning. We will then hasten on to Florence and Venice. We have had the pleasure of taking part in a number of meetings here. Yesterday we held, by invitation of Rev. J. Gordon Gray, D.D., and others, a "service of sacred song," at 3 P.M., in the Scotch Presbyterian Church. The place was crowded. At 4.30 I spoke to the theological students under the direction of the M. E. Church in Rome, and greatly enjoyed hearing them sing a number of Gospel Hymns in Italian. IRA D. SANKEY.

Palestine Colonization.

A meeting was recently held in London in the interest of the new colonizing movement in Palestine. Col. Goldsmid, the leader of the movement in an address, said it was to the interest of the powers of Europe that some solution of the Jewish problem should be arrived at, and no other practical solution appeared probable. All that they wished for was the re-establishment of a state in their ancient land under the guarantee of all the powers, where the weary would be sure of asylum.

Colonel Conder, R. E., discussed the conditions under which the Jews had lived at different times since the destruction of the temple at Titus. In conclusion, he could not help referring to a future which might not be long deferred. "We live," said Col. Conder, "in critical times, and the efforts of statesmen may not be permanently successful in warding off a conflagration in the East due to the discontent of subject populations, and to the increasing poverty of the Turkish dominions. If once the flame is lighted, the Palestine questions would come to the front, and it is sad to think that a country naturally fertile and peaceful might become a theatre of useless wars. Two great powers have their eyes on the reversion of the Holy Land: one Greek, the other Romanist—Christians by profession—namely, Russia and France. It is doubtful whether either would yield its claim." "Was it not possible," he continued, "that Jewish organization and intellect might be exerted to save Palestine from its present miserable condition, and from the danger of yet greater miseries in the future? Among Christians, at least in England, any arrangement which might lead to the neutralization of Palestine, as a kind of West Asiatic Switzerland, would be welcomed; and such neutralization might be effected without any great displacement of existing conditions."

After prolonged debate, it was resolved: "That this conference is of opinion that the national idea is an essential and an integral part of the Zionist movement, and that it is the duty of all Jews to unite in order to aid the movement."

The Fourth Sword.

At the coronation of Edward VI. of England, when the three swords for the three kingdoms were brought to be borne before him, the King observed that one thing was yet wanting, and he called for the Bible. "That," he said, "is the sword of the Spirit, and ought, in all right, to govern us, who use these for the people's safety by God's appointment. Without that sword we are nothing; we can do nothing. From that we are what we are to this day . . . we receive whatsoever it is that we at this present do assume. Under that we ought to live, to fight, to govern the people, and to perform all our affairs. From that alone we obtain all power, virtue, grace, salvation, and whatsoever we have of Divine strength."

Insect Industries—A New Discovery

Western journals give information that a discovery promising great economic value comes from Mesa Grande, Calif. The vegetation in this district is infested with an insect which, on being removed from the twigs of an oak, on which it thrives, and compressed in quantities by the hand, becomes a more or less pliable lump, somewhat resembling rubber, but not possessing the same elasticity. Part of it has been proved by chemical analysis to be a true wax, and part resembles rubber in its physical properties. The product is equally interesting from a chemical and industrial point of view, and the supply is well-nigh inexhaustible. Commerce owes a large debt to the insect world. A species of scale insect in China yields a pure white wax of great value and rarity. The Chinese wax is said to have ten times the illuminating power of other waxes. It is a beautiful substance resembling beeswax more than vegetable wax in its chemical composition, and is clear white in color. Our debt to the cochineal bug for dyes and to the lac insect for the the lac stick and button lac of commerce is well known. In Southwestern Asia the creosote bushes feed an enormous number of lac insects, of yet undeveloped commercial possibilities. The smallest of God's creatures fill some good purpose, and our most trivial deeds of service form parts, no doubt, of divine economics.

Good News for Asthma Sufferers.

We are glad to announce that the Kola Plant recently discovered on the Congo River, West Africa, has proved itself a sure cure for Asthma, as claimed at the time. We have the testimony of ministers of the gospel, doctors, business men and farmers, all speaking of the marvelous curative power of this new discovery. Hon. L. G. Ochte, of Greeley, Iowa, writes that he could not lie down night or day from Asthma, and the Kola Plant cured him at once. Rev. G. Ellsworth Stumpp, pastor of the Congregational Church at Newell, Iowa, was cured by it of Asthma of twenty years' standing, and many others give similar testimony. To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 114 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who suffers from any form of Asthma. In return they only ask that you tell your neighbors of it when cured yourself. This is very fair, and we advise all sufferers from Asthma to send for the Case. It costs you nothing.

The Christian Incarnation.

The ristian's Body a Temple of God and hat it Implies. I. Cor. 3 : 16-23.

This idea of incarnation is the central doctrine of all Paul's teaching. It is his remedy for sin, his basis of hope for the past and the future. He believed that as God was in Christ, so ri by the Holy Spirit will be in his eop, changing their hearts, transform- g eir lives, and making them fit for he ry presence of God. How far- ac g this idea is may be realized by a tleonsideration. If God is present in y ul, there must be power. No temp- tic can successfully assail the citadel e he is. There must also be power rvice. The man in whom God e must be irresistible when he takes ce in the army of Christ's followers. e will also be peace in the soul when ds there. The lower nature will be t to the higher, rebellion will cease. d s rule will be supreme. No more sles, no more self-reproach, no more tern strife, but a sweet peace which m from being in accord with our a and Lord. There will also be pro- es The whole idea of sanctification n revealed at conversion. As the nsence becomes more active, more d and more quick-sighted, the process s ctification goes deeper. It is not fi nt to refrain from sins of action d ord; sins of thought become odious. nf desires must not be held in check: y ust be cast out. The memory has b ourged, imagination has to be puri- d. With Christ in the heart the whole tu is gradually brought under his a until it is attuned to his spirit. We ecce, not so much his followers, as his ery personations. Our words and acts s. and as he was, so are we in this wo How is it that this delightful con- pth is not realized in every Christian? hi of the reason is given by Paul in e ssage associated with the topic. e mple of God is holy. But the tem- y be defiled. The beneficent power ay e resisted. There may be a lack of pcity. A leaning to our own way, a de- n ce on our own powers, a hungering r l gratifications may thwart God's pl us; for it is very gentle, and will nc ho man into the way of life. PIRITUAL WARFARE.

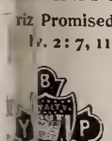
riz Promised to Him that Overcometh. v. 2: 7, 11, 17, 26-28; 3 : 5, 12, 21.



Warfare is presented in the New Testament in many passages, as a symbol of the Christian's life. He is represented as fighting a battle and as overcoming. Our experience confirms this view. Life s a uggle and if we cease to struggle e ift into evil as surely as the rower n apid river will drift with the stream Th he ceases using his oars. A garden hat neglected brings forth weeds. They o1 require sowing or planting. To av hem spring up it is only necessary l the garden alone. So it is with the pu There must be continuous and per- st effort. The defilement that we n ct in our contact with the world us e cleansed. The worldly principles th are uttered in our hearing must be oot up before they can bear fruit. All ro1 us the insidious foe has his trench- s. l approaches unseen to the attack. he ecret undermining, as well as the e ssault, will be fatal if we are off our a. And within the citadel there may t chery. Old pleasures and gratifi- ti s were very sweet, and there are s ns in our natures which crave a re- rr former indulgence. It is not easy, is know, to overcome. Nor is the at all within. The Christian is called to a ggressive campaign. Is there some fie or relative under the power of evil? s re some business acquaintance who s lig altogether for the world? Is there so district near us in which evil is ncti? In any of these cases there is a call to activity. The Christian may speak a word that will call another soul into light, or may initiate a movement that may redeem a neighborhood. It is not easy to do this, for all power seems to be allied against Christ, but with him to give us power, we may overcome. To incite us to make the effort Christ gives promises that may well nerve us for the struggle. To him that overcomes he "will give to eat of the tree of life," "he shall not be hurt of the second death," he will be fed with the hidden manna and receive the stone with the secret name and shall have power over nations and be clothed in white raiment and shall become a pillar in God's temple and finally shall sit with Christ on his throne. Surely such prizes are worth all that the struggle may cost.

INDIVIDUAL EFFORT.

Look Up and Lift Up an Anniversary Motto. Psalm 121; Acts 3 : 1-8.

There ought to be in our time such an advance in Christ's kingdom in the world, as no former generation has witnessed. The societies that have been organized to wage the battle of good against evil had no counterpart in the past. The number of their members is enormous and they stretch out to every part of this great country and to other lands. If every member will put forth the strength which is offered to him there must surely be a victory greater than all that have gone before. That however, is essential. It will not do to depend on the organization. No man can do his duty by proxy. The soldier who enlists has not done his work when he has put on the uniform and taken hold of his weapons; nor has the Christian performed his part when he becomes a member of a society. He becomes a member, just as the soldier enlists, that he may aid in carrying on the campaign. His mere presence in the ranks is not enough. The incident in the latter of the two passages associated with the topic is a suggestion of how the individual duty is to be performed. The two apostles had the promise of powers as yet untried. They were on their way to the house of God, doubtless, two of a crowd bent on the same errand. The lame man asked for a gift. What should they do? They could not give him the thing he asked for, being as poor as he. He wanted nothing else, but he needed something else, which they could give him. How many there are around us who are not conscious of a need which we might supply! They do not ask us because they do not realize their need, nor do not know what we could impart. Yet what a blessing it is! What a change it would make in their lives if they had in them the eternal life which we could tell them how to obtain! The two apostles were poor, weak men, but they knew where there was strength. "In the name of Jesus," they uttered the commanding words. The same name is still mighty and there are many around us who are unable to walk in the way of life. Can we not take them by the hand and in the name of Christ help them to rise out of the misery and degradation in which they lie? It would be well for all if on this anniversary every individual member would pledge himself anew to such work, resolved that let the others do as they might, he, for his part, would do his duty.

Free to all Readers.—The New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

As stated in the last issue the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, is proving a wonderful curative in all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disordered action of the Kidneys and urinary organs. The New York World publishes the remarkable case of Rev. A. C. Darling, minister of the gospel at North Constantia, New York, cured by Alkavis, when, as he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was preparing himself for certain death. Similar testimony to this wonderful new remedy comes from others, including many ladies suffering from disorders peculiar to womanhood. The Church Kidney Cure Co., of No. 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, who so far are its only importers, are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free

Weak Lungs

Recent Progress of Medical Science

Extract from Dr. Robert Hunter's lectures on the lungs have been published from time to time in this paper for the purpose of informing the people of the real nature of lung diseases and the discovery of a successful treatment of the lungs by Antiseptic Medicated Air Inhalations. No truth of medical science has been more conclusively proven and established than that Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrh of the Lungs have been and are being radically cured by this treatment, while even Consumption, the most dreaded of all lung complaints, is arrested and entirely eradicated by Dr. Hunter's most recently discovered germicides, which kill and expel from the lungs the bacilli of tuberculosis. From all parts of the Union come the grateful acknowledgments of patients whose lives have been saved by Dr. Hunter.

Mr. A. L. Peer, 179 Washington St., Newark, N. J., says: "My lungs were left in a weak condition from La Grippe and rapidly grew worse. They became affected. I had twenty-seven hemorrhages, and my condition became very critical. I lost fifty pounds in weight and was confined to my bed. My physicians gave me up to die. Dr. Hunter was consulted, and I began to improve immediately. My breathing became freer, the hemorrhages ceased altogether, and I steadily gained in strength and flesh. I now weigh more than I ever did, and am positively cured. Dr. Hunter's treatment was the thing that saved my life."

Any subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who is interested can obtain this book free by addressing Dr. Hunter at 117 West 45th St., New York.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

Advice to a Young Student—Training a Twelve-Year-Old—The Demeanor of Servants.

YOUR letter, my dear Aspiring Student, interested me very much; but you will pardon me for telling you at the outset that you are wrong in being willing to let anybody, no matter how good a friend, outside of your family, bear the entire expense of your education. In this world God helps those who help themselves. If he has not put it in your power to defray any part of the expense of the education you desire to obtain, he does not mean that you should seek such assistance from strangers. Let me tell you of a brave young woman, whom I met a summer or two ago at a conference. In the house where I was staying with other Christian workers, we were delighted with the quality and excellence of the food served us on the table every day. The lady who kept the house gave me the pleasure of an interview with the cook, a bright, cheery young woman who had been a student for several years in a well-known seminary. I do not know when I ever have met a person who so delighted me as did this young lady. She had been left dependent upon herself, her parents having died in earliest childhood, and she had literally earned every dollar for herself from the time that she was ten years old. She told me that God had given her the ability to cook; that she knew how to put things together and made them taste as they ought, without anybody telling her. You know some people are born cooks; and while she could use rules, yet she was one of the fortunate people who can depend on their own judgment and have things turn out as they should. She told me she had alternated her times at school with times of work, and when she had saved enough for a term at school, she had gone there, beholden only to her own efforts. I will never forget her radiant face as she said to me, "I shall obtain the best education this country can give; but it may take me a long time. Meanwhile I am just going a step at a time, doing my duty." While staying at Petoskey, in Michigan, some years ago, and working in connection with the Bay View Chautauqua, I met another brilliant young woman who had educated herself entirely by her own exertions. Her method was to canvas for books in the summer, or for subscriptions to a periodical, and in this way she earned enough to pay her way at school. Other young women whom I have met have supported themselves in schools where they had been admitted, either by some definite work which they have engaged to do, or by undertaking some duties for outside persons or enterprise. For instance, I met at one of our eastern colleges, a young woman who had largely paid her way during her college career by her articles written for the press.

YOUR puzzle, my dear Cleanthe, about your little twelve year old daughter interests me very much indeed. My advice to you is to take her out of school for at least a year and let her have a great deal of freedom and time to romp about in the fresh air. She is evidently passing through a period of life when she needs to be very carefully watched. Her rapid growth has taxed her strength. Even if her teachers do object to her loss of a year from the school-room, their point of view cannot be quite that of a mother, who sees the child in every hour of the life outside of the school-room. You tell me that the little girl is timid; that she has developed a fear of the dark, and that she does not like to be left alone. Try to manage in such a way that she shall not be obliged to sit in the dark. When she goes to bed, let there be a shaded light somewhere near until she falls asleep. It is possible that some unwise person may have frightened her by telling her a gruesome tale. You will only deepen the impression by stern remonstrance. A little indulgence at the present time may save you from a great deal of worry in the years to come; besides there is a great deal that a little girl of twelve may learn to do about the house. She can assist you in light tasks about the home, take some lessons in cooking from her mother (and there is no cooking school in the land which surpasses her mother's own kitchen); you may teach her to make and mend her own clothes; and, above all, you may see that every day of her life she is out for some hours in the blessed open air. She will return to her books after such an interval, much strengthened and refreshed by the long vacation.

YOUR question, my dear Persis, as to the proper demeanor of your help, is a most interesting one. In the part of the country where you live, it is impossible to secure persons to assist you with the work, unless you make them members of the family. The efficient young woman who now works in your kitchen, and lends a hand about the house wherever it is needed, is a farmer's daughter in the neighborhood. She is quite willing to serve you faithfully; but she wishes a seat at your table and desires to be treated in many ways as if she were a daughter of the house. You object to this when you have company, and while you do not mind a certain freedom on her part when you are alone with your husband and children, you wish your domestic to keep in the background when friends are visiting you. Pardon me if I tell you that I think you are sacrificing a great deal of every day comfort to a mere figment. Your own convenience all the time, and the comfort of your household is worth more than a little show of ceremony when persons outside the family are staying with you. By the exercise of a little tact, you can probably keep this young girl from too much freedom in the conversation at such times, or being an older women, you can tell her that you do not often see your friends, and that when you do, it will be pleasanter for them and for you not to have too much intrusion on her part. To do this without hurting her feelings, you would be obliged to take the right moment and to speak with great gentleness and affection.

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

GROWING CHILDREN.

THE HOME DOCTOR:

"Against the practice of giving tea and coffee to children, we cannot speak too strongly. Childhood is the period when the nervous activity is at its greatest. The brain is ever busy receiving new impressions. Reflex action, co-ordination of muscles, and the special senses are all under a special course of training. The nervous system is pushed to its utmost capacity, and long is the list of victims that follow its over-stimulation. In these little people, nothing but harm can come from the use of such cerebral stimulants as tea or coffee. Bad, then, as this practice is, let us as physicians be aggressive in its prohibition. Do not be satisfied by answering "No," when asked as to its use, but let us teach the families with whom we come in contact that such practice is evil. We speak emphatically, because not only among the poor and uneducated, but among the rich, who should know better, this practice is marvelously prevalent."

A man, who tried Postum Cereal Food Coffee, said that it might be solid nourishment, but he didn't like its taste. He is now one of its most enthusiastic supporters, having discovered the secret of delicious Postum. After boiling commences, allow it to boil full 15 minutes. Not simply put it on the stove for 15 minutes, but count the 15 minutes after boiling commences. That brings out the food value and the delicious flavor. It certainly does make the children bright and healthy, and has proven a Godsend to many an adult whose daily ails were not understood until Postum took the place of coffee.

Postum is the only cereal coffee yet discovered, with a coffee taste, that is pure and free from low grade coffee or other drugs.

"They talk about a woman's sphere,
As though it had a limit;
There's not a place in earth or heaven,
There's not a task to mankind given,
There's not a blessing or a woe,
There's not a whisper, yes or no,
There's not a life, or death, or birth,
That has a feather's weight of worth,
Without a woman in it."

Our Readers are familiar with the BEAUTIFUL LIFE and WORK of who after having done so much to help and bless her sisters, has now gone to her reward. Only a few months before her last sickness, she put the finishing touches to a work specially prepared by her for us—the brightest, best, strongest and greatest work of her life, entitled

OCCUPATIONS FOR WOMEN

This exceedingly practical and serviceable volume—the equal of which has never been issued—shows the tremendous strides which have already been made by women, and points out numerous new fields and opportunities for the gentler sex, what preparation is necessary, how to get into them, and what compensation may be expected from them. It shows the triumph of feminine persistence, and what feminine grit, push and energy can accomplish. To most of its readers it will prove a revelation full of hope and inspiration.

Helpful Heart-to-Heart Talks with American Women

Miss Willard's Last, Greatest ...and Best Book...

OCCUPATIONS FOR WOMEN

Embracing 504 Superb Royal Quarto Pages, elegantly printed on fine toned paper of high finish, and Illustrated with over One Hundred portraits of celebrated women and many fine art engravings, will be sold only to members of the Willard Book Club.

In all the literature of the world, aside from the Bible itself, there is perhaps no other book of more vital and intense interest to all women. It is the visible expression of the earnest longing of a sincerely good and kind-hearted woman to help and comfort all other women, and lighten the burdens that may fall to their lot. Miss Willard's life was one of remarkable purity and earnestness. It was also a life of constant struggle and determined effort. She worked her way onward and upward, meeting and overcoming the difficulties that beset her path; and the helpful advice and experience which she offers in this beautiful volume, are but the reflections of her own useful career and noble character.

"Miss Frances E. Willard, President of the W.C.T.U., and next to Queen Victoria the most widely known woman, has unquestionably given to the world in this volume the most interesting, most practical, most helpful and most comprehensive book for women ever published." T. DE WITT TALMAGE.

THE WOMAN WHO WON INTERNATIONAL FAME AND HONOR.

What this.. Great Work Really is ...

To show the general run of the subject matter we quote a few of the principal chapter headings: "WHAT IS LIFE FOR?" "This One Thing I Do." "COOPERATING FOR A HOME." "What Career?" "OCCUPATIONS THAT KILL." "Telegraph and Telephone Girls." "STENOGRAPHER AND TYPEWRITER." "The Faithful Saleswoman." "WHERE IS MY PLACE?" "How a Girl may Work Her Way through College." "WOMEN AS TEACHERS." "Newspaper Women." "EDITORS, MAGAZINE WRITERS AND PARAGRAPHERS." "In the Dramatic Profession." "JUST WHAT WOMEN ARE DOING." "Trained Nurses." "UP-TO-DATE RICH GIRLS." "Women in Art." "MY BRAVE HELPER." "What Two Girls Did." "BEAUTY AND DRESS." "Our Aims," and scores of others which we have no space even to refer to; treating fully, kindly, affectionately, and with womanly delicacy and gentleness on every subject that a woman wants to know about. If there is anything a woman wants to do, or thinks she can do or ought to do, she will find the way laid out and made broad and clear in this book. If the vicissitudes of life have made it necessary for a woman to work her way, and perhaps earn support for those whom she loves and who are dearer to her than her own life; if she is seeking an occupation; if the work she is doing is not adapted to her ability; if her environments are distasteful and blighting, and are crushing and grinding the sunlight out of her existence; if she is earnestly longing and hoping for a higher and better and nobler life; if there is a wish within her heart that is not gratified, this good and beautiful book will bring the remedy and point the way to the peace she longs for, and SHOW THE PATH that leads out of the darkness of doubt and gloom into the broad sunlight of success and happiness. It will do for you what you cannot do for yourself. If there is anything in the wide world that a woman wants to do, or thinks she ought to do, or feels that she is capable of doing, she will find a helping hand in this beautiful volume.

The Larkin Soaps

The 30 Days Trial Begun

The Whole Family supplied with Laundry and Toilet Soaps for a year at Half Price. Sent Subject to Approval and Payment after Thirty Days' Trial.

IT IS WISE ECONOMY TO USE GOOD SOAP. Our soaps are sold entirely on their merits, with our guarantee of purity. THOUSANDS OF FAMILIES USE THEM, and have for many years, in every locality, many in your vicinity.

The Larkin Plan saves you half the regular retail prices; half the cost. You pay but the usual retail value of the soaps and all middlemen's profits are yours in a premium, itself of equal value. One premium is A White Enameled Steel, Brass-Trimmed, Bow-Foot Bed. Metallic beds add beauty and cheerfulness to the chamber, while they convey a delightful feeling of cleanliness that invites repose. They harmonize perfectly with furniture of any wood or style. Brass top rod at head and foot, and heavy brass, gold-lacquered trimmings. Malleable castings, will never break. Detachable ball-bearing casters. 4½ feet or 4 or 3½ feet wide. 6½ feet long. Head, 4½ feet, foot, 3¼ feet high. Corner posts 1 inch in diamcter. Very strong and will last a lifetime.

If, after thirty days' trial, you find all the Soaps, etc., perfect in quality and the premium entirely satisfactory and as stated, remit $10.00; if not, notify us goods are subject to our order. We make no charge for what you use.

Payment in advance, secures a nice additional present for the lady of the house, and shipment day after order arrives. Money refunded promptly if the BOX or PREMIUM does not prove all expected. Safe delivery guaranteed. The transaction is not complete until you are satisfied.

☞ Many youths and maidens easily earn a Chautauqua Desk or Bed or other premium free by dividing the contents of a Combination Box among a few neighbors who readily pay the listed retail prices. This provides the $10.00 needful to pay our bill, and gives the young folk the premium as "a middleman's profit." The wide success of this plan confirms all our claims.

Booklet Handsomely Illustrating 15 Premiums sent on request.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

A reader sends us this beautiful definition of charity:

Charity is a sacrament, and right giving, in the name of the Giver of all good gifts, and for his sake who gave himself for us, is one of the highest privileges a Christian can enjoy.

It is a definition that deserves to be treasured by all who have experienced the peculiar happiness that springs from true charity.

Reports from the Klondike are both encouraging and depressing. Many letters received tell of hardships endured by men little used to being deprived of the ordinary comforts of life. One of the letters contains some suggestions in which our readers may take an interest. It says:

It occurred to me that I probably could say a word that would cause many intending Klondikers to stop and ponder a little before rushing to that inhospitable, frozen land for gold. I am an old pioneer miner. It is generally supposed that there will be 120,000 persons going there this year. It will require $900 to maintain a miner one year and return, a total of $63,000,000, which Alaska must produce before the miners receive their expenses. $120,000,000 must be produced before they can return with $900 profit. Will it pay to go to Klondike against such odds?

J. L. S.,
Los Angeles, Calif.

G. H. McL., Petersburg, Va. 1. How did the state of Alabama receive its name? 2. What is the meaning of Alabama?

1. The name Alabama is derived from Alabamos, the name of the Indian tribe who inhabited it. 2. It has been in dispute. One story reports that the chief of a migratory tribe said of this land when he entered it, "Alabamos," and that the English equivalent for these words is, "Here we rest." Recently it has been declared by a woman missionary who has lived many years with a remnant of the Alabamos, now living in Polk County, Texas, and has made a study of the language, that Alabamos could never have meant this. The Indians themselves say that their name is derived from the celebration of the mulberry festival, which is peculiar to their tribe. Many mulberries grow in their Texas village, and are gathered with almost reverent devotion. They call themselves "Ala-behe-amo," "the people that gather mulberries."

Mrs. Jane G. S. J. You will find all the information concerning the flowers of Palestine in the Helps to the Study of the Bible.

Inquirer, Rahway, N. J. What are the respective populations of London, Paris, Berlin and New York?

London	4,463,169	Berlin	1,726,958
Paris	2,511,695	New York	3,388,721

G. B. L., Charleston, S. C. Who is author of the lines:

"A noble type of good heroic work
In the latter years of life
That to be glory would all doubt,
Suggests a question."

The poet Coleridge.

J. K. C., Pioneer, Mont. Which of the martyrs was it who let his hand be burned rather than recant?

You probably refer to Cranmer, who was burned in England on March 21, 1556, but you have your facts mixed. Cranmer did recant, but afterwards repented of recanting. He bitterly deplored his recantation and before dying, declared that the signing of the recantation was the sin that made death so terrible. As the flames rose around him, he held his right hand out to meet them, saying that it ought to perish first of all his members as a punishment for signing the recantation. The Roman Catholic Queen, Mary, was on the throne at the time.

F. B. H., White City, Kans. 1. In what month does the wheat harvest occur in Palestine? 2. About what time does the barley harvest occur? 3. Does the Day of Pentecost count from the harvest (Lev. 23: 10, 11), or from the second day of the feast of unleavened bread?

1. On June 4th and 5th the people of Hebron begin to gather their wheat, and on the 11th and 12th the threshing floors on the Mount of Olives are in full operation. The harvest begins at Gaza about May 19, and Jericho about May 12. 2. Barley of the first crop is ready by the time of the Passover, in late March or early April, advancing into May in the mountainous parts of the country. It is earlier than wheat. 3. The fiftieth day, or the Feast of Pentecost, according to the Jewish calendar, falls on the 5th, 6th, or 7th of Sivan, the third month of the year (from the new moon of May to the new moon of June). It is the feast next in order after the Passover. During the second temple the Jews kept Pentecost fifty days after the 16th day of Nisan. Those fifty days ended with the presentation of the first two loaves of the wheat-harvest, which offering was the distinguishing rite of the day of Pentecost.

A. B. C. The Art Bible may be secured, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year for $5. It can be bought on the instalment plan, i. e.: $1 down and $1 a month for four consecutive months. If bought in this way the expressage is not prepaid by us.

I. H. G., Baltimore, Md. 1. What is the symbolic language of the Carnation? 2. What is the language of the Rose?

The above inquirer "desires especially to know what the presentation of a carnation means," and he is in great haste regarding the important matter. Therefore this department answers according to its erudition in such matters, and with sympathetic diligence. 1. Carnation, "woman's love." 2. The rose has various meanings, according as it is white, pink, red, yellow, full or half-blown; and more still, according as it belongs to this or that variety. Thus, the bridal rose means, very appropriately, "happy love;" the cabbage rose, "ambassador of love;" jacqueminot, "I am true;" moss rose, superior merit; guelder rose, age, winter; white rose, silence. We would advise you to consult some good floral dictionary, taking pains that it be a modern edition, otherwise you might subject yourself to misinterpretation, as floral meanings change.

Reader, Roxbury, Mass. I sent you several questions two weeks ago and asked for an answer in the next number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, but it did not appear. Why did you discriminate?

It is always impossible to answer questions in the next number after they are received, because the number that the subscriber calls next is already being printed when his letter is received. A paper with so large a circulation as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has to go to press several days before its date, in order that it may reach its subscribers punctually. The reason that your questions have not been answered is that practically the same questions, sent by other readers, have been answered fully in former numbers, and we cannot afford space to answer questions more than once. If you had sent us your name and address, we would have sent the answers by mail, as you appear to have overlooked those already published.

Subscriber, Calif. I am a woman of family and with little time for literary pursuits; but to me it seems some word ought to be spoken to those soldiers who are going out to war and to death, perhaps, without the Saviour and a knowledge of sins forgiven. Speak some word to them, for it will be sure to reach some of them, as your paper is so widely read.

The Boys in Blue, who stand for our Nation's honor at this critical moment, need the prayers of every praying person in our land. These brave men stand ready to defend our country, even though at the cost of life. What loyalty is this! Let us pray for them. Let us lift up our voices to the loving All-Father in their behalf, that he may keep and bless and save them. O beloved defenders of our national honor and glory, may you all be enlisted, not in this great cause alone, but also in the Supreme cause, the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ! Go not out without the Saviour enthroned in your hearts and his banner unfurled over your heads.

Am I a soldier of the cross,
A follower of the Lamb,
And shall I fear to own his cause,
Or blush to speak his name?

Reader, Westgrove, Pa. 1. In one place in the Bible I find, "Seek and ye shall find," and in another, "Many shall seek to enter in and shall not be able." Is there not a contradiction? 2. In the Epistle to the Hebrews the statement is made that if we sin wilfully there remaineth no more sacrifice. Does that mean that a wilful sin is unpardonable? 3. I have heard it stated that it is impossible to prove that the Bible is true, but that we must accept it on faith, if at all. Is that a fact?

1. There is no contradiction there. If a man persistently disregards plain directions, his seeking will not be successful. Suppose that there is to be some celebration in your town, and every announcement of it contains the statement that admission will be by ticket only, and that free tickets may be obtained at such and such places. If you disregard that stipulation and do not get your ticket, have you a right to complain if, when you seek to enter in, you are not able? 2. No, it means that all has been done for the sinner that can be done, and if, knowing all this, he persists in sin, hoping for some other way of escape, he will be disappointed. His proper course is to avail himself of the sacrifice of Christ, and he will be pardoned. If he neglects that, there remaineth no other. 3. It is not a fact, as we state it. Spiritual perception is necessary. A man coming to the Bible with a fair, unbiased mind will be convinced of its truth on grounds that satisfy his reason. But if he is opposed to it and disposed to cavil and to insist on scientific proof, it might be difficult to furnish proofs that he would accept. As it is a revelation, some degree of docility is expected. If a child at school required you to prove everything you told him, you would make little progress in educating him.

David D., Md. I am anxious to make an open confession of Christ, but the two churches which alone are open to me, expect me to subscribe to doctrines in which I do not believe. What am I to do?

You are unfortunately situated. Are you sure that the churches you name require you to declare your belief in the doctrines you mention? We know members of both these churches who do not believe in those doctrines. If you offer yourself as a candidate for membership, stating frankly your belief, and you are rejected, the responsibility is with them, not with you. Perhaps there is a Congregational church within reach of you which you might connect with by traveling a few miles. Members of that church would certainly not apply the tests you name.

R. D., Richmond, Va. What is the origin of "Curfew?"

Curfew, from the French word courre, meaning cover-fire, was a bell tolled at evening as a sign to the inhabitants to cover fires, extinguish lights and retire. The primary aim was a precaution against fire, and it is said to have been a very effective regulation in this respect, but incidentally to have put an end to many Sunday beer-clubs and political conspiracies. The custom dates back to King Alfred's time. William the Conqueror made it compulsory by edict. In many old English towns and villages the custom of curfew is still rigorously observed.

HELP FOR THE LONDON POOR.

An Institution Providing Recreation and Instruction for the Most Destitute and Hopeless of the People of the English Capital.

BY CHRISTINE TERHUNE HERRICK.

SOME suggestion that may be useful to millionaires in the home land may be contained in a brief description of an institution I recently visited in London. Probably in no city in America is the need ch an institution so bitter as it was don, but the difference is only one ree. I was glad to find how deep rest the Prince of Wales has taken People's Palace from its first in- n, and how closely he has kept in with it since its erection. If, in this y, where class distinctions are so y defined, the highest can so work benefit of the lowest, surely in our here must be some who will give nd thought and money for the ben- their poorer brethren. But now to uce you to the institution itself:

e heart of the East End of Lon- n the Mile End Road, stands the e's Palace. It is not a beautiful g. The broad facade of grey stone little ornament, except the cornice e British arms. In front of it rises quare clock tower, crowned with a belvedere. Like every other edifice ndon, the Palace is blackened with e and soot, but it has not yet ac- the aspect of antiquity which make it interesting to American Nevertheless, there are in all few more wonderful buildings this in its inception, continuation resent status.

I may seem daring to say that never Yet here the Palace stands, an accomplished fact, and as the visitor roams through it and sees the provision made for the help, the instruction, the enjoyment of the poor, he feels as if he stood in a section of the kingdom of heaven begun on earth.

As a matter of course, the Palace differs in many respects from the one projected by the hero and heroine of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," as every perfected result must differ from its plan on paper. Yet the most important points are unchanged. Here, as in the book, are placed within the reach of the poor—the struggling, striving laborers for daily bread—"all things which make the life of the rich happy—music, singing, painting, reading, games of skill, companionship, cheerfulness, light, warmth, comfort." And added to this are advantages for study, which in the novel were lightly touched upon, but which here assume greater importance than anything else. And, to quote the book again, "the best part of all has to be told. Everything in the Palace is at the rate of a workingman's wage—no more."

Before proceeding to a detailed description of this crystalized vision, it may not be amiss to say something of the practical methods by which it came into being, since in real life there was no Miss Messenger to immortalize herself by such a gift. The enterprize was, indeed, formed and carried out by two worthy bodies, the trustees of the Beaumont Philosophical Institution, and the Drapers' Company, who combined to build a technical school ere has such an enterprise been the re t of a scheme suggested by a mere i. Fiction has done much to modify es, but its most usual course has e rather to pull down existing evils to initiate new benefits. Here, ever, in the heart of this "immense, ected, great city of East London," a building that is, in truth, a ument to a novel. It is close on y years now since Walter Besant James Rice wrote "All Sorts and tions of Men," and laid its scene in ney, "that region of London which ss known to Englishmen than if it situated in the wildest part of rado, or among the pine forests of ish Columbia."

is hardly possible that when the ists devised and described their me of a "Palace of Delight" for the le in the East of London, they could had any real hope that their dream ld ever be realized. In the children's phse, it seemed too good to be true. to instruct the working people of East London. At the same time the public, stirred by Besant and Rice's novel, raised by general subscription the funds needed to erect a library and hall. The last was opened by the Queen, May 14, 1887, the same day upon which she laid the foundation stone of the Technical School, and a few weeks later the foundation stone of the library was laid by Leopold II., King of the Belgians. The Palace was opened to the public in October, 1888.

Since then there have been many additions made and many generous gifts received from public-spirited men. Lord Rosebery was the donor of a swimming bath, Lord Iveagh of a winter garden. A gymnasium was erected, an engineering laboratory and work shop built and equipped, and not a year passes that there is not some fresh advantage acquired for the use of the public.

The largest and most imposing apartment in the palace is the Queen's hall. Here statues stand on either side, a great organ is at one end, at the other is a seated statue of the Queen. In this hall are given concerts and entertainments, vocal and instrumental, often the best talent in London, and to these admission is from threepence to sixpence. There are even occasions upon which the fee is reduced to a penny. At one side of the hall and opening into it, is the great winter garden, covered with glass, filled with palms and other tropical plants and flowers, and furnished with seats. To this warm, cheery spot, doubly delightful by contrast with the bleak grey dreariness of the weather outside, there is no charge for admission, and the only condition connected with it is good conduct. The weary, the worn, and the out-of-work can come in without money and without price and find rest in as charming a retreat as could be provided for the wealthiest dwellers in London's West End.

H. R. H., THE PRINCE OF WALES.

From the hall and winter garden it seems natural to go to the reading rooms. There are several of these, some for adults, others for young readers. They are well-stocked, and in addition to the goodly array of bound volumes on the shelves, there are magazines and weekly and daily papers in abundance. These too are free.

Upstairs is the gymnasium, a large, airy room, fitted up with all the appliances of trapezes, parallel bars, ropes, horses, etc., and furnished with dumb-bells, Indian clubs, single sticks and the like. Here four evenings in the week men come for practice and instruction. Two nights a week the same privileges are accorded to women. In the daytime it is open to the boys who are pupils in the technical school.

Going from class-room to class-room, one is lost in admiration of the thought that planned and the skill that directs the course of instruction. For here, there is everything taught that the working man or woman could by any chance need to learn. To the men are open day and evening classes in theoretical and practical mechanics, geometry, machine and building construction, architectural drawing, instrument making, telegraphy, wood-carving, carpentering in all its branches, plumbing, metal-work. The women may study millinery, dressmaking, pattern-making, tailoring, ambulance practice, book-binding, and in most of the men's branches there are also classes for women. Music, vocal and instrumental, is taught, harmony, choral practice, the piano, the violin, the mandolin, may all be learned here: there are classes in book-keeping and shorthand, book-binding, drawing, painting, modelling, elocution, and civil service.

The greatest attention of all is paid to the children. "The object of the day-school is to prepare boys between twelve and sixteen years of age by means of courses of instruction in science, art, languages and the use of tools to enter a trade or profession demanding scientific or artistic training and manual dexterity." So says the calendar of classes, and adds, "With this view, the theoretical instruction given is combined with systematic practice in the laboratories, work shops and studios. No high-priced private school in London or out of it, is better equipped with everything that can direct and aid the pupils.

The advantage of these younger ones is the prime object, but no less attention is bestowed upon the scholars over nineteen, both male and female, for whom the day and evening classes are planned. There are social rooms and refreshment rooms for all, and accommodations for the clubs and societies that have sprung up among the students. They have a recreation ground outside of London, provided by the generosity of the Drapers' Company, and the Students' Union has as one of its objects the practice of athletic sports and exercises. With these and the gymnasium work, there should be hope of a coming generation of broader-shouldered, deeper-chested workingmen than one meets now in the London streets.

For all these advantages, the fees are almost nominal. At least, so they appear to American eyes, although to the pinched, poorly paid East Ender it may be hard to raise even the small sum charged. Workshop tools and materials, as well as books and stationery, are provided free.

Again we say, "It seems too good to be true," as after our wanderings up-stairs and down, in and out of laboratories, workshops, social rooms, art rooms, after having inspected the admirable casts, carvings, sketches and bindings done by the students, we pause once more in the tropical warmth of the Winter Garden, before braving the frosty air without. Can this be really the nineteenth century? or have we stepped for a moment into the Millennium? We remember that "God's possible is taught by his world's loving," and we find fresh courage for the world at the sight of the wonderful object-lesson supplied in this Palace, raised by men's love and ambition for their fellow-men.

CORONATION.

The Seer's Vision of the Coronation of the Lamb. Rev. 5:6-14.

Among all the weird symbols which fill this mysterious book, there is none so significant as this of the Lamb being crowned. To the Jewish mind the symbolism would be clearer than it is to us. It speaks of sacrifice. The Lamb was as though it had been slain. It had passed through sufferings to the furthest limit, even to death. Not for itself, but for the redemption of others. The redemption had been completed and now the time of glory and fruition had come. They who witnessed the humiliation and sacrifice, join in acclaiming the Lamb. It is a significant scene. On earth we applaud the conqueror, the man who has won, the man who has triumphed, but in heaven they are applauding One who has suffered. They have a different idea from ours of renunciation, but it is one that even we can understand. There is a glory in it. Who has not seen the white-haired mother who has toiled and watched and economized all her life, as her sons grown to stalwart men surround her death-bed and tell her how much they owe her. We see it in the missionary who in his old age is surrounded with converts who owe to him their rescue from heathenism and as he looks at them he is repaid for the sacrifice he made of home and comfort. Or it may be, it is the son or daughter, who might have married, or might have gone to the great city to win fame and fortune, but who stayed in the old home to be a comfort to aged parents. When those parents speak the dying blessing the time of reward comes, the reward of self-sacrifice. To every sacrifice in a worthy cause there comes a coronation.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

THE SHEIK'S DAUGHTER.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Exodus 3: 1, ...

Now Moses kept the flock of Jethro his father-in-law, the priest of Midian.

IN the southeastern part of Arabia a man is sitting by a well. It is an arid country, and water is scarce, so that a well is of great value, and flocks and herds are driven vast distances to have their thirst slaked. Jethro, a Midianite sheik and priest, was so fortunate as to have seven daughters: and they are practical girls, and yonder they come driving the sheep and cattle and camels of their father to the watering. They lower the buckets and then pull them up, the water plashing on the stones and chilling their feet, and the troughs are filled. Who is that man out there sitting unconcerned and looking on? Why does he not come and help the women in this hard work of drawing water? But no sooner have the dry lips and panting nostrils of the flocks begun to cool a little in the brimming trough of the well, than some rough Bedouin shepherds break in upon the scene, and with clubs and shouts drive back the animals that were drinking, and affright these girls until they fly in retreat, and the flocks of these ill-mannered shepherds are driven to the troughs, taking the places of the other flocks. Now that man sitting by the well begins to color up, and his eye flashes with indignation, and all the gallantry of his nature is aroused. It is Moses, who naturally had a quick temper anyhow, as he demonstrated on one occasion when he saw an Egyptian oppressing an Israelite and gave the Egyptian a sudden clip and buried him in the sand, and as he showed afterward when he broke all the Ten Commandments at once by shattering the two granite slabs on which the law was written. But the injustice of this treatment of the seven girls sets him on fire with wrath, and he takes this shepherd by the throat, and pushes back another shepherd till he falls over the trough, and aims a stunning blow between the eyes of another, as he cries, "Begone, you villains!" and he hoots and roars at the sheep and cattle and camels of these invaders and drives them back; and having cleared the place of the desperadoes, he told the seven girls of this Midianite sheik to gather their flocks together and bring them again to the watering.

O, you ought to see a fight between the shepherds at a well in the Orient as I saw it in December, 1890. There were here a group of rough men who had driven the cattle many miles, and here another group who had driven their cattle as many miles. Who should have precedence? Such clashing of buckets! Such hooking of horns! Such kicking of hoofs! Such vehemence in a language I fortunately could not understand! Now the sheep with a peculiar mark across their woolly backs were at the trough, and now the sheep of another mark. It was one of the most exciting scenes I ever witnessed. An old book describes one of these contentions at an eastern well when it says: "One day the poor men, the widows and the orphans met together and were driving their camels and their flocks to drink, and were all standing by the water-side. Daji came up and stopped them all, and took possession of the water for his master's cattle. Just then an old woman belonging to the tribe of Abs came up and accosted him in a suppliant manner saying, 'Be so good, Master Daji, as to let my cattle drink. They are all the property I possess and I live by their milk. Pity my flock. Have compassion on me. Grant my request and let them drink.' Then came another old woman and addressed him: 'O, Master Daji, I am a poor weak old woman as you see. Time has dealt hardly with me. It has armed its arrows at me, and its daily and nightly calamities have destroyed all my men. I have lost my children and my husband, and since then I have been in great distress. These sheep are all that I possess. Let them drink, for I live on the milk that they produce. Pity my forlorn state. I have no one to tend them. Therefore grant my supplication and of thy kindness let them drink.' But in this case the brutal slave, so far from granting this humble request, smote the woman to the ground."

A like scrimmage has taken place at the well in the triangle of Arabia between the Bedouin shepherds and Moses championing the cause of the seven daughters who had driven their father's flocks to the watering. One of these girls, Zipporah, her name meaning "little bird," was fascinated by this heroic behavior of Moses; for however timid woman herself may be, she always admires courage in a man. Zipporah became the bride of Moses, one of the mightiest men of all the centuries. Zipporah little thought that that morning as she helped drive her father's flocks to the well, she was splendidly deciding her own destiny. Had she stayed in the tent or house while the other six daughters of the sheik tended to their herds, her life would probably have been a tame and uneventful life in the solitudes. But her industry, her fidelity to her father's interest, her spirit of helpfulness brought her into league with one of the grandest characters of all history. They met at that famous well, and while she admired the courage of Moses, he admired the filial behavior of Zipporah.

The fact that it took the seven daughters to drive the flocks to the well implies that they were immense flocks, and that her father was a man of wealth. What was the use of Zipporah's bemeaning herself with work when she might have reclined on the hillside near her father's tent, and plucked buttercups, and dreamed out romances, and sighed idly to the winds, and wept over imaginary songs to the brooks. No, she knew that work was honorable, and that every girl ought to have something to do, and so she starts with the bleating and lowing and bellowing and neighing droves to the well for the watering.

Around every home there are flocks and droves of cares and anxieties, and every daughter of the family, though there be seven, ought to be doing her part to take care of the flocks. In many households, not only is Zipporah, but all her sisters, without practical and useful employments. Many of them are waiting for fortunate and prosperous matrimonial alliance, but some lounger like themselves will come along, and after counting the large number of father Jethro's sheep and camels will make proposal that will be accepted; and neither of them having done anything more practical than to chew chocolate caramels, the two nothings will start on the road of life together, every step more and more a failure. That daughter of the Midianitish sheik will never find her Moses. Girls of America! imitate Zipporah. Do something practical. Do something helpful. Do something well. Many have fathers with great flocks of absorbing duties, and such a father needs help in home, or office, or field. Go out and help him with the flocks. The reason that so many men now condemn themselves to unaffianced and solitary life is because they cannot support the modern young woman, who rises at half-past ten in the morning and retires after midnight, one of the trashiest of novels in her hands most of the time between the late rising and the late retiring—a thousand of them not worth one Zipporah.

There is a question that every father and mother ought to ask the daughter at breakfast or tea table, and that all the daughters of the wealthy sheik ought to ask each other: "What would you do if the family fortune should fail, if sickness should prostrate the breadwinner, if the flocks of Jethro should be destroyed by a sudden excursion of wolves and bears and hyenas from the mountain? What would you do for a living? Could you support yourself? Can you take care of an invalid mother or brother or sister as well as yourself?" Yea, bring it down to what any day might come to a prosperous family. "Can you cook a dinner if the servants should make a strike for higher wages and leave that morning?" Every minute of every hour of every day of every year there are families flung from prosperity into hardship, and alas! if in such exigency the seven daughters of Jethro can do nothing but sit around and cry and wait for some one to come and hunt them up a situation for which they have no qualification.

Get at something useful; get at it right away! Do not say: "If I were thrown upon my own resources I would become a music teacher." There are now more music teachers than could be supported if they were all Mozarts and Wagners and Handels. Do not say: "I will go to embroidering slippers." There are more slippers now than there are feet. Our hearts are every day wrung by the story of elegant women who were once affluent, but through catastrophe have fallen helpless, with no ability to take care of themselves.

There needs to be peaceful, yet radical revolution among most of the prosperous homes of America, by which the elegant do-nothings may be transformed into practical do-somethings. Let useless women go to work and gather the flocks. Come, Zipporah, let me introduce you to Moses! But you do not mean that this man affianced to this country girl was the great Moses of history, do you? You do not mean that he was the man who afterward wrought such wonders? Surely, you do not mean the man whose staff dropped, wriggled into a serpent, and, then, clutched, stiffened again into a staff? You do not mean the challenger of Egyptian thrones and palaces? You do not mean him who struck the rock so hard it wept in a stream for thirsty hosts? Surely, you do not mean the man who stood alone with God on the quaking Sinaitic ranges; not him to whom the Red Sea was surrendered? Yes, the same Moses defending the seven daughters of the Midianitish sheik; who afterward rescued a nation.

Why, do you not know that this is the way men and women get prepared for special work? The wilderness of Arabia was the law school, the theological seminary, the university of rock and sand, from which he graduated for a mission that will balk seas, and drown armies, and lift the lantern of illumined cloud by night, and start the workmen with bleeding backs among Egyptian brick-kilns toward the pasture lands that flow with milk and the trees of Canaan dripping with honey. Gracious God, teach all the people this lesson. You must go into humiliation and retirement and hidden closets of prayer if you are to be fitted for special usefulness. How did John the Baptist get prepared to become a forerunner of Christ? Show me his wardrobe. It will be hung with silken socks and embroidered robes and attire of Syrian purple. Show me his dining table. On it the tankards ablush with the richest wines of the vineyards of Engedi, and rarest birds that were ever caught in net, and sweetest venison that ever dropped antlers before the hunter. No, we are distinctly told the same John had his raiment of camels' hair."—not the fine hair of the camel which we call camlet, but the long, coarse hair such as beggars in the East wear.—and his only meat was of insects, the green locust, about two inches long, roasted, a disgusting food. These insects were caught and the wings and legs torn off, and they were stuck on wooden spits and turned before the fire. The Bedouins pack them in salt and carry them in sacks. What a menu for John the Baptist! Through what deprivation he came to what exaltation!

And you will have to go down before you go up. From the pit into which his brothers threw him and the prison in which his enemies incarcerated him, Joseph rose to be Egyptian prime minister. Elijah, who was to be the greatest of all the ancient prophets, Elijah, who made King Ahab's knees knock together with the prophecy that the dogs would be his only undertakers; Elijah, whose one prayer brought more than three years of drought, and whose other prayer brought drenching showers; the man who wrapped up his cape of sheepskin into a roll and with it cut a path through raging Jordan for just two to pass over; the man who with wh fire rode over death and escaped in skies without mortuary disintegr the man who, thousands of years was called out of the eternities to beside Jesus Christ on Mount Tabor it was ablaze with the splendors of figuration—this man could look ba the time when voracious and filthy were his only caterers.

You see John Knox preaching the nation sermon of James VI., and ar ing Queen Mary and Lord Darnley public discourse at Edinburgh, an ing the French ambassador to go and call his king a murderer; John making all Christendom feel his power, and at his burial the Earl of M saying, "Here lieth a man who in h never feared the face of man." Whe John Knox get much of his schoolin such resounding and everlasting ac ment? He got it while in chains p at the boat's oar in French cap Michael Faraday, one of the grea the scientific world, did not begin turing in the university. I should not der if he had said: "Take a younge for this work. I not retire too early. Like Moses, you may have your chief work to do after eighty. It may not be in the high places of the field; it may not be where a strong arm and an athletic foot and a clear vision are required, but there is something for you yet to do. Perhaps it may be to round off the work you have already done; to demonstrate the patience you have been recommending all your lifetime: perhaps to stand a lighthouse at the mouth of the bay to light others into harbor; perhaps to show how glorious a sunset may come after a stormy day.

There lies dying at Hawarden, England, one of the most wonderful men that ever lived since the ages of time began their roll. He is the chief citizen of the whole world. Three times has he practically been king of Great Britain. Again and again coming from the House of Commons, which he had thrilled and overawed by his eloquence, on Saturday, on Sunday morning reading prayers for the people in his illumined countenance and morning eyes and resounding voice, saying: "I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth, and in Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord."

The world has no other such man as Gladstone; the church has no other such champion to lean over. I shall never cease to thank God that on Mr. Gladstone's invitation I visited him at Hawarden, and heard from his own lips his belief in the authenticity of the Holy Scriptures, the Divinity of Jesus Christ, and the splendors of the world to come. At the table and in the walk through the grounds I was impressed as I was never before, and probably will never be again, with the majesty of a nature all consecrated to God and the world's betterment. In the presence of such a man, what have those to say who profess to think that our religion is a pusillanimous and weak, and cowardly, an unreasonable affair? Mighty William E. Gladstone! Matchless William E. Gladstone!

Still further, watch this spectacle of genuine courage. No wonder when Moses scattered the rude shepherds, he won Zipporah's heart. What mattered it to Moses whether the cattle of the seven daughters of Jethro were driven from the troughs by the rude herdsmen? Sense of justice fired his courage; and the world wants more of the spirit that will dare anything to see others righted. At the time at wells of comfort, at wells of duty, at wells of religion, and at wells of literature there are outrages practised, the wrong herds getting the first water. Those who have the previous right come in last, if they come in at all. Thank God, we have here and there a strong man to set things right! I am so glad that when God has an especial work to do, he has some one ready to accomplish it. Is there a Bible to translate, there is a Wickliff to translate it; if there is a literature to be energized, there is a Shakespeare to energize it; if there is an error to smite, there is Luther to smite it; if there is to be a nation freed, there is a Moses to free it. Courage is needed in religion, in literature, in statesmanship, in all spheres; whether to defend Jethro's seven daughters and their flocks and put to flight the violent invaders. And those who do the brave work will win somewhere high reward. The loudest cheer of heaven is to be given "to him that overcometh."

Still further, see in this call of Moses that if God has any especial work for you to do he will find you. There were Egypt and Arabia and Palestine with their crowded population, but the man the Lord wanted was at the southern point of the triangle of Arabia, and he picks him right out, the shepherd who kept the flock of Jethro, his father-in-law, the priest and sheik. So God will not find it hard to take you out from the sixteen hundred million of the human race if he wants you for anything especial. There was only just one man qualified. Other men had courage like Moses; other men had some of the talents of Moses; other men had romance in their history, as had Moses; other men were impetuous, like Moses: but no other man had these different qualities in the exact proportion as had Moses; and God, who makes no mistake, found the right man for the right place. Do not fear you will be overlooked, or that when you are wanted God cannot find you.

Still further, notice that the call of Moses was written in letters of fire. On the Sinaitic peninsula there is a low thorn bush called the acacia, dry and brittle, and it easily goes down at the touch of the flame. It crackles and turns to ashes very quickly. Moses, seeing one of these bushes on fire, goes to look at it. At first, no doubt, it seemed to be a botanical curiosity, burning, yet crumpling no leaf, parting no stem, scattering no ashes. It was a supernatural fire that did no damage to the vegetation. That burning bush was the call. Your call will probably come in letters of fire. Ministers get their call to preach in letters on paper, or parchment, or typewritten, but it does not amount to much until they get their next call in letters of fire. You will not amount to much in usefulness until somewhere near you find a burning bush. It may be found burning in the hectic flush of your child's cheek; it may be found burning in business misfortune; it may be found burning in the fire of the world's scorn or hate or misrepresentation. But hearken to the crackle of the burning bush!

IN DOYERS STREET.

A great snowstorm came on a prairie in Minnesota, and a farmer in a sleigh was lost, but after a while struck the track of another sleigh, and felt cheered to go on, since he had found the track of another traveler. He heard sleigh-bells preceding him, and hastened on and caught up with his predecessor, who said, "Where are you going?" "I am following you," was the answer that came back. The fact is that they were both lost, and had gone round and round in a circle. Then they talked the matter over, and, looking up, saw the north star; and toward the north was their home, and they started straight for it. Oh, instead of imitating men like ourselves and circling round and round, let us look up and take some starry guide like Moses, and follow on until we join him amid the "delectable mountains." You say you cannot reach his character. Oh, no. Neither can you reach the north star, but you can be guided by its heavenly pointing.

REDEEMING THE SLUMS

The Work of the New York Rescue Band —Missionaries in Chinatown—Rescue Work In Gilded Palaces of Sin.

READERS of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are not ignorant of the good work which is being done by the New York Rescue Band. The Band is composed of a company of Christian men and women, who are devoting their energies to rescue work among the fallen. Its members wear a badge, which is officially recognized by the police as that of persons laudably engaged in reformatory labors. The work is endorsed by the Federation of Churches and Christian Workers in New York City, and by letters of warm commendation from prominent ministers. Its field of operation is the city; its special centres of activity are the Mission in Chinatown, which comprises several departments of work, as the school for children, industrial and social club for respectable girls, and the Morning Star Mission, all at 15-17 Doyers Street; and the Home for Erring Girls, 127 West Fortieth Street.

The officers of the Band are Hon. W. H. Rowe, Jr., President; O. B. Booth, Vice-President and Superintendent of Rescue Work; S. E. Furry, Secretary and Superintendent Chinatown Mission; H. A. Gould, Treasurer. Miss M. L. Taylor, matron of the Home, and Miss A. N. Smith, missionary, conducting the work for erring girls, have the assistance of an advisory committee, composed of prominent ladies.

The Chinatown Mission reaches what is regarded as the most hopelessly depraved locality in New York. Chinatown, territorially insignificant, is crowded with every possible form of sin, from pagan worship in the Joss House, dissipations of the Chinese theatre, opera and restaurants, to the dreadful corruption of opium joints, gambling dens and houses of unnameable sins. At the Doyers Street Mission, nightly, song and prayer services are held from ten o'clock till past midnight, when crowds are drawn in from the congested thoroughfares. A most commendable charity is the Hope Mission School, Doyers street, where children of all nationalities, and conditions are brought from the evil influences of the street to that of tender, gentle women, who teach them habits of industry and tidiness.

The Star of Hope Club is a development of the school. Its members are daughters of the worthy people of Chinatown, or girls in themselves worthy. It saves from the life of the street young women who, living in the cramped quarters of swarming tenements, would naturally gravitate downward, but for the social and industrial opportunities which the club opens up to them. It gives them a pleasant place, where they sing, and talk, sew and read together, under direction of Christian women who do the work for love's sake.

A girl brought in from Chinatown lay dying in a hospital. "Maggie," asked the Band-worker, "Is there no one I can send for?" "My people think me dead," she whispered. Then she told the missionary her story, and the end of it was that this girl was tended in her last illness by the hands of her kindred and was buried from the home of her people, wealthy residents of New York City. One night one of the workers brought in from the street a seventeen-year-old girl. Soon after entering the Home she wrote her father that she was ready to go back to her home and her duty. She is now in a missionary institute, where she is preparing for active service in behalf of unfortunate women. These are two instances of rescued women who had been born and reared in wealth and refinement. To meet their cases, special methods of treatment are required. The most difficult branch of rescue work is not that of slums, but that of the "gilded palaces of sin," where the inmates are surrounded by luxury. It is absolutely necessary to entrust this work to missionaries of experience, tact, education and Christian ability. The Home at 256 W. Thirty-ninth Street, New York, is especially adapted to the need of this class of women. It is a modest frame building in a decent part of the town, presided over by a motherly matron and trained assistants. Since May, 1897, forty-nine girls have been received, and but four have returned to evil ways. The others have obtained positions, enabling them to support themselves, have been restored to their families, or are at the Home, working to save other girls. Workers have found much more difficulty in obtaining employment for these girls than in inducing them to seek for, and engage in, honest work.

A department of self-evident importance only awaits sufficient funds for its creation. It is the establishment of an industrial work-shop in connection with the Home, where necessary work for self-support could be given rescued women until outside employment is practicable. Mr. Gould states that he knows personally over two hundred erring girls, over half of whom would abandon a wrong life now, if sure of living wages and a little Christian fellowship.

There is need in the lower part of the city for a temporary shelter, without code of conditions, where any woman will be received at any hour of the night that a worker may bring her in. Many good people will be ready to assume the burden of its establishment and its support as soon as the need and value shall be known.

SPAIN'S ASIATIC FLEET DESTROYED.

COMMODORE DEWEY WINS A SPLENDID NAVAL VICTORY AT MANILA.

The Story of the First Great Battle of the War, Fought on Sunday, May 1—Admiral Montojo's Flagship Sunk and all His Fleet Either Burned or Disabled—The Invasion of Cuba by Our Land Forces—The Crisis of the War Believed to be Near at Hand.

MAY 1, 1898, will ever be held in remembrance as one of the most eventful days in American history. On that day was fought the first great naval battle of the war between Spain and the United States for Free Cuba—a battle which resulted in the total defeat of Spain's Asiatic fleet, which was commanded by Admiral Montojo, the most daring officer in the Spanish navy.

After tossing about for two days in heavy gales, the American fleet, under Commodore Dewey, made the harbor of Manila, the capital of the Philippines, on Saturday night, April 30. At midnight, our ships passed the entrance into the harbor, despite the fact that it was a network of mines and torpedoes. Within the bay and under the sheltering guns of the forts, lay the Spanish squadron. The night was pitch dark. Admiral Montojo was completely taken by surprise at the daring of the Americans, as he had expected an engagement in the open sea. About daybreak the [illegible] began, both fleets firing as they passed each other. The vessels engaged were the following:

AMERICAN SQUADRON.

Olympia (flagship)	Protected cruiser	5,870 tons
Baltimore	Protected cruiser	4,600 "
Boston	Partly protected cruiser	3,000 "
Raleigh	Protected cruiser	3,000 "
Concord	Gunboat	1,710 "
Petrel	Gunboat	892 "
McCulloch	Revenue cutter	1,000 "

SPANISH SQUADRON.

Reina Maria Christina	Cruiser	3,090 tons
Castilla	Cruiser	3,345 "
Velasco	Cruiser	1,152 "
Don Antonio de Ulloa	Cruiser	1,130 "
Don Juan de Austria	Cruiser	1,152 "
Isla de Cuba	Pro. cruiser	1,030 "
Isla de Luzon	Pro. cruiser	1,030 "
Quiros	Gunboat	516 "
Villalobos	Gunboat	516 "

Eight other gunboats somewhat similar to the Quiros, and ten others of smaller size.

The American ships opened fire on the formidable fortress of Cavite and the Manila arsenal, under whose guns the Spanish vessels were lying. The Olympia and Raleigh led the attack. Soon the harbor resounded with the roar of cannon, the crashing of steel and timbers, and the shrieks and groans of the wounded. Dense clouds of smoke hung low and obscured the ships at times, but the splendid marksmanship of the Americans soon began to tell upon the enemy. The Spaniards fought desperately. Early in the engagement the Maria Christina caught fire from an American shell and soon was a mass of flame. The Spanish Admiral transferred his flag to the Isla de Cuba, and shortly afterward the Maria Christina was rent asunder by an explosion and utterly destroyed. The armored cruiser Castilla was shelled until she sank, and the Juan de Austria was blown up by a well directed shot from one of the American guns. The cruiser Don Antonio de Ulloa and the Mindanao were also greatly damaged and unable to continue the fight. Over 400 Spaniards were killed, among the number being Captain Cadarso, Commander of the Maria Christina. At one time the harbor was filled with Spanish wounded, struggling for life among the waves.

Under a tremendous cannonade from the American squadron, the remaining Spanish ships retired to Baccor Creek, where several of them were run ashore and sunk by the Admiral's orders, to prevent their capture. Throughout the whole engagement, the American s[hips] kept under way, and their manœuvr[es] disconcerted the Spanish gunners, ren[dering] their fire ineffective. About 9 [o'clock] the American squadron, having routed [the] Spaniards, drew off to the west side [of] the bay, where hasty repairs were m[ade] to our vessels that had sustained inj[ury]. In no case, however, was any Amer[ican] vessel seriously damaged, although [the] loss in killed and wounded was consi[der]able. The injured were put safely ash[ore]. It is said that the Americans were [not]

Commodore Dewe[y] turned later to the o[ther] side of the bay and t[ook] up a position in fro[nt] of the forts with a vie[w] of beginning a bomb[ard]ment. The city was a[t the] mercy of the Amer[ican] squadron. Thous[ands] of the inhabitants [left] the town, fearing l[ong] bardment. Great cr[owds] gathered on the wha[rves] and order was only [pre]served by mound guards, who patro[lled] the streets. The o[ther] forts which now en[gaged] the attention of [the] ships were those at [Ca]vite and Manila pro[per]. The former, ten m[iles] to the southwest of [Ma]nila, consisted of su[per]batteries which h[ad] been supplemented[by] a number of guns t[aken] from the armamen[t of] the Spanish ships. [Ma]nila is surrounded b[y a] cordon of land batte[ries], but none so formid[able] as those at Cavite. [The] fire from the Ameri[can] ships against these [bat]teries was continue[d] cessantly until 11.30 [A.M.]

Sunday, when the action was suspended, and the American warships, having annihilated the enemy's fleet, steamed off. The cable dispatches received at Madrid declared that this second battle by the Americans was begun with such a terrific cannonade that further resistance was useless. The spectacle was grand and terrible. The attack was well carried out; the American manœuvres were masterful and their destruction surprising, firing as they did their numerous shells. When it was all over they lay off Cavite, wait the fitting time to begin the bombardment of Manila. The entire engagement is said to have lasted less than four hours.

The following morning our fleet returned to the blockade of Manila was begun. The bombardment of the forts was resumed vigorously, the intention being to completely reduce them.

MAJ.-GEN. BROOKE, CHICKAMAUGA.

Spain Admits Defeat.

As the cable from Manila was controlled by Spain, no word of the battle could be received from Commodore Dewey until the news had reached Hong-Kong, or Manila capitulated, when the American would get possession of the cables. The earlier dispatches from Madrid were, therefore, from Spanish sources. The first cables to Madrid intimated that the Americans had been repulsed, and gave to the engagement the color of a Spanish victory.—intelligence which greatly elated the Spanish Cabinet and people. Following this week's succession of cables from the Spanish Admiral and the Governor-General of Manila dispatches which gave a very different complexion to the battle. Admiral Montojo cabled to Madrid the following dispatch:

"In the middle of the night the American squadron forced the entrance and before daybreak appeared before Cavite. The night was completely dark. At 7:30 the bow of the Reina Maria Christina and the Castilla were entirely enveloped in flames. The other ships having been damaged, retired into Bacoor Bay. Some had to be sunk to prevent their falling into the hands of the enemy. The losses are numerous."

Enthusiasm Over the News.

Admiral Montojo and his staff narrowly escaped capture. The commander of the Duke de Austria was killed. In his official report, telegraphed at 8 p.m., the Governor-General of the Philippines admitted the disastrous defeat—the destruction of the three principal Spanish ships and considerable loss of life—adding, however, "The spirit of the army, navy and volunteers, is excellent." The Madrid Cabinet reluctantly admitted the total rout of their fleet. Our own losses in killed and wounded are said to be light, and all our ships are safe.

The news of the great victory at Manila was received with deep satisfaction by the administration at Washington and throughout the country—a satisfaction, however, which was tinged with sadness for the loss of the brave Americans who perished in the battle. For a time the leading cities—New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Chicago—went almost wild with enthusiasm.

The effect upon Europe of the American victory is said to have been electric. Madrid was driven to the verge of distraction, and revolution was feared. In a majority of the other capitals, the news was greeted with satisfaction. London being especially demonstrative in its approval of the bravery and skill of our blue-jackets. Should the threatened revolution in Spain actually occur, that nation may have to face a condition at home much more serious than war with a foreign power.

The Invasion of Cuba.

Plans are now said to be fully matured for our invasion of Cuba, and it may be an event accomplished before this paper reaches the hands of its readers. With a view to determining upon a suitable landing-place for the troops, Rear Admiral Sampson's squadron has made a special examination of several points along the northern coast of Cuba. Three of his vessels, the flag-ship New York, the monitor Puritan, and the cruiser Cincinnati, while reconnoitring off Matanzas, drew the fire of the masked batteries on Point Rubal Caya, and Point Maya, on either side of the entrance to the bay, and returned it vigorously, silencing the batteries after an eighteen minutes' bombardment.

VISITORS AT THE CAMP.

Remarkably skilful marksmanship was displayed by the American gunners, whose shells tore up the earthworks and masonry, and effectually dismantled the Spanish defences.

The Spanish gunnery was wretched, not a shot striking any of the attacking vessels, although all were well within range. Several days later the batteries at Cardenas were shelled and silenced in the same prompt and vigorous fashion, the fire of the batteries having first been drawn by one of our torpedo boats. These incidents encourage the hope that the reduction of the formidable-looking Havana forts may not be as difficult an undertaking as Captain-General Blanco's boasts would imply.

It is claimed that Spain has nearly 140,000 troops in Cuba, exclusive of the 20,000 Havana volunteers, but those who are in a position to speak authoritatively, assert that fully 50,000 Spanish soldiers are in hospital, or on the sick list in different parts of the island.

As the first part of our expeditionary army of invasion, the United States sends 15,000 regulars under Brigadier-General Shafter, including seventeen regiments of infantry some light artillery and two regiments of cavalry. General Shafter will cooperate with Gomez and Garcia of the insurgent army, who have an effective force, estimated at 30,000 men. A regiment of yellow fever immunes will probably also be added to our forces. Immediately after the first expeditionary force has landed, others will follow. The first expedition will probably include two cowboy regiments from the West, with Hon. Theodore Roosevelt as lieutenant-colonel, four regiments of infantry lately stationed at New Orleans, an infantry brigade under Col. Van Horne from Chickamauga, and the troops under Gen. Wade at Tampa. A large fleet of steamers has been chartered as troop-ships. Commissariat and medical departments are fully organized. Gen. Shafter's plan is understood to be to reduce and garrison the ports on the northern coast of Cuba as rapidly as possible, and to arrange for the transportation and distribution of food for the relief of the starving reconcentrados. The steamship State of Texas, with its load of 1,100 tons of relief supplies, will be the means of relieving much of the prevalent distress, which has been especially keen since the blockade.

CAMP THOMAS AT CHICKAMAUGA PARK, GEORGIA.

Spain's Cape Verde Squadron.

Rear-Admiral Sampson's fleet, which has been conducting the blockade, has made preparations for meeting the Cape Verde formidable Spanish squadron when the latter arrives in Cuban waters. Our fleet will be divided into two wings, the first under Commodore Remey, and the second commanded by Commodore Watson, the Rear-Admiral himself controlling the movements of the squadron as a whole. It is intended to maintain the blockade, but to employ for that purpose such vessels as can be spared from the fleet, while the principal warships will be assigned to meet the fleet of Spain, which is now steaming toward these shores, and which includes the first-class cruisers Viscaya, Almirante Oquendo, Infanta Maria Theresa and Cristobal Colon, and the three torpedo-boat destroyers, Pluton, Furor and Terror. The meeting between the hostile squadrons may take place before the Spanish vessels can reach Porto Rico.

Cuba's Soldier President.

AMONG the brave patriots who have guided the destinies of Cuba, few are more worthy of honorable recognition than Bartolome Masso, who several months ago was elected President of the island Republic. He is a native of Manzanillo, and his parents were wealthy people of good social standing. He took an active part in the ten years' war, which began in 1868, and under the leadership of General Cespedes, obtained a thorough insight into military tactics. After the treaty of peace he left the country, but returned to take part in the rising which took place six months later, in 1878. He was seized and imprisoned in Morro Castle, and after a time was deported to Spain. On being released, he returned to Cuba and engaged in sugar-planting. When the flag of Free Cuba was raised in 1895, Masso was among the first in the field. He assembled a small party of men at his estate of La Jaquita in Manzanillo, and there on February 24 of that year, he boldly proclaimed the independence of Cuba from Spanish rule. Masso is hailed by Cubans everywhere as "The Father of his Country"—the Washington of Cuba. He has led many a forlorn hope and has inspired the patriot forces with something of his own indomitable courage.

THE DAY OF JUDGMENT.

S. S. Lesson for May 22. Matt. 25 : 31-46.
Golden Text, Matt. 16 : 27.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

THERE is in the heart of every thinking man a conviction of the existence of a true and holy and mighty God (Rom. 1 : 18-21); and that we are responsible to him and shall one day have to give account to him of the life we have lived here on earth. The apostle Paul, when preaching at Athens on the "unknown God," whom the Athenians ignorantly worshipped, said, "He hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness by that man whom he hath ordained, whereof he hath given assurance unto all men, in that he hath raised him from the dead" (Acts 17 : 31). And his discourse which caused one of the great ones of this world to tremble was of "righteousness, temperance and judgment to come" (Acts 24 : 25). If he thus appealed to the consciences of heathen, it is clear that, even in these who "sit in darkness," there exists a conscience of coming judgment.

In the Scripture, quite apart from the many passages which speak of judgments upon men or nations for special sins, there are three distinct judgments or assizes of men. One of these is the judgment of the great white throne (Rev. 19 : 11-15), which will be the last and final judgment. The general idea of what is called the day of judgment, is taken from this passage. This cannot be until after the Millennium, and the great revolt of man at the end of that reign of peace, when Satan has been loosed for a short time after his thousand years imprisonment, and has been cast into the lake of fire and brimstone where the beast and false prophet have been already cast alive a thousand years before (Rev. 19 : 20.)

This is the judgment from which there is no appeal, and at which there is no question of mercy. As it finds men then, so will be the judgment passed upon them. No special pleader will then have power to bias judgment; the books are opened and the judgment is passed according to that which is "found written," "according to their works." All who have lived upon earth will stand before this judgment, if they have not been previously judged, and the dead who have not been awakened from the dust of the earth to everlasting life (Dan. 12 : 2), will be resurrected now "to shame and everlasting contempt." It is the day of judgment and destruction of ungodly men (II. Peter 2 : 9 ; 3 : 7). The first resurrection (Rev. 20 : 4-6), is a resurrection only of them that are "blessed and holy," but "the rest of the dead," who are not blessed and holy, "lived not until the thousand years should be finished." Shall any of these be saved people? The inference is that they are. May not this be the meaning of the judgment of the unprofitable servant, who yet was a servant, and not one of "those mine enemies," and also very specially the judgment of the "evil and wicked servant," who says, "My Lord delayeth his coming," and who is severely scourged (Luke 12-46, R. V., margin), and whose portion is appointed with the unfaithful. This is the same judgment which Daniel speaks of when he saw in vision the "Ancient of days," whose throne was fiery flames . . . "thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set and the books were opened" (Dan. 7 : 9, 10); the same books alluded to in Ps. 69 : 28. This is the day when God shall judge "the secrets of men by Jesus Christ," and the heathen will be judged according to the light of their conscience (Rom. 2 : 12-16). This is the day of judgment when God shall bring every work in to judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or whether it be evil (Eccl. 12 : 14).

"When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the angels with him, then shall he sit on the throne of his glory: and before him shall be gathered all the nations: and he shall separate them one from another as the shepherd separateth the sheep from the goats, and he shall set the sheep on his right hand and the goats on the left." When will the Son of man sit on the throne of his glory? Immediately after the tribulation of those days, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, etc., and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of man coming on the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, Matt. 16 : 27; Mark 8 : 38, allude to this same time, also Luke 9 : 26, where our Lord thus speaks of it, "Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in his own glory and the glory of the Father and of the holy angels."

No books are opened at this judgment, no resurrection of the dead is mentioned. Living nations stand before him, but the judgment is not only national, but individual; and the test in each case is how Christ's brethren have been treated. He who shall judge the quick [or living] and dead at his appearing, and his kingdom is now sitting in judgment upon those who have escaped the terrible plagues of the great tribulation. In this judgment the righteous inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world. All that this prepared kingdom means we know not. It is called eternal life, but it may begin in this world. It may be that Rom. 2 : 5-11, R. V., will be fulfilled at this time, and that they who by patience in well doing have sought for glory, honor and incorruption, eternal life shall be given so that they may never have to die, but will live on in the new earth where death shall be no more. Otherwise, who will inhabit the new earth?

But there is another judgment seat which precedes either of these already mentioned: it is the judgment seat of Christ. "He that heareth my Word and believeth him that sent me, hath eternal life, and cometh not into judgment" [the judgment of the great white throne] (John 5 : 22, R. V.), but "we [Paul included] must all be made manifest before the judgment seat of Christ: that each one may receive the things done in the body according to what he hath done, whether it be good or bad" (II. Cor. 5 : 10). This is the judgment first in order, for judgment must "begin at the house of God" (I. Pet. 4 : 17; Ezek. 9 : 6), and it will follow probably very soon after the taking away of Christ's waiting people. When, where, we know not, for it is not revealed; but this we know, for it is revealed, that "each one of us shall give account of himself to God" (Rom. 14 : 12).

"AS A SHEPHERD DIVIDETH HIS SHEEP FROM THE GOATS."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

A SUBJECT so large as the close of this Gospel dispensation and the final judgment, could not be covered by a single parable. Christ used several to teach the lessons which he wished to convey. He then presented in a few graphic words one feature which the parables had not given. These words must not be taken as giving a full and complete idea of the judgment, but of the one element which had not been touched in the preceding parables. The words suggest many interesting questions as to the time, and place, and the position in the order of events, which this separation will occupy. These questions cannot be satisfactorily answered. Christ was silent on the subject, and evidently did not intend, in what he did say, to gratify curiosity. It will be well if his example is followed by teachers, and instead of trying to make a programme of events on the slender basis afforded, an effort is made to inculcate the obvious practical lesson which is taught by the passage. If Christ had wished us to know the details, he would have told them, and not left us to learn them by groping among other books of the Bible for references to the subject, which might be pieced together like the fragments of a child's puzzle. The lesson is the one he taught all through his ministry as to the nature of Christianity. His religion was to be a change of nature and the man who was under its power, being good would do good, not with any idea of gaining a reward, but because the nature that was in him impelled him to such acts. The surprise manifested by both classes at the judgment, indicates that both had acted according to their natures and were not conscious of having done anything extraordinary. The acts they did, or left undone, were not important in themselves, but were very important as evidences of their nature, showing whether the persons had in them, or had not, the spirit of Christ. "If any man have not the spirit of Christ he is none of his."

When saw we thee? A critic of Shakspeare's works, discussing one of his characters, gives a reason for the spiritual pride which is seen in some people who have less reason to be proud than others who are humble. He suggests that when a man has to make a great struggle to himself to do a good deed, it naturally makes a deep impression on his mind, and when he has done it, he thinks what a good man he is to have done that wonderful thing to which he was so averse. Another man does the same deed naturally and without a thought, because such nature was bent in that direction, and he forgets all about it. "Accordingly," he says, "he who does no duty without being goaded up to it is conscious of much more virtue than he has; while he who does his duty as a thing of course and a matter of delight, is unconscious of his virtue because he has so much of it."

The kingdom prepared for you. Many people worry themselves about the subject of election, and are in an agony of anxiety as to whether they are among the elect. The question ought not to be a difficult of solution. The opening words of the Sermon on the Mount (Matt. 5 : 3-9) show who the elect are. These are the people for whom the kingdom is prepared, for they have the heavenly nature. All may have it, but some do not care for it. And so, as they have not the heavenly nature, they will not enter the heavenly kingdom. The story is told of a number of village girls that, hearing there was a vacancy for a servant in the household of a rich man, they applied for it. There were many applicants, for the man was known to be kind and liberal, and to enter his service was equivalent to being provided with a comfortable home and sufficient income for life or until married. All were told to come on a certain day, when the employer would make his selection. They assembled in the housekeeper's room, and were sent one by one to the employer's office. To reach the latter they had to cross a square garden by a paved walk, and the employer, looking from his window, could see them coming. A broom had been laid on the path. One girl stepped carelessly over it, another turned aside to avoid it, a third kicked it out of the way. At last one of them picked it up and set it tidily against a tree. She was the one selected for the coveted place, not that there was any special merit in her act, but because in picking up the broom she had shown an orderly and tidy nature.

Ye did it unto me. Tolstoi's familiar story, though it has been so often told, is too appropriate to this lesson to be omitted. A poor cobbler who lived in a dark, gloomy basement, had no books but a tattered Testament, which he read again and again. He loved his Lord and looked for the hour when he would see him. One night he dreamed that an angel came to him and told him that his longing would be satisfied. On a certain day Christ would visit him. The cobbler awoke with a joyous heart and eager expectancy. His heart was so full of love and joy that he seemed to love everybody. He could do no work that day, of course; so he waited for his Lord with his eager eyes fixed on the top of the steps that led to his basement. he saw every one that passed. So when he saw a woman wearing a pair of miserable shoes, through which protruded her bare feet, red with the cold of the snow, he called her down and gave her a new pair of shoes. After the woman was gone he saw an old man feebly toiling by, and he called him down, and seeing that he was hungry, shared his meal with him. Afterwards he called a homeless child down and let him warm himself at his fire. It was evening by this time, and the poor cobbler feared his dream would not come true. Long watching and unaccustomed idleness made him drowsy and he fell asleep. In his dreams he saw the three people whom he had helped all together in his room, and as he looked at them, their features changed and their garments shone, and once again he heard the angel's voice: "Inasmuch as ye did it unto them, ye did it unto me."

THE NEW SOLDIERS.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY'S call for 125,000 volunteers and the decision to temporarily increase the regular rmy to 61,010 enlisted men have led to en in all our cities to which this gen- rality is unaccustomed. On this page is photograph of one of the recruiting ts in New York. It is in City Hall rk and for several days past it has een the centre of eager and enthusiastic ows. New York's quota of volunteers 10 men, and it looks as if that quota be furnished several times over. disappointment is felt at the reluc- nce of several famous regiments to vol- nteer. It is obvious that the national ar would be worth a great deal more t field than raw recruits, who are ve fit for service, at the earliest, until ey have been drilled for six months. It xplained that the reluctance of the na- nal guard is not due to any shrinking om hardship or danger, but to the fact at under present arrangements the iden- ty of the regiments is liable to be lost, ile men might be called upon to serve d officers of the regular army, instead heir own volunteer officers. It ay be hoped that some way may be found overcoming this difficulty, so as to utilize valuable arm of the service and to re- ve the reproach which otherwise will ssibly be brought in the future by alking people against the national my. Besides the regular force called existence for the emergency, it is pro- sed to organize special forces peculiarly ted for this campaign. These include ree regiments of rough-riders; an en- ire brigade of 3,500 men; about 2,000 n is to act as scouts, and an extra rce of 10,000 immunes, or men who hav- ng ce had yellow fever, might hope to joy immunity from it, though subjected climatic conditions which the ordinary ldier could not bear. It is evident from these arrangements that the Government fully appreciates the gravity of the under- king upon which it has entered, and is preparing to grapple with it with intelli- ent foresight. It is much to be wished that when the banner of the Cross is un- furled there was the same eagerness to enter the service of the Prince of Peace as there has been to enter the service of the Government.

Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life, whereunto thou art also called (I. Tim. 6: 12).

The Paris" Safe.

No little interest was aroused on both sides of the Atlantic by the voyage, just completed, of the Paris, formerly one of the fleet of swift passenger steamers of the American Line, but now to become a cruiser in the service of the United States Government. She was in an English port when the trouble between Spain and the United States reached the crisis, and was liable to capture by the enemy during her voyage across the Atlantic. Indeed, the journals, which have disgraced the American name by their persistent lying, for several weeks past, more than once announced the capture of the Paris, and reported that she had been seen proceeding under convoy to the coast of Spain. As there were about a hundred and fifty passengers on board, besides a valuable cargo, the anxiety as to her safety became intense. It was realized that no vessel in the Spanish navy could overtake her, but it was feared that some Spanish cruiser, or torpedo boat, might lie in wait for her and cut her off. Although she had a large quantity of war material on board, it was not available for her own defence, so she was obliged to rely exclusively on her speed for safety. Happily, none of the predicted dangers beset her. She went somewhat out of her usual route to avoid any of the enemy's ships that might be looking for her, but otherwise made her usual voyage, and is now undergoing transformation into a cruiser for active service in the war. Several of her sister ships of the same line have already been withdrawn from service as passenger ships, and have been armed and sent to do duty as cruisers. They are called "the converted liners," and the name is appropriate. When a man is converted, his character is changed, and he enters a new service.

The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds (II. Cor. 10:4.)

A Heroic Rescue.

A press dispatch from Norfolk, Va., reports a double rescue by Lieut. Carter, a naval officer belonging to the gunboat Vicksburg. Three boats were taking on passengers at Old Point pier one evening last week, and an immense crowd had gathered. Suddenly a cry of terror was raised. A young woman had missed her footing on the gang-plank between one of the steamers and the pier, and had fallen into the water. At that place the water is forty feet deep, and the tide was running like a millrace. In trying to save her her escort fell in also. One man of all the great crowd knew what to do and did it. Lieut. Carter jumped in and grasped the man. The young woman's clothes caused her to float. Someone threw a rope to the lieutenant, which he tied around the drowning girl's waist, and she was hauled up. The suspense of the spectators was intense. While they waited a boat came, and the two struggling men were lifted aboard, while a shout went up from the crowd. What this officer may do in the war no man can predict, but he has already proved himself a hero. It will be a good thing when the time comes, in which all heroes prove themselves such by saving life, instead of destroying it, and so follow Christ's example.

For the Son of Man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them (Luke 9: 56).

ENLISTING RECRUITS FOR THE WAR, IN CITY HALL PARK, NEW YORK.

Enemies in a Fraternity.

The suggestion that every soldier going to the front should wear a tag for identification in case of his falling, was the subject of conversation recently in a company, one member of which is a colonel who fought in the great war. He said that he was a junior in college when that war broke out and when he went into the army he always wore his college fraternity pin as a means of identification, as it bore, besides the Greek letters of the fraternity, his own name and the name of his college. But during the war the pin was lost and though he made a thorough search for it he could not find it. Long after the war closed he received one day a letter which had been send to his college by the colonel of a Georgia regiment. The writer wanted to know if the Northern colonel was alive and if so, where he was living. An answer was sent and in reply came a letter containing the long lost pin. The Southerner said that in looking over the stock of a jeweler in Charleston, S. C., he had seen the pin, and being himself a member of the same Greek letter fraternity he had bought it. He did not know the owner, but he thought it would be a fraternal act to restore it to him if possible. The jeweler had bought it from a negro who picked it up on a battlefield, where a battle had been fought, in which the two colonels had fought on opposite sides. It appears that after the war fraternal feelings asserted themselves and the man who would have killed the other if they had met on the field, was glad to render him a service.

You that were sometimes alienated and enemies in your mind hath he reconciled (Col. 1: 21).

A Race Through Fire.

A thrilling incident of railroad travel occurred near Tamaqua, Pa., a few days ago. A passenger train, almost every car of which was crowded with passengers, was on its way from Philadelphia and was approaching Tamaqua, when, just as it was rounding a curve, a few miles south of the latter city, the engineer was horrified to see that an old covered wooden bridge, which the tracks crossed, was enveloped in flames. To stop was impossible, as the distance was too short, so he threw the throttle wide open and dashed on the burning bridge, reaching the other side with his human cargo in safety. The heat was very strong, and in the short space of time required to cover the hundred feet composing the bridge the cars were blistered and the roofs covered with burning debris. Had the train been ten minutes later it would have landed in the Schuylkill and caused a great loss of life, as the bridge burned very rapidly. It was a fearful risk to run, but as the event proved it was the wisest course to take. There are spiritual experiences of the same order. There are some men of evil life so beset with dangers on all hands, tempted by friends and companions, and enfeebled by evil passions and appetites within, that their destruction seems inevitable. In such circumstances to hesitate is to be lost. There is no hope but in a flight to the Cross, where Christ waits to welcome them:

Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain lest thou be consumed (Genesis 19: 17).

BRIEF NOTES.

The death of Rev. A. D. Lawrence Jewett, D.D., causes widespread and profound regret. Dr. Jewett was one of the most faithful friends and patrons of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Children's Home at Mont Lawn. To his generosity in giving the free use of the property and to our readers who have so liberally contributed to its support, thousands of children of New York's slums owe a debt of gratitude for seasons of happiness and renewed health.

The American Sunday School Union has removed its New York branch to 158 Fifth Ave. The missionary and publication departments will both be conducted at the same place.

An anonymous letter from Stockton, Cal., with enclosure, has been sent to the Converts' Prayer Meeting of the Bowery Mission as requested.

The recent census shows that the population of Egypt has increased by nearly three million, or thirty per cent., since the suppression of Arabi's rebellion. Such are the beneficent results of good government, and freedom from war, pestilence and famine.

The cheering news is received that the sales of the Bible and Bible portions in France last year, so far as they were conducted by the British and Foreign Bible Society, exceeded those of the previous year by more than thirty thousand volumes. There is nothing France needs so badly as it does the Bible.

Mrs. Sarah J. Bird held a special service at the Bowery Mission on April 24, for the men who were going to the war. Twenty-eight of the men who have been attending the Mission were present, and were solemnly commended to God, and were urged to be faithful to their Saviour amid the temptations of camp life.

The American Bible Society is anxious to be prepared to send into Cuba a large quantity of Spanish Bibles, Testaments, etc., as soon as the way is open. It has already received $230 from the Presbytery of St. Louis to aid it in preparing for this work. The Southern Presbytery has also aided in the same project.

The American Sunday School Union held its seventy-fourth anniversary at the Calvary Baptist Church, New York, on Sunday, May 8. Among the speakers who took part in the exercises were Dr. MacArthur, the pastor of the church; Dr. Charles Cuthbert Hall, Dr. J. M. Crowell, and Mr. Morris K. Jesup, President of the Union.

Rev. Alfred E. Myers, of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York, has been holding meetings in Chicago and Milwaukee in the interest of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip. Several chapters have been organized. The denominations represented were Baptist, Congregational, Cumberland Presbyterian, Friends, Reformed, Swedish Lutheran and United Brethren.

Statistics of missionary progress in Japan, recently compiled by Rev. H. Loomis, agent for the American Bible Society in that land, give the following list of last year's additions to the membership of the various churches: The Church of Christ in Japan, which is the union of the various Presbyterian and allied bodies, reports 774. The Methodist Episcopal reports 518, and the Kumiai churches in co-operation with the American Board, report 420; Baptists, 190; Canadian Methodists, 116, and fifteen other bodies report numbers of less than 100 each.

Rev. J. G. S. Weills, Chaplain of Sing Sing Prison, to whom our readers have already sent useful religious literature, says that it has been very helpful to him in his work. He would be very grateful if this assistance is continued. Back numbers of this journal and of magazines of all kinds are much appreciated by the prisoners, and form an excellent antidote to the sensational literature they sometimes read before coming under Mr. Weills' care. Many of them are idle all day, and there is therefore an excellent opportunity to reach them with Gospel truth at a critical period of their lives. There are 1,300 prisoners now within the walls.

The brief telegram, published last week, reporting the destruction of the Metropolitan Tabernacle, in which the late Pastor C. H. Spurgeon used to preach, is now supplemented by the mail. It appears that when the fire was discovered a meeting was being held in the adjoining Pastor's College. Several members hurried into the burning church and saved several priceless treasures. Among them were the church records, the communion plate and the historic chair and some valuable books, which had been presented to the late pastor. Arrangements have been made to hold services in Exeter Hall while the Tabernacle is being rebuilt.

The American Board has long had a station at San Sebastian in Spain. The missionaries have always been very popular in the town and neighborhood, but since the outbreak of war there has been a hostile feeling manifested. The Board has now received a cable message stating that the missionaries deemed it prudent to quit the country. They have arrived safely at Biarritz, in France, where they will remain to await the issues of events. The despatch was from the Rev. William H. Gulick, who has been in Spain since 1871. His associates are Miss Catherine H. Barbour of Canton Centre, Conn.; Miss Alice H. Busbee of Derby, Vt.; Miss Anna F. Webb of Oxford, Penn.; Miss Mary L. Page of Haverhill, Mass.; and Miss Susan Huntington of Norwalk, Conn.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

The Play of Children.

How it may be Utilized in Character-Building—Suggestions for the Housemothers and also for the Big Brothers and Sisters.

HOW often do we think of the vast amount of energy that runs to waste in child-life? To divert force spent in fretfulness and complaining into healthier channels is worth any amount of trouble, and the sunshine that comes into life in consequence is reward a hundredfold. Since the impulse given by Froebel, child-culture receives increasing attention; and in the eyes of advanced educators, no branch of public instruction is of larger importance than the kindergarten, where the teacher, through the medium of play, at once builds up childish character and imparts rudiments of exact sciences.

The disposition to make mud-pies, to prick pin-holes in any and everything, to scribble on walls and furniture, to construct toy-castles out of cherished bric-a-brac, to litter the house with paper clippings, to work hopeless mischief in mamma's flower beds and vegetable garden—all these tendencies which were, of old, the patient housemother's afflictions are the kindergartner's opportunities.

In places where kindergartens do not exist, mothers might profitably study methods of child-play and entertainment through various books that have been published upon the subject. A mother might enlist the interests of an older sister or brother and so form a sort of home kindergarten. One need not be discouraged if materials are meagre, the teacher uninstructed and results slow. Good seed will surely bear good fruit; and one cannot expect of seed that it be planted, grow up, bloom, and bear fruit in a day. Let the housemother teach the teacher to regard her play pupils as so many of God's flowers, to be watered with smiles and labored with lovingly, that they may grow up to the glory of God and the happiness of themselves, the home and the world. The real tending and care of an out-door garden by the little folks and their leader is particularly desirable, for nature thus furnishes an object-lesson in growth and development, which they may apply to themselves. Yet, garden-plots are not always possible, and there are days of rain and snow when little folks must stay indoors, and when the leader needs all the help, enlightenment, and encouragement that mother and books and blocks and games can supply. The leader in our illustration is evidently doing her duty under rather trying circumstances. It is recess hour in school; the weather, which keeps them indoors, is doubtless a trial to the children who would rather romp outside; the game has not gone to suit one small woman who is crying over the matter. The group are evidently engaged, however, in laudable effort to have the best time they can.

SCHOOL-CHILDREN AT INDOOR PLAY DURING THE RECESS HOUR.

England's Crown on an American.

A little American girl once wore the crown of England. It happened thus: Thomas Sully, the American portrait painter, took his little daughter with him to Buckingham Palace once when the Queen was to sit for him. The Queen came in with a thimble on her finger, as though she had just left a piece of sewing. She looked very small and child-like in her plain black silk gown and was a fair, sweet-looking girl. She greeted Mr. Sully and his daughter very pleasantly. Then she made a wry face at the jewel-studded crown, and declared that it gave her a headache. So it came to pass that for a part of the sitting the royal robes and crown of England rested on the head and shoulders of the painter's daughter, who relieved her Majesty. While the painter proceeded with drapery and diadem, the young Queen chatted to her substitute, giving pleasant accounts of her home life at Kensington Palace. She told them about her lessons and her sewing, and then it came out that she was making garment for the poor. But she was full of fun; and on leaving the room she backed out with a bow and a smile, as though she were a subject departing from the august presence of royalty. The burden had been a heavy one, and the little American did not covet the privilege of wearing it often.

Her Hands.

A little daughter of the tenements, writes Mary L. Dickinson, in Faith and Works, whose mother was done at last with the work and worry that had killed her, was left at fourteen years old with four younger brothers to mother and to nurse. Faithful to her trust, she scrubbed and washed, and cooked and mended, until the slender shoulders bent and the thin face grew white, and almost before any one noticed much, the little broken life lay waiting for release. "I haven't been able to do anything," she whispered to her favorite girl friend, who lived just around the corner; "I couldn't go to school, because of the work, or to Sunday School, because it took all father could spare to keep the others in clothes. When the minister came to see me, he said I'd soon see Jesus; but I'm afraid I haven't done any good, and I won't know anything to say to him." "And you needn't try to say anything," said the other, "not a single word," kissing the little pitiful face. "When you see him looking at you, you just show him your hands."

A Feline Favor.

A lady tells the readers of a European paper this story about her cat:

I once had a cat which always sat up to the dinner table with me, and had his napkin around his neck, his own plate and some fish. He used his paw, of course, but he was very particular, and behaved with extraordinary decorum. When he had finished his fish, I sometimes gave him a piece of mine. One day he was not to be found when the dinner-bell rang, so we began without him. Just as the plates were put around, puss came rushing upstairs and sprang into his chair with two mice in his mouth. Before he could be stopped he dropped a mouse on his own plate and then one on mine. He had divided his dinner with me as I had often divided mine with him.

Doubtless many of our little readers living in the country can tell stories of how their cats have brought in offerings of captured squirrels and birds, although kitty may not have dropped them in a dinner-plate.

The Ruined Garden.

He was just a little fellow, and it was just a wee bit of a play-garden, but he had sowed and planted and hoed and raked it all day. Then some one demolished it, and he went crying to his mother. She tried to comfort him, telling him he should have twice as many seeds to plant next day. But he asked heart-brokenly: "Mamma, how can I get back the hoeing and the raking?" Do not many of us grown folks ask God this when our large endeavors and noble efforts are brought to naught, apparently? And when God tells us we shall have other opportunities, other seed for sowing, do we not still cry out with unutterable yearning over our lost labors. What did the mother do when the promise of more seed did not console her little boy? She drew his head to her bosom, and kissed him; and he was comforted. When our labors come to naught and the gardens of our fair deeds seem trampled under foot of ruthless trespassers, let us lean our heads upon the Father's bosom, and forget sorrow and all hard thoughts and discouragements in the consolation of his perfect love.

A Notable Composition.

Somebody has asked for the famous boy's composition, entitled, "The Cow." This is said to be a true copy:

This story is about cows. The cow is an animal with four legs on the underside. The tail is longer than the two legs, but is not used to stand on. The cow kills flies with her tail. A cow has big ears that wiggles on hinges; so does her tail. The cow is bigger than the calf, but not so big as an elephant. She is made so small that she can go into the barn when nobody is looking. Some cows are black and some hook. A dog was hooked once. She tossed the dog that worried the cat that killed the rat. Black cows give white milk; so do other cows. Milkmen sell milk to buy their wives dresses, which they put water in and chalk. Cows chew cuds, and each finds his own chew. That is all there is about cows.

To-Morrow.

"Lie still," "be strong," to-day; but Lord, to-morrow,
What of to-morrow, Lord?
Shall there be rest from toil, be truce from sorrow,
Be living green upon the sward,
Now but a barren grave to me,
Be joy for sorrow?
"Did I not die for thee?
Did I not live for thee? Leave Me to-morrow."

"Billy"

Written by

Helen Hall Farley

YU could not expect much of "Billy." His home was a small log cabin in the mountains, where he lived with s andfather, a feeble old man, who not work any longer. Billy's mother ied when he was born, his grand- r years before, consequently the boy en accustomed to look out for him- far back as he could remember.

father was a scapegrace, had cleared on after his wife died, and no one ard of him since. "Good riddance," said.

log cabin in which Billy lived was d upon the side of a mountain. It o windows, but from its doorway uld get a fine view of the valley, e there were some pretty cottages, d white, with green blinds.

vers bloomed in these cottage door- Vines climbed over the cottage There was always a longing in eyes as he looked at the cottages valley, a greater longing, perhaps, he lifted them toward the everlast- s and the blue sky beyond. Usually, er, there was a merry expression in eyes. His was a sunny nature, but fast, since early morning, and so weary from hard labor that he would have been glad to have eaten a chunk of cold corn bread and then "laid him down in peace and slept." But with his marvelous devotion to "grand-dad," this course was not to be thought of.

He made a quick fire, cooked bacon, made coffee, got out the brown bread and the mountain honey. Grand-dad was happy then. He ate and smiled, and after the meal was over he smiled in childish glee. He came near falling asleep in his chair, then he aroused sufficiently to say:

"I'm tired, sonny. I want to go to bed."

"Come on, then, grand-dad; I'll help you undress."

Suddenly the old eyes caught sight of something in the corner—an old wooden cradle—it had been there as long as Billy could remember.

"Pull it out, sonny," said the old man. Billy pulled it out wonderingly.

The old man crept in it like a tired child and closed his eyes. "Rock me to sleep, sonny," he begged, "rock me ter sleep."

There came a loud rumble of thunder,

"I've bin to the mill, grand-dad," said with the sweet patience that was teristic of him; "I've bin workin' l o'. Now I'll get you a nice supper."

He was so hungry himself from the long rage. Presently the boy, whose back was toward the visitor, peered down into the cradle. He was satisfied that the old man was asleep at last.

"Poor old grand-dad," he said, softly, "poor old grand-dad!" Then he threw himself down on the rough floor, with his hand on the cradle-rocker, and fell asleep, an involuntary sigh escaping him.

The visitor got up quietly and walked over to the cradle. He stood for a few minutes looking down at the motionless form, then he touched the still face, with the smile of peace upon it, gently. It was cold.

Lilly's lullaby had soothed the old man through "the valley of the shadow"; Billy's rocking had comforted him until his feet touched the bank of the other shore.

The visitor's eyes grew dim with tears, his lips quivered.

"The little chap doesn't know it, but he's rocked and sang the old man into the other world," he said to himself, and then —kneeling beside the cradle — he whispered: "Lord, let thy richest blessings fall upon this little mountaineer. Lord bless him forever."

followed by a sharp streak of lightning. Billy ran and closed the door. "Grand-dad" had been afraid of the storm since his mind had failed.

The thunder roared like a hundred muffled drums, the lightning grew sharper. The wind tore round the old cabin as if determined to hurl it down to the valley below. A boulder from further up the mountain rolled down with so violent a thud that the cabin shook. Billy's face paled, but he did not falter.

"Poor old grand-dad," he thought, compassionately, "I'm glad he ain't scared this time—I'm glad."

He was rocking the cradle gently. He was singing, too, a lullaby: he had heard a woman singing it once to her baby, and he had never forgotten it. Upon the old man's face there came a smile of peace that was beautiful.

A missionary had been caught in the storm up in the Carolina mountains. He had reached the log cabin just in time to save himself from the heavy down-pour of rain.

He gently opened the door and went in without disturbing the inmates. He sat down quietly on an old bark stool near the door. He supposed the boy was rocking a baby to sleep, but as soon as his eyes became accustomed to the gloom he discovered his mistake. It was a strange sight and a pathetic one.

The fire flared up, revealing the rude interior. Outside the storm continued to

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

From a Log Cabin—Billows of Sorrow—Enjoying the Bible—Boys and Castle-Building.

ONE morning lately, there came to me a most beautiful letter written by a friend who lives away down among the mountains of North Carolina. She writes: "My dear husband and I have been married only fifteen months. We live in a little log cabin with only two rooms. The windows have six panes of glass, ten by twelve inches, and farming is our occupation. We are as happy as millionaires, for my husband is so kind and good. I do all my work with his help. He helps me cook and wash when I need help. When we come to a place where we do not know quite what to do, we say to each other, we will look at 'Friends in Council' and find out what is best, for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is our great standby. We could not do without it, and we have among our choice possessions two of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD libraries. Although poor, we are out of debt, and our days pass happily by. Some day, won't you send us your photograph?" I have put your letter down among those I care most about, and when I next have a good photograph taken, I will certainly send one to you. In the meantime, you can look at my picture every week in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and, please, whenever you see it, regard me as hoping some day to call on you in your little cabin home. I know just how your house looks, because I have often been a guest in similar houses. I think you are to be envied. It is much easier to take care of two rooms than of seven or eight, and all around you are the beautiful fields and the hills, and you have the fresh air blowing around you, free from dust and germs of disease, and your housekeeping is a much lighter thing than it would be in one of our crowded streets in New York. Then how pleasant to think of that manly, strong husband, and litting your burdens and making your life a song. God bless and keep you both.

ANOTHER friend writes in a rather despondent way that she does not find the Bible interesting, and that in the hard stress of life and amid its sorrows and trials she has lost some of her early faith in Christ. Dear friend, if I could take your hand and look into your eyes, I would say Christ has not lost his faith in you. You have wandered away from your own first love, but the dear Saviour is waiting to receive you again and to give you his own joy and peace if you will only let him do so. He says to every one of us, "Behold I stand at the door and knock." He cannot come into our closed heart unless you will open the door, but the instant you do open wide the door he will enter and make you once more glad with his presence. I fear you are making the mistake of thinking too much about yourself. In your place it would be well to avoid too much introspection. Do not think about your own feelings at all; just take hold of your work and do it with your might. There is that sweet little girl who calls you mother. Surely God was very good to you when he gave you this beloved little daughter. You have her to teach and to train. As she kneels in her little white nightgown to say her prayers beside your knee, and you join her little hands together and teach her to say, "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray the Lord my soul to keep," can you not, like a little child, give yourself to the same tender care which watches over her? We must come to Christ as little children, without questioning and without fear, if we are to find him and know him as our precious Saviour.

ABOUT reading the Bible, my own experience is that we enjoy it in proportion as we read it every day. I think you will find it interesting if you will take it up as you would any other book, sit down and read it for awhile daily. I advise you to read it aloud, although you may be alone. Choose for the present the Gospels. Let me tell you a little story. Away out in Japan there was a man of high rank who had come under the influence of the missionaries and who had found Christ in reading the New Testament. This Japanese gentleman was afraid to let his wife know that he had changed his faith and given up the religion in which he had been brought up, so he hid the Testament and never told her that he had embraced the new religion. In his absence one day the wife found the New Testament in Japanese, and knowing nothing about it, only meeting it as a strange book, she sat down and read it hour after hour. When her husband came home she turned to him, her eyes full of tears, and said, "This is the most beautiful book I ever read. It is all about a wonderful prince who came to earth to save men. He did everything good for them, but they turned upon and killed him at last, and now I have just found that he rose from the dead," so after that husband and wife were united in Christian fellowship.

CERTAINLY, boys are welcome in this corner and may come as freely as they like to the meetings of our Friends in Council. In fact, I am so fond of boys that I wish a good many more of them would drop in here with their pleasant faces and cheery words. A boy writes to ask me how to cure the habit of castle building and mind-wandering. When I was a child, I was very much impressed with a story which I found in one of my school books about an old Grecian philosopher named Thales. This venerable sage had a habit of wandering about in the night gazing at the stars. One evening, while occupied in his favorite pursuit, he tumbled head foremost into a ditch, from which he was fished out with difficulty. His practical housekeeper said to him, "For the future, Thales, it would be better for you to have a care when your eyes are on the stars, that your feet are also on the firm earth." May I ask you a question? When you are riding your wheel, if you have one, do you find it possible to give sufficient attention to it to keep clear of other riders? If you can give full attention to any pursuit, you can equally give full attention to all pursuits. The thing to do is to concentrate your thoughts on the business in hand. Nothing comes of castle building except a little pleasure in reverie, which is quite permissible when one has nothing else on hand. It is only a matter of training and discipline, and a boy who wants to succeed in life, as all boys do, must make up his mind that he must be bright and alert and not waste valuable time in mooning and weaving pleasant dreams.

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

THE WATER OF LIFE.

THE Christian life is an evergreen because the fountain of life ever springing up in the soil, feeds the roots of hope and defy the withering influences of age. Only those have Christ's well-springs in their can look forward to a life ever and green:

A recent traveler declares that nothing be more striking than the contrast in nd Australia between the dry and the sons. In the former, one travels mile ile over bare, stony plains, with scarcely f plant or animal life. The sun beats hotly on shining fields of brown and stones. But when the rains begin, with- ew hours the whole scene is changed. ater has loosened the hard ground and ss animals have appeared. Clay pans ater holes are noisy with the croaking s; crustaceans hatch out with wonder- idity from eggs which have lain on the ound, for, it may be, many months; mollusks buried in clay are released, ery inhabitant of land and water sets to o make the best of his short life. The , within a day or two, is green with the of countless seedlings, which grow ; birds appear as if by magic, and the iry and silent country is now bright owers and foliage and animals, all out in their liveliest colors.

ith at the Heart.

l man's heart is warm with love to nd his fellowman. it will show itself in ells of daily life, for out of the abund- f the heart the mouth speaketh:

l wells along a defined line to the south st of Phoenix, Ariz., have within a week e producers of hot water, and apprehen- felt by many of the residents of the re- ffected, that they are about to become pants in a grand volcanic drama. In of the wells the temperature of the well rose twenty degrees in a single night. ew, the phenomenon disappeared soon its appearance. In a majority of the however, the wells fairly steam from newly acquired heat. A test at one well d a temperature of nearly one hundred ges.

aring One's Business.

ere is a vast difference between the who follows his business with a ser- eeling, giving just as little attention as he can, and yet obtain a living o it, and the man who masters his ess, and with enthusiasm seeks to ve it and enoble it:

n Curzon, a Polish mechanic, who was ented with a gold medal for his inventions, rmed a most extraordinary thing when ceeded in manufacturing a complete in the space of eight hours, and from ials on which most watchmakers would looked with contempt. It appears that ar of Russia, hearing of the marvelous of Curzon, determined to put him to the nd forwarded him a box containing a opper nails, some wood chippings, a of broken glass, an old cracked china ome wire, and a few cribbage board with the request that he should trans- them into a time-piece.

ning daunted, and perceiving a golden tunity of winning favor at the Court, n set about his task with enthusiasm. n the almost incredibly short space of hours, had despatched a wonderfully ructed watch to the Czar, who was so sed and delighted at the work that he or the maker, conferred upon him several ctions, and granted him a pension. The of the watch was made of china, while orks were simply composed of the odds nds accompanying the old cup. Not did it keep good time, but only required ng once in three or four days.

Building on the Rock.

e most costly little stretch of road- e for a railroad in any country is said e on the Carbondale division of the Railroad, at Ararat Summit. It is a quarter of a mile long, but it cost y $300,000 to get the track ready for ails.

e railroad was completed in 1875, and had passed over it, but one night a er of a mile of the track and roadbed peared entirely and a great quagmire oc- d the place where apparently solid ground been before. Into this pit ten thousands of ads of gravel and five hundred large hem- lock trees were thrown without having any perceptible effect toward forming a bottom on which a new roadbed could be founded. They finally found solid rock one hundred and sixty feet below the surface, and made a foundation by driving four piles, each forty feet long, one on top of another. It took fifteen hundred trees and a whole hill of gravel to make the solid bed. Multitudes of souls are making the fearful blunder of building their hopes of happiness on the sand or on a quagmire. Only the Rock of Ages can give permanent foundation. Those who build on Christ shall never be put to confusion.

The Greatest Jewel of All.

At the beginning of the eighteenth century, a soldier belonging to one of the French garrisons in India became enamored of the eyes of Brahma, in the Temple of Serringham. These eyes were diamonds, and were the most brilliant in all the East. Their lustre captivated the soldier's soul:

He haunted the temple, and pretended to yield to the might of the god and became a convert to his worship. The priests so far believed in him, that he was admitted to some care of the temple. They doubtless thought Brahma would be able to protect his own eyes. But on a stormy night the soldier disappeared, and with him one of the idol's eyes, the other having resisted all his efforts to dislodge it. So Brahma was left squinting, and the treacherous Frenchman sold his prize to a captain in the English navy for ten thousand dollars. A shrewd Armenian merchant paid fifty thousand dollars for it, and sold it to Count Gregory for Catherine of Russia for four hundred thousand dollars. That was the origin of the famous Orloff diamond. The most splendid jewel in the world, however, is not a diamond, but a pearl. Jesus calls it the Pearl of Great Price. He declares that a man is wise who sells all he has in order to purchase that pearl. It is the Pearl of Salvation, and the poorest man in the world may purchase it as easily as a king on his throne, but the conditions are always the same, the surrender of the whole heart and life to Jesus.

The Optimism of Jesus.

How sublime the hopefulness of Jesus Christ, who looks forward to the time when nations shall learn war no more, and universal peace shall cover the earth!

A German critic has been adding up the grand total of the continental armies, and after noting that we can only form a vague idea of what is meant by tens of millions, he tries to bring home to his readers in another way the colossal growth of modern armaments. If, he says, we could have all the armies of the continent on a war footing, drawn up in one long procession, with their guns and ammunition and baggage-wagons, the column would be rather more than twenty-four thousand miles long, and, marching day and night, it would take nearly a year to pass a given point.

The Unreason of Envy.

No sin is more silly than envy. The envious spirit often leads its poor victim into the most egregious folly:

The other day in New York City, a sound, well-built man actually bemoaned that fate had not made him a cripple. He stood near Fourteenth street and Sixth avenue, trying to sell lead pencils with rubbers attached. He called out lustily, but few people cared to buy. Before him passed a cripple on crutches, who hobbled briskly in and out among the crowd, doing a rushing business in popular song sheets. As the pencil vender eyed him in envy, he was heard to mutter, as he stood shivering there, "I wish I had only one leg."

Resist the Devil.

Animal-trainers say that the secret of handling safely all beasts of the cat species such as lions, tigers and leopards, is to keep them constantly afraid of you. The instant they get over their fear, they will attack any one who crosses their path.

They are all treacherous, too, and often gather courage for an attack when the master's eyes are turned away from them, although they would not dare revolt if he faced them. One never knows when they will get over their fear, and spring at the keeper if they have a chance to do it from behind. Our fight with the devil is like that. He is always seeking to attack us from the rear or in ambush. The devil goes about roaring like a big lion seeking whom he may devour, but he is a great coward when faced with courage. "Resist the devil and he will flee from you," is as true in our time as it was when the Apostle James first made the declaration.

There is nothing the particular person selects more carefully than the soap he or she uses, and rightly so, for much discomfort results from the use of impure soaps.

AN ARAB WEDDING

In the Mohammedan Village of Betunia, Syria.

MISS K. SANDRECZKA, daughter of Dr. Sandreczka, of the Marienstift, Jerusalem, and herself a nurse at the Children's Hospital in that city, sends us this entertaining description of an Arab Mohammedan wedding:

MISS K. SANDRECZKA.

"We had in our Children's Hospital, Marienstift, the little son of the Sheik, of Betunia. He was suffering from 'caries' which necessitated several operations in the bones of the hand and foot. After he had been several months under our treatment he was cured, and we also noticed a great improvement in his general behavior.

"Soon after his departure, his uncle came to invite us to the wedding of two other sons of the same Sheik. The invitation was not only a verbal one, he also brought cards, printed in gold letters 'alla franca', as he said, 'European style.' We accepted the invitation, and on the appointed day rode out to the place.

"After a ride of several hours over barren hills, and through equally barren valleys, past the 'Rama' of the Bible, we were approaching our goal, when many Arab Fellaheen chiefs and Bedouins in picturesque costumes and mounted on fine horses, came to meet us. They began to execute their feats of wonderful horsemanship, while their followers on foot kept up a sort of feu de joie. Near the village we heard the sounds of very unmelodious music. Drums, cymbals, tamtourines and flutes were making a great noise, while from the roofs of the houses on which the women were assembled, came the peculiar shrill cry of the women, a sort of 'jodler' which they utter on festive occasions. There was singing, too, on the roofs and great clapping of hands.

"In front of the village in an open space there were erected various tents, the centre tent being the largest one, in fine colors on two poles, and open to the north. We were kindly received by many female guests in the tents, which from thirty to forty persons were present, besides the Turkish officials from the town, Turkish Effendis, Greek priests, etc. It was most interesting to notice the costumes, manners, features and gestures of these different grey-haired Sheiks who had come, not only from the surroundings of Jerusalem, but also from Hebron, Jericho, Gaza and Sichem to the wedding festivities. They reminded me of the descriptions and pictures of the days of the patriarchs.

"The father of the bridegroom now asked us if we ladies would not like to go and see the young brides, and we gladly assented. After passing through several, not particularly clean streets, we came to a nice house. The lady of the house received us. All the ladies of the harem now appeared dressed in gorgeous robes, with chains of gold coins, or European watches and chains, all innovations which the husbands and fathers of these fellaheen women deplore, but which they do not seem able to oppose. After a short conversation we were taken to see the brides who were being dressed. As we were led into the room we were asked where our wedding presents were! An Arab lady of the company, noticing our embarrassment, said that most likely we did not know about the Arab custom of bringing gifts in our hands.

"In the bridal chamber a poor little bride was sitting motionless and not allowed to speak or to laugh. She rose and shook hands with us but never lifted her eyes to look at us, gazing downwards with a sort of stony stare. She was tall and slender, and as far as we could judge had pretty, dark eyes. Her dress was not the Fellaha costume—it was of striped velvet, and a blue feather was stuck in her hair. Her ornaments were not very costly either. After we were seated all the Fellahas present squatted down, and began to sing songs praising the bride.

"The two bridegrooms, with their 'best men' and 'witnesses,' came and sat down by us. The elder of the two was a student at the Cairo University. The other bridegroom, a boy of between fourteen and sixteen was dressed, all but the 'fez,' in European clothes, and he had a red feather in his buttonhole—his bride being the girl with a blue feather.

"The wedding procession was now formed: the young bridegroom with his best man rode first, mounted on handsome horses, and accompanied by many others on horseback and on foot, the latter of whom kept firing off their guns. The women followed, dancing, singing and clapping their hands. All those from the tents who had horses proceeded to a large field to perform feats of horsemanship and to join in the target-shooting. The real wedding-procession was to take place at night with torch-lights. But we, unfortunately, could not remain for this, in spite of the entreaties of the friendly Sheik. K. SANDRECZKA."

Strange New Shrub that Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc. Free.

We have previously described the new botanic discovery Alkavis, which proves a specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disorder of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is now stated that Alkavis is a product of the well known Kava Kava Shrub, and is a specific cure for these diseases just as quinine is for malaria. Hon. R. C. Wood, of Lowell, Ind., writes that in four weeks Alkavis cured him of Kidney and Bladder disease of ten years standing, and Rev. Thomas M. Owen, of West Pawlet, Vt., gives similar testimony. Many ladies also testify to its wonderful cures in disorders peculiar to womanhood. The only importers of Alkavis so far are the Church Kidney Cure Co., of 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free trial bottle of Alkavis prepaid to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disease, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affection due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative power

Weak Lungs

Recent Progress of Medical Science

Extract from Dr. Robert Hunter's lectures on the lungs have been published from time to time in this paper for the purpose of informing the people of the real nature of lung diseases and the discovery of a successful treatment of the lungs by Antiseptic Medicated Air Inhalations. No truth of medical science has been more conclusively proven and established than that Bronchitis, Asthma, and Catarrh of the Lungs have been and are being radically cured by this treatment, while even Consumption, the most dreaded of all lung complaints, is arrested and entirely eradicated by Dr. Hunter's most recently discovered germicides, which kill and expel from the lungs the bacilli of tuberculosis. From all parts of the Union come the grateful acknowledgments of patients whose lives have been saved by Dr. Hunter.

Mrs. Milford Jones, of Dover, Morris Co., N. J., says: "I had been ill for nearly three years and was treated by seven doctors, all pronouncing my case very serious and some hopeless. I called Dr. Hunter as my last hope. He stated my case clearly, saying there was a cavity in my right lung. He said he could cure me if I had patience and would be faithful to the treatment, but it would take a long time. I am now able to do my housework and work in the store, and am a living witness of the power of Dr. Hunter's antiseptic air inhalations to cure the lungs even after all other means have failed."

Any subscriber of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who is interested can obtain this book free by addressing Dr. Hunter at 117 West 45th St., New York.

We direct special attention to the following remarkable statement:

Had catarrh since I can remember, often avoided company on account of it. My head was dry and stuffy. The least change in the weather gave me a dull pain over my eyes, caused a stopped up, drowsy feeling, then began to ring, in time my hearing became so deaf could not hear one. Used Aerial Medication eight weeks, when was fully restored, roaring and pain left, and was entirely cured of Catarrh. I do not why anyone should suffer from Catarrh and deafness when there is such a good cure as this. MISS CARRIE BOWERS, Rouseville, Pa.

We have reliable assurance that the above statement is genuine and that Dr. M. is a reputable physician.—Cincinnati Commercial Standard.

The mighty ship is lost,
All that! and with its cost
We miss, but sorrow most
The brave, we lose.

Fair Cuba now is heard.
All hearts for her are stirred!
She should, be free.
The foes of right defy
If need, with battle cry!
And dare to do, or die.
She shall, be free.

Stern duty! Peace now bars,
Unfurl the flag of stars!
To arms! To arms!
That gallant sons may come,
From every patriot home.
With waving flag they'll come!
To arms! To arms!

Almighty God! our trust,
Give wisdom, keep us just!
The nation prays.
It draws the sword for right!
Lead thou us through the fight,
And shield us by thy might!
For victors' days.

HONOR TO PARENTS.

The Commandment with a Promise. Ex. 20: 12; Eph. 6: 1-4.

In spite of the frequent repetition of the commandments, there are many young people in our own land who seem to have forgotten that deference to parents is a religious duty. The Orient remembers it, but in Western nations especially in our own, there is little of that devotion which should be displayed by children to their parents. Perhaps the fault has been in the training of the children. In the press and strain of business and social life, the parents have too often relied on the school for the teaching of their children, and have not been in such close relation with them as to inspire respect. Christian young people, however, ought to set an example in this matter. They should never be among those who look at the foibles of their parents, who disregard their wishes, or complain of the restrictions they impose. After all, the son and daughter may be sure that they can have no friend so loyal, nor any whose counsel is so disinterested. All the benefit of experience is on the side of the parent, and if it has not always brought wisdom, it has at least given a knowledge of things which deserves respectful attention. No book learning can equal that in value the conduct of life, whatever the educated child may think. The fact should not blind the willing obedience and the respectful deference that are implied in the filial command.

CHRIST OUR MODEL.

An Example of Humility and Helpfulness for All Christians. Matt. 10:24,25; John 13:12,15.

Men of all classes, nationalities and periods have gained strength and inspiration from the study of Christ's life and character. It is singular that it should be so, for the circumstances could not differ more widely. If Christ had been merely the Galilean peasant working in that he appeared to be, his person and ministry could never have affected kings, philosophers, judges, soldiers, merchants, women and children, as we know it has done. His character was built on lines so unlike, that every one who loves him is able to turn to it as a model, which may be applied in any circumstances. Its principles were so clearly defined, that we can say of men living in our own time, so widely different from his, that they are, or are not, like Christ. The contrast, for instance, between the life of Christ and between the life of the President of this Republic could not be greater: but the President could find no better model in all story for his conduct. In this particular instance, which crude minds have tried to narrow down to mere formal ceremony, there is a far-reaching principle which affects every life. The vice of competition, of trying to get ahead of others, not in the sense of being more useful, but of getting the prizes others covet and acquiring more than our share of the good things of life has eaten into our very being. It showed itself pitifully at his last meal in a struggle for the best places at the table. It was a trivial matter, which in view of the impending tragedy, he might have allowed to pass unnoticed, but it involved a principle which would survive in later generations. So he gave them an object lesson, which should be conspicuous in every age. He performed the duty of a servant. He rendered to each a personal service, of so menial a character, that not one of them would have done it for another. After that, to the end of time, no one need be ashamed to minister to the comfort of a brother in any way that may be required. Such services, howsoever humble they may be, have been ennobled by Christ's act.

The Tartarlithine Club.

In one of the principal towns of the North-west there has been formed one of the most curious clubs in existence at the present time. It is called the "Tartarlithine Club," and its membership is composed only of persons suffering from gout and rheumatism.

The club was started by one of the leading pharmacists in the North-west, who was cured of rheumatism by taking Tartarlithine. The members meet at his store every day for the purpose of taking the mid-day dose. Each member has his own bottle, labeled with his own name, and these are arranged on a shelf in a corner of the store. At last accounts the membership was gradually decreasing, owing to the fact that the patients were no longer able to comply with the requirements for membership.

GOSPEL WORK IN THE CAMP.

How to Send the Gospel Message to the Brave Boys now in Camp, who have Volunteered to Fight the Battles of Their Country.

WHEN the Christian is really alert in his Master's service, an opportunity of preaching the Gospel comes to him in a mandatory guise. If his neighbor needs consolation or help, or is in circumstances which render him more than usually impressionable than usual, the opportunity to speak a word for Christ constitutes an imperative call to service. Such an opportunity on a gigantic scale is presented in the camps of national guards and volunteers which have been formed in various parts of the country.

There are young men there, in vast numbers, removed from home and church influences, exposed to the moral dangers inseparable from camp life and liable to make acquaintanceships which will introduce them to habits of gambling, drinking and evil of all kinds. Besides this, they are there for dangerous service. They have volunteered to fight their country's battles and to rally for the glorious flag, whose honor never yet stained, is committed to their keeping. We know by sad experience what that means. They may have to confront a brave and desperate enemy, and many of them may fall before the deadly fire of Spanish bullets. They may be exposed, too, to the diseases of a tropical climate, and may be laid on beds of sickness far from the loving hands and hearts which would gladly minister to their need. To a thoughtful mind the spectacle of a camp is unspeakably impressive, and the Christian naturally longs to see these men, who are going unfalteringly into deadly peril, prepared for the great change, which may be impending over many of them. Yet at present the means of such preparation are of the most meagre character. Chaplain C. C. Bateman writes us from the camp at Chickamauga, Ga., that there are already five thousand men there, and he is the only post-chaplain on the field. Two and a half miles away from him, there is Regimental Chaplain Stewart with his regiment, but what are they among so many? And more men are arriving daily. Probably not less than fifty thousand men will be there within a few days. What an opportunity there will be for Christian work! How urgent it is, too, in view of the perils to which these brave men are exposed!

Believing that our readers, who have co-operated with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in so many good works, would gladly

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Any reader of this journal wishing to subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to be sent to a friend or relative in the army, can do so by sending to this office 25 cents for a three months' subscription, or $1 for a year. The address will be changed as often as desired. This SPECIAL RATE is made at the request of many readers, and is intended EXCLUSIVELY for the benefit of our "boys in blue" in camp or at the front. Army Chaplains unite in stating that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a valuable aid in their spiritual work, and exerts a strong moral influence among the rank and file.

Mrs. W. R. B., South Bound Brook, N. J. Does the religion of the Greeks and Romans, by which Jupiter and kindred deities were worshipped still exist anywhere, or has it been eradicated by the Christian or other religions? Did the religion by which Jupiter was adored have an alleged revelation for its foundation similar to the Bible for the Hebrew and Christian and the Koran for the Mohammedan religions, and it so by what name was it known, and is it extinct?

When Greece and Rome became Christian (the former in the fifth century A.D., the latter in the fourth century A.D.), the pagan religion, with its multitude of deities, was abolished. Some of the pagan rites and festivals were transformed into Christian rites and observances without change of date. The last traces of paganism as an existent religion then disappeared. Its equivalent, however, is found in some of the later oriental religions, although there is now nowhere on the earth any sect or people who worship the old gods of Greece and Rome.

Troubled Heart ——, Kans. Is the unoffending partner to a marriage justified in consenting to a secret divorce simply because the other party desires to be free from the marriage bond?

No. Undefended suits are practically an admission of guilt. The innocent party's lawyer need not struggle to maintain the marriage, but he ought to vindicate his client's character in court and show that the blame rests on the other side. Some time in the future it may be a matter of vital moment to the innocent party to be able to prove by the records of the court where the fault really was.

Mr. S. E. White, Sand Rock, Ala., a field missionary writes:

Lately I made a request for back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and other religious literature which we greatly needed in our Sunday-school and church work, and it is amazing how readily good people responded to our call. From our day school alone I have distributed 734 copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and over 400 others of a miscellaneous kind. Sister White's Sunday-school class alone has increased from a few listless urchins to a live and wideawake class of 45, and on specially fine days even fifty. We have been able to get some 200 into our day school, and fully one hundred of these have been taught to read and write. There are not less than ten thousand children within a distance of fifty miles. In fifteen miles I followed the mountain trail last week I saw neither school nor church house till I reached the valley. I stopped at several small log shanties and talked about schools and meeting houses. I found that there was one across the mountain to the east side where they were said to have school and preaching. I never pay calls for preaching, and next Sunday go seven miles to my appointment. I could make the trip on foot. We never say a word on what we get for our work here.

The letter speaks for itself and discloses a need which our readers may be glad to help us in supplying.

U. S. S. Franklin NORFOLK VA.
EDITOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

We have seventeen Bibles on board now and need Christian literature for these lads. They are awarded debits to get THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. If I were rich I could [illegible] Wright four copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD each week for three months. This special rate being made solely for the sake of our gallant young sailors, on the receiving ship Franklin. We believe there are many of our readers who will take pleasure in being represented in such a missionary work, which is so greatly needed.

Sylvanish B. The difference in time between the points mentioned may be computed with the following as a basis:

Chief Willis L. Moore, of the Weather Bureau, Washington, D. C., writes: By common consent of European nations, the dates of our civil days begin at midnight on the 180th meridian, opposite to that of Greenwich, which passes through Eastern Siberia and the Pacific Ocean. When vessels cross this meridian they necessarily change the date. It is understood that on some of the islands the 180th meridian is not strictly adhered to, depending in part upon their convenience in commercial transactions with neighboring islands, and in part upon ancient customs, before the adoption of the 180th meridian.

Our inquiry as to free or rented pews, which appeared in THE MAIL BAG recently, is eliciting many interesting letters on the subject. Some of these are given below:

W. S. E., Clifton, Calif. I do not think that rented pews need to keep any one out of the church. My experience in church work has taught me that the poor, in many cases pay more in proportion than many in better circumstances. I have seen a secretary with $3,000 per year pay just $5 per year for support of the church, and insist on taking one of the best pews in the building under the "free seat plan." We changed to the "rented pew system," and he had to take his proper place. The Gospel is indeed free, but it costs something to build, and ministers can't live on air alone. In all churches, pews are graded according to location and we can choose according to our circumstances. No true church will ignore the poor. When we have our own pews, we can take our whole family to it, which I think is a great advantage.

I. T. K., Harrisburg, Pa. The questions are asked in THE MAIL BAG (April 6) by Endeavor. 1. "Do you consider free pews in a church impractical?" 2. "As a general thing, have they worked successfully where tried?" My answer would be this: For twenty-three years I have been a member of a church that has free pews. We have been able to cancel a big church debt. Our church got too small and we bought more ground and built a larger church. Our debt was $20,000 ten years ago, and that is all paid but $2,500. We receive an Easter offering from each member, sums which aggregate $2,500 and sometimes $2,700. Beside this, our members are expected, because of voluntary vows made and obligations assumed, to bear their part of the general financial responsibility by contributing regularly, according to their means, to the various funds it maintains. The church is divided into thirteen districts, under the charge of three collectors to each district, whose duties are to attend to collections. 1st, fund for the support of the church; 2d, incidental fund; 3d, debt fund; 4th, synodical fund; 5th, fund for the needy. I believe there is no Protestant church in this city that has rented pews.

D. M. L., Perkasie, Pa. 1. Do you consider it safe for Americans to travel in Europe and Palestine under the present condition of war with Spain? 2. Can we get THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sent to the different places as London, Paris, Berlin, Rome and Jerusalem and what will be the extra charges?

1. For some time to come it may not be safe to travel in American ships, but you can do so safely in the vessels of any other nation. Travel by land in any country, other than Spain or its colonies, will be entirely safe. 2. Yes; send $1 extra for foreign postage.

W. W. B., Baldwinsville, N. Y. 1. What other organization beside THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have been collecting and sending supplies to Cuba? 2. What were the touching words of Napoleon (as he met the French army which was sent to intercept him on his return, after his escape from banishment,) that transformed the army from enemies to followers?

1. Chambers of Commerce, trade and other organizations, churches, and even municipalities have helped, many of them acting independently, and forwarding their gifts to our Consul in Havana without any intermediary. 2. He is reported to have said, "Which of you will fire on his Emperor?" and the question is said to have disarmed them and won them back to his support.

Reader,——, Ind. I am in trouble and darkness. I cannot feel that I have any sure hope for my soul. All my life I have led a good life, have never injured my neighbor, nor done anything bad; yet it seems as if God had no love for me. What ought I to do?

If your report of yourself is correct, it would seem that you are very near the kingdom. Why not go to God in prayer and ask him to receive you for Christ's sake? It might be well not to say anything to him about your good life, but rather ask him to show you how you stand in his sight. The Holy Spirit is given to convince the world of sin. We should not be surprised if after such a prayer you learned that there had been more sin in your life than you are now aware of. You may be brought into a condition in which you are very thankful that Christ came to save sinners. But in any case ask God honestly and sincerely to make you his child, and to remove any obstacle there may be to your adoption into his family.

1. The authority of fact. There are [illegible] more than three. J. S., Parkesburg, Pa. Can a man [illegible] be a close follower of Christ and [illegible] with carnal weapons?

We think he may. If you [illegible] man beating a woman or child [illegible] highway, or approaching a loneliness [illegible] eler with the evident intention of [illegible] mitting a murder, we think that [illegible] had the spirit of Christ, you [illegible] snatch up the first weapon at [illegible] however carnal it might be, and [illegible] the rescue. Of course, if you [illegible] on being literally "a close follower [illegible] Christ," a scourge of cords such [illegible] Christ used (John 2: 15) would [illegible] proper weapon, but we do not [illegible] that a stout cudgel, or a rifle [illegible] more carnal. FOR A GREAT CHRISTIAN CAMP.

Mr. oody would Rejoice to see Northfield a Tented City of Spiritual Workers During the Coming Summer.

R. DWIGHT L. MOODY'S work at Northfield, Mass. is known throughout the length and breadth of our Union. He is now planning to make the coming summer a phenomenal e respect to the spiritual activities camp at Northfield, and with that se in view, has written this hearty t of invitation:

R. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

I sh to extend through your columns a invitation to the young men of our y to spend their vacations this season p Northfield, Northfield, Mass. For st ten summers, the college students joyed coming to Northfield so much m anxious now to extend the privileges great mass of young men outside the and colleges. May I suggest that urches, Endeavor Societies, and Y. A. Associations have a tent at Camp eld, and keep it full throughout the by sending different delegations to e or two weeks? Large business houses, this, would find it to their advantage to e tent, and encourage their employees to heir vacations here in the same way. I e we could send fire into all the towns th eastern states if Christian people inter- ed, young men would co-operate with us h Yours truly, gfield, O. D. L. MOODY.

The real length of a vacation is not ea ed by days, but by the amount of e st gained without the loss of other s. It is one of the sad facts of our e at so many young men spend their ca ns in a tainted or unnatural atmos- er hat is the means of robbing them n al fibre, and lowering their ambi- n r all time. At vacation time most r men are off guard, and are easily tible to influences which at other e would be most faithfully fought a t.

M Moody's great heart, reaching out s e young men just at these critical n several years ago, conceived the i inviting young men to a camp at or eld, where rest and pleasure could b al, and flavored by an association h home of the most noble Christian en f the age, whose thoughts and ac- n re the objects of world-wide inter- st d power. When speaking before he Campers" at their opening exer- ses in '96 he called this the "ninth baby t Northfield movement," and we can easily see that it resembles the other pha of Northfield work in its lofty pe and its marvelous spiritual suc- cess strongly enough to rightly deserve the le of "one of the family."

Camp Northfield is a place where spiritual growth and physical rest are in a peculiar way combined. Each day ample opportunity is given, not only for entering all sorts of athletic sports and games, but also for listening to some of the most noted Bible scholars from this and other lands. Mr. Moody himself is a frequent visitor. "At some camps," writes one who has visited Northfield, "the days grow long and monotonous, and time hangs heavily; but here the days are all too short." The camp is always well represented at the various daily meetings, and many a man has his eyes opened to grand possibilities of the application of Christian principles to life.

Although Mr. Moody's chief purpose in starting this camp was to provide a place where city and town young men could spend their vacation in recreation and rest, yet more than this has been realized in the case of many who have come to the Camp. Some who came with nothing but hard and resentful thoughts to God, left at the end of the season rejoicing in Christ as their Saviour. To many young men who were already Christians, the visit to Northfield Camp has resulted in raising their standard of what a true Christian's life should be to a higher level. All who have spent two or three weeks, or more, on this happy hillside have carried back to city homes and business offices the memory of days pleasantly and profitably spent. "Camp Northfield" its friends declare "is one of the best places on earth for a young man." Thousands who have camped there in past summers, bear this testimony.

THE FOREGROUND OF CAMP NORTHFIELD.

A TENT AT CAMP NORTHFIELD.

All plans in regard to the Camp promise to be more successful than ever before. The Camp will provide tents, accommodating four persons, furnished with cots, mattresses, pillows, and looking-glasses, board in a dining-hall, erected for the use of the camp, with good, wholesome food in abundance and variety, at almost nominal cost for each person, or campers may provide their own tents and board and be as cordially welcomed. A thoroughly competent manager has charge of the Camp throughout the season. The Camp will be opened from the 30th of June to the 1st of September. During this time three conferences of great interest will be in session. "The World's Student Conference" from July 1 to 10, "The Young Women's Christian Association Conference" from July 13 to 22, and the "General Conference of Christian Workers" from July 29 to August 18. Between the Young Women's and General Conferences, and after the formal close of the latter special Bible lectures will be given by some prominent Bible teachers.

All inquiries addressed by intending campers to Mr. Moody at Northfield, will receive attention and the fullest information will be afforded.

THE LOST LEADER.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union Again Bereaved.

ANOTHER bereavement has fallen upon the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Following closely upon the death of Frances E. Willard, comes that of her friend and fellow-worker, Mrs. Mary Towne Burt, who breathed her last in New York City at midnight, April 29, at her residence, 217 West 134th street.

Mary Towne Burt was born in Cincinnati in 1842. Her father, Thomas Towne, a gentleman of English birth, had been educated for the ministry. He died when Mary was four years old, leaving herself, a brother and sister to the care of a widowed mother. Mrs. Towne was a woman of unusual spiritual gift, whose sympathy with the noble purposes of her daughter's later life was doubtless a staff of strength to Mrs. Burt. When Mary was twelve years old, her mother moved to Auburn, N. Y., where the young girl was for a great part of her time an inmate of the home of her uncle, John T. Baker—the home from which she was borne to her long rest in Fort Hill, on Wednesday, May 4. Mary Towne passed with credit from the public schools of Auburn into the Auburn Ladies' Institute, where she was for several studious years a pupil of Prof. M. L. Browne, to whom, as to her associates, she greatly endeared herself by her amiable character and intellectual qualities. In 1865, she was married to Edward Burt, son of a prominent citizen of Auburn, and soon after was confirmed in the Protestant Episcopal Church, in which communion she had been raised. She was also by training in full sympathy with the temperance cause, and when the crusade of 1873 began, she was ready to devote her energies to righting a wrong which had wrought so much anguish that women could be stirred to such fervor of resistance. Her first temperance lecture was delivered in the Opera House at Auburn, March, 1874, to a refined and cultivated audience, Prof. Browne presiding. A W. C. T. U. was organized in the town, and Mrs. Burt was its President for two years.

At the first convention of the National W. C. T. U., in Cleveland, Ohio, in 1874, when that body became formally organized, Mrs. Burt was one of the secretaries. At the second convention she became Recording Secretary, and in 1878 Corresponding Secretary, so that it may be truly said that she has been identified with the National W. C. T. U. from its inception.

In 1875, Mr. Burt and his wife moved to Brooklyn, N. Y., where Mrs. Burt immediately began to interest herself in local temperance movements. The establishment in the Bible House, New York City, of a National headquarters for the

THE LATE MRS. MARY T. BURT.

State was due to her efforts. In 1882 she became President of the W. C. T. U. of the State of New York, and held this position until her death. From 1885 to 1887 she was Superintendent of the Department of Social Purity, W. C. T. U., and was active in securing some legislation for the protection of young girls. From 1891 to 1892, she led a movement which resulted in the closing on Sundays of the New York State Exhibition at the World's Fair; and she was instrumental in the passage of a bill which prohibited the employment of barmaids in saloons. Her interest in temperance work at the State Fair Grounds in Syracuse, N. Y., was productive of much good. It was in 1876, soon after moving to New York, that she became a member of the Publishing Committee, W. C. T. U., and Our Union (which later became The Union Signal) came under her business and editorial management, and profited so greatly by her ability and devotion that its circulation was almost doubled within a year. Indeed, it is difficult in the space of this brief article to enumerate Mrs. Burt's many and effective activities.

At the time of her death she was laboring in the interest of the Woman's Temple in Chicago. Tuesday evening at 9 o'clock she wrote a letter to her publishers—her last letter.

At 6 the following morning she was unconscious, and never woke again, passing quietly, as she often said she wished to pass, from sleep into death. She had been in failing health for several years, but her death in such quick wise, was not expected. Her husband survives her, and she leaves an only son—one might add, a daughter, too, for the relation which existed between herself and her young daughter-in-law was peculiarly beautiful. There is a little grandson, too young to realize his loss, who was very dear to her.

The Protestant Episcopal services were held at her home on 134th street, Dr. Bridgeman officiating. At 2 o'clock of the same day, there was a service at Calvary M. E. Church, under the direction of the W. C. T. U. and conducted by the pastor. State officers and county presidents, as well as many prominent representatives of the National W. C. T. U. were present to do honor to the dead leader. Miss Greenwood, Superintendent of Evangelistic Work of the World's and of the National W. C. T. U., Mrs. Bond, Secretary of the World's Y. W. C. T. U., Mrs. Lord, County President of the local W. C. T. U., and Rev. Dr. C. H. Meade, Secretary of the Prohibition Party, were among the speakers, and Miss Frances Graham, Recording Secretary of the W. C. T. U., added her tribute of song to the impressive funeral music. The remains were then taken to Auburn, where they were received with honor by the Cayuga County W. C. T. U. Acting-President Ella A. Boole, of the New York W.C.T.U., has issued a call for memorial services by all local unions on June 16, and a national memorial service later.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Alleviations of War.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Psalms 27: 3, ... Though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident.

THE ring of battle-axes, and the clash of shields, and the tramp of armies, are heard all up and down the Old Testament; and you find godly soldiers like Moses, and Joshua, and Caleb, and Gideon, and scoundrelly soldiers like Sennacherib, and Shalmaneser, and Nebuchadnezzar. The High Priest would stand at the head of the army, and say: "Hear O Israel, ye approach this day unto battle against your enemies, let not your hearts faint, fear not, and do not tremble, neither be ye terrified because of them!" and then the officers would give command to the troops, saying: "What man is there that hath built a new house and hath not dedicated it? Let him go and return to his house, lest he die in the battle and another man dedicate it. And what man is he that hath planted a vineyard and hath not eaten of it? let him also go and return unto his house, lest he die in the battle and another man eat of it. And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife and hath not taken her? let him go and return unto his house, lest he die in the battle and another man take her." Great armies marched and fought. In time of Moses and Joshua all the men were soldiers. When Israel came out of Egypt they were 600,000 fighting men. Abijah commanded 400,000. Jeroboam commanded 800,000 men, of whom 500,000 were slain in one battle. Some of these wars God approved, for they were for the rescue of oppressed nations, and some of them he denounced, but in all cases it was a judgment upon both victors and vanquished. David knew just what war was when he wrote in the text: "Though war should rise against me, in this will I be confident."

David is encouraging himself in stormy times, and before approaching battles administers to himself the consolatory. So to-day my theme is the "Alleviations of War." War is organized atrocity. It is the science of assassination. It is the convocation of all horrors. It is butchery wholesale. It is murder glorified. It is death on a throne of human skeletons. It is the coffin in ascendancy. It is diabolism at a game of skulls. But war is here, and it is time now to preach on its alleviations.

First, I find an alleviation in the fact that it has consolidated the North and the South after long-continued strained relations. It is thirty-three years since our Civil War closed, and the violences are all gone and the severities have been hushed. But ever and anon, in oration, in sermon, in newspaper editorial, in magazine article, on political stump, and in congressional hall, the old sectional difference has lifted its head; and for the first time within my memory, or the memory of any one who hears or reads these words, the North and the South are one. By a marvelous providence, the family that led in opposition to our government thirty years ago, is represented at the front in this present war. Nothing else could have done the work of unification so suddenly or so completely as this conflict. At Tampa, at Chattanooga, at Richmond, and in many other places the regiments are forming, and it will be side by side, Massachusetts and Alabama, New York and Georgia, Illinois and Louisiana, Maine and South Carolina. Northern and Southern men will together unlimber the guns and rush upon the fortification and charge upon the enemy and shout the triumph. The voices of military officers who were under Sidney Johnson and Joseph Hooker will give the command on the same side. The old sectional grudges forever dead. The name of Grant on the Northern side and of Lee on the Southern side will be exchanged for the names of Grant and Lee on the same side. The veterans in Northern and Southern homes and asylums are stretching their rheumatic limbs to see whether they can again keep step in a march, and are testing their eyesight to find whether they can again look along the gun-barrel to successfully take aim and fire. The old war cry of "On to Richmond!" and "On to Washington!" has become the war cry of "On to Havana!" "On to Porto Rico!" "On to the Philippine Islands!" The two old rusty swords that in other days clashed at Murfreesboro and South Mountain and Atlanta, are now lifted to strike down Hispanic abominations.

Another alleviation of the war is the fact that it is the most unselfish war of the ages. While the commercial rights of our wronged citizens will be vindicated, that is not the chief idea of this war. It is the rescue of hundreds of thousands of people from starvation and multiform maltreatment. At least two hundred thousand graves are calling to us to come on and remember by what process their occupants died. It is the twentieth century crying out to the nineteenth: "Do you mean to pass down to us the curse with which you have been blasted? Or will you let me begin under new auspices and turn the island of desolation into an island Edenic?"

It is a war inspired by mercy, which is an attribute in man imitative of the same attribute of God. In no other age of the world could such a war have been waged. The gospel of kindness needed to be recognized throughout Christendom in order to make such a war possible. The chief reason why most of the European nations are not now banded together against us is because they dare not take the part of that behemoth of cruelty, the Spanish Government, against the crusade of mercy which our nation has started. Had it been on our part a war of conquest, a war of annexation, a war of aggrandizement, there would have been by this time enough flying squadrons coming to this country across the Atlantic to throw into panic every city on our American seaboard.

The wars of the Crusaders were only to regain an empty sepulchre: the Napoleonic wars, with their six million slaughtered men, were projected and carried out to appease the ambition of one man; of the twenty-five million slain in Jewish wars; and of the sixty million slain in wars under Julius Cæsar; of the one hundred and eighty million slain in wars with Turks and Saracens; of the fifty million slain in wars of Xerxes; of the twenty million slain in wars of Justinian, and the thirty-two million slain in the wars of Genghis Khan, not one man was sacrificed by mercy; but in this Hispanic-American war every drummer boy, or picket, or gunner, or standard-bearer, or skirmisher, or sharpshooter, or cavalryman, or artilleryman, or engineer who falls, falls in the cause of mercy, and becomes a martyr for God and his country.

Another alleviation of this war is that it is for the advancement of the sublime principle of liberty, which will yet engirdle the earth. Not only will this war free Cuba, but finally will free Spain. By what right does a dynasty like that stand, and a corrupt court dominate a people for centuries, taxing them to death, riding in gilded chariot over the necks of a beggared population? There are ten thousand boys in Spain growing up with more capacity to govern that nation than will the weak boy now in the Madrid palace ever possess. Before this conflict is over, the Spanish nation will be well on toward the time when a constitutional convention will assemble to establish a free government instead of the worn-out dynasty that now afflicts the people. The liberty of all nations, trans-Atlantic as well as cis-Atlantic, if not already established, is on the way and it cannot be stopped.

Napoleon III. thought he had successfully driven the principle out of France, when, on the second day of December, 1851, he rode down the Champs Elysees of Paris, constitutional government seemingly crushed under the hoofs of his steed. But did it stay crushed? Let the batteries on the heights above Sedan answer, and the shout of two hundred and fifty thousand conquering hosts, and the letter of surrender to Emperor William tell the story. "Sire, My Brother: Not having been able to die in the midst of my troops, it only remains for me to place my sword in your Majesty's hands. I am, your Majesty, your good brother, Napoleon. Sedan, 1 September, 1870." That monarchy having fallen, then the French Republic resumed its march.

Another alleviation is that the war opens with a great victory for the United States. It took our Government four years to get over the fiasco at Bull Run. A defeat at the start of this present war would have been disheartening to the last degree, and would have invited foreign intervention to stop the war before anything practical for God and humanity had been accomplished, and would have prolonged the strife, for which we are hoping a quick termination. In the most jubilant manner let this victory of our navy be celebrated. With the story of the exploding battleship fresh in the minds of the world, it required no ordinary courage to sail into the harbor of Manila and attack the Spanish shipping. That harbor, crowded with sunken weaponry of death; to enter it was running a risk enough to make all nations shiver. But Manila is ours, and the blow has shaken to the foundation the palaces of Madrid, and for policy's sake the doubtful nations are on our side. For Commodore Dewey and all who followed him let the whole nation utter its most resounding huzza; and more than that, let us thank the Lord of hosts for his guiding and protecting power. "Praise ye the Lord! Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord!"

Another alleviation is the fact that in this war the might is on the side of the right. Again and again have liberty and justice and suffering humanity had the odds against them. It was so when Benhadad's Syrian hosts, who were in the wrong, at Aphek, came upon the small regiments of Israel, who were in the right, the Bible putting it in one of those graphic sentences for which the book is remarkable – "The children of Israel pitched before them like two little flocks of kids, but the Syrians filled the whole country." It was so in the awful defeat of the Lord's people at Gilboa and Megiddo. It was so recently when gallant and glorious Greece was in conflict with gigantic Mohammedanism, and the navies of Europe hovering about the Bosphorus were in practical protection of the Turkish Government, fresh from the slaughter of one hundred thousand Armenians. It was so when, in 1776, the thirteen colonies, with no war shipping and a few undrilled and poorly-clad soldiers, were brought into a contest with the mightiest navy of all the earth and an army that commanded the admiration of nations. It was so when Poland was crushed. It was so when Hungary went under. It has been so during all the struggles heretofore for Cuban independence. But now it is our powerful navy against a feeble group of incompetent ships, crawling across the Atlantic to meet our flotillas, which have enough guns to send them as completely under as when the Red Sea submerged Pharaoh's army. It is so in these times, when only a few thousand Spaniards at most can reach our hemisphere, and we go out to meet them with one hundred and twenty-five thousand armed men, to be backed up speedily with five hundred thousand more if needed. We do not have to ask for any miracle, but only a fair shot at the ships headed this way, and time enough to demolish them. This is one of the cases in the world's history where might and right are shoulder to shoulder.

Another alleviation is in the fact that such an atrocity as the destruction of two hundred and sixty-six lives in Havana harbor in time of peace cannot with impunity be wrought in this age of the world's civilization. The question as to who did that infernalism is too well settled to need any further discussion. But what a small crime it was, compared with the systematic putting into their graves of hundreds of thousands of Cubans, or leaving them unburied for the buzzards to take care of! If Spain could destroy two hundred thousand men, women and children, the slaughter of two hundred and sixty-six people was not a very great undertaking. But this one last deed will res[cue] the liberation of Cuba, and the drivi[ng] Spain from this hemisphere and the e[n]throw of that government, which wil[l] drop to pieces if it does not go dow[n] der bombardment of insulted nation.

There was danger that the lon[g]-continued oppression of our neighb[or] Cuba might be continued from g[en]eration to generation without sufficien[t] test on our part and the prono[un]ced execration of people on both sides [of] the Atlantic, but that bursting volcano [of] destruction in the harbor of Havana [has] the nation and shocked the whole civ[ilized] world. All nations will learn that [such] an act cannot be repeated without [the] anathema of all Christendom. [Each] dividual criminals must be punish[ed] the public good, and we have for [the] courts of oyer and terminer, and pe[nal] tiaries, and electric chairs, and hang[ing] gallows, so governments committing crimes against God and humanity [must] be scourged and hung up for the w[orld's] indignation. When in Spanish [waters] our battleship, looking after our [com]mercial interests and intending n[o] but quietude, was hurled into dem[olition] and the men on board, without ti[me] utter one word of prayer, were d[riven] into the eternal world, the doom [of the] reigning house of Spain was prono[unced] in tones louder than the thunder [of] that night rolled out over the sea.

Another alleviation is the fact th[at we] have a God to go to in behalf of all [the] of our countrymen who may be [in] pecial exposure at the front, for we [do] admit the perils. It is no trifling [thing] for one hundred thousand young me[n] put outside of home restraints and [in] times into evil companionship. Ma[ny] the brave of the earth are not the g[reat] the earth. To be in the same tent [with] those who have no regard for G[od] home; to hear their holy religion [in] times slurred at; to be placed und[er] fluences calculated to make one rec[kless] to have no Sabbath, except such Sa[bbath] as in most encampments amounts [to] Sabbath at all; to go out from l[ife] where all sanitary laws are observe[d] surroundings where questions of l[ife] are never discussed; to invade [a] where pestilence holds possessio[n] make long marches under blistering [sun] to stand on deck and in the fields [of] fire, at the mercy of shot and shel[l] must admit that those thus exposed [are] especial care, and to the Omnipresen[t] we have a right to commend them [that] will commend them. Postal comm[unica]tion may be interrupted, and letters s[ent] from camps or homes may not ar[rive] the right destination, but howeve[r far] away our loved ones may be from u[s] however wide and deep the seas that p[ar]rate us, we may hold communicatio[n with] them via the throne of God.

A shipwrecked sailor was found flo[at]ing on a raft near the coast of Calif[ornia]. While in hospital he told his experi[ence] and said that he had a companion o[n the] same raft for some time. While [the] companion was dying of thirst he s[aid] him: "George, where are you go[ing]" and the dying sailor said: "I hope [I am] going to God." "If you do," sai[d the] rescued sailor, "will you ask him to [get] some water?" After the death o[f the] companion, the survivor said, the [rain] came in torrents, and slaked his [own] and kept him alive until he was tak[en] safety. The survivor always thou[ght] was in answer to the message he had [sent] to heaven asking for water. Thank [God] we may have direct and instantan[eous] communication with the Lord Almi[ghty] through Jesus Christ, his only beg[otten] Son, and in that faith we may secu[re the] rescue of our imperiled kindred. I[s not] that a mighty alleviation?

Until this conflict is ended let [us be] much in prayer for our beloved coun[try]. Do not let us depend upon the friend[ship] of foreign nations. Our hope [is in] God. Out of every misfortune he [has] brought this nation to a better mora[l and] financial condition, and so let us [pray] that he will lift us out of this valley [of] trouble unto a higher mountain of bless[ing].

It is a mystery that just as this co[un]try was recovering from a long season of [hard] times, so many of our industries sh[ould] now be halted: that business men [who] thought they could see their way to [pay] their debts and build up more prosper[ous] enterprises and endow their homes [with] more advantages should have to hal[t] wa until the perfidious oppressor of Cu shall be turned back. But individual and national life is always clothed with mysteries, and we may make ourselves miserable by stabbing ourselves with sharp interrogation points, and plying the everlasting questions of "Why?" and "How?" and "What?" and "When?" We we must, of course, try to be intelligent on all public affairs, it is a glorious thing to do our duty, and then fully and solemnly trust all in the hands of Him who has proved himself the friend of our country from the time when the Spanish government fitted out an expedition to discover it, to this time, when Spain would like to destroy it.

Morning, noon, and night let us commend this beloved land to the care of a gracious God. That he answers prayer, is certain, that your religion is an hallucination if he does not answer it. Pray that in reply to such supplication the farmers' boys may get home again in time to reap the harvest of next July; that our business men may return in time to prepare for a fall trade such as has never yet filled the stores and factories with customers, and that all the homes in this country now saddened by the departure of father or brother or son may months before the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays be full of joy at the arrival of those who will for the rest of their lives have stories to tell of double-quick march, hard arrow escape, and charges up the trenches, and nights set on fire with bombardment, and our flag hauled up to places from which other flags were hauled down.

Now that we have started on the work let us make that Spanish Government get out of this hemisphere. We do not want to carry more with her injustices and barbarism, and stilettos of cruelty hanging around the shores of this free land. She must not breathe her foul breath on our home: she must not again redden our seas with her butcheries. There bids fair to be a scene on the deep as disastrous to the Spanish as that which whelmed their "Armada" in 1588. Philip the Second, king of Spain, resolved on the conquest of Europe, and already in the compass of his dominions, beside Spain, were Naples and Sicily, and the Netherlands, and the East Indies, and the Canary and Molucca and Philippine Islands, and Mexico and Cuba and some of the most splendid parts of America. All the navies of the earth, except England, were at his underlings, and the Spanish king insisted that even England must bow the knee. Although the destructive strength of modern battleships was then unknown, the Spanish Armada started for the subjugation of England with about 140 great ships with 2,600 guns, 4,000 cavalry horses, and 22,000 men. The battle ships were provisioned with 147,000 casks of wine, and six months of provisions. The commanders and officers of these war-vessels were Dukes and Marquises and noblemen. A storm such as had never swept the sea of England or aroused the ocean, swooped upon that Spanish Armada. Most of the ships soon went down under the sea, while others were driven helpless along to be splintered on the coasts of England, Ireland, Scotland and Norway. Another Spanish Armada is crossing the Atlantic, and we are ready to meet her. The same God who destroyed the Armada in 1588 reigns in 1898. May he in his might, either through human arm or the element, defeat their squadron, and give victory to the old flag of Admiral Farragut and David Porter!

Now what the world most wants is Christ. He is coming to take possession of all the seas, all homes, all nations; but the world blocks the wheels of his chariot. I would like to see this century, which is now almost wound up, find its peroration in the mighty overthrow of tyrannies and the mighty building up of liberty and peace. Almost all the centuries have ended with some stupendous event that transformed nations and changed the map of the world. It was so at the close of the fourteenth century; it was so at the close of the fifteenth century; it was so at the close of the sixteenth century; it was so at the close of the seventeenth century: it was so at the close of the eighteenth century. May it be more gloriously so at the close of the nineteenth century! "Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting, and let the whole earth be filled with his glory." Amen.

avail themselves of this extraordinary opportunity to minister to the spiritual need of the brave boys who have entered their country's service, the proprietor of this journal has already arranged to send help. Immense quantities of the paper have been forwarded for distribution. Mr. Gilson Willets, our correspondent in camp (see his letters on page 435 of this issue), writes: "The arrival of the papers caused consternation in our mite of a post-office, and eager anticipation among the men. There were eight huge bags yawning full. Our postmaster is wearing his look of amazement still. He had never seen so much mail matter in his life before. Every copy is welcome. Every man says a pleasant 'thank you,' and begins at once reading items of interest to his comrades. There are enough to put one in every tent. It is pleasant to see how pleased the men are, that some one besides their own families takes an interest in them. It is gratifying to see the respect the men show to the paper on account of its characteristic name. I was distributing some copies this morning when one of the men uttered an oath. I handed him a paper at the moment, and he instantly said with the greatest courtesy: 'Excuse me; I am sorry.' Send more copies, not back numbers, but right up to date. Every one will be read through and through and passed from hand to hand."

EIGHTH INFANTRY ENCAMPMENT AT CHICKAMAUGA PARK.

MORNING MUSIC IN CHICKAMAUGA PARK.

Chaplain Bateman of the Sixteenth Infantry, makes a similar request. "Send me," he writes, "a large roll of the latest issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I have no money to pay for them, but I want all you can spare. Tell your readers I have no use here for back numbers or any old papers. I want new ones fresh from the press. I have secured a place for meetings which will accommodate a thousand men with sittings at the base of the famous Snodgrass Hill where so many brave men fell in our late war. The Chattanooga ministers are coming to my help nobly." From another correspondent we learn that the Chattanooga ministers not only went themselves but took with them the choirs of their respective churches. Services were held all over the field last Sunday. The officers attended with the men. At one of the services General Brooke and his entire staff were present and sat on the tree stumps, attentive listeners throughout.

The urgent need for more of this kind of service has become more pressing day by day, and is appealing to the leaders of the Christian church throughout the country. Mr. D. L. Moody is especially earnest in the matter. He had a conference with the proprietor of this journal last week in which he promised his fullest and most ardent co-operation in the plans of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to make the most of the opportunity. As a result of the conference it was decided, in view of the well-known liberality of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which both Mr. Moody and Dr. Klopsch were convinced would be unstinted in such a cause, to send down to the camps some earnest evangelists specially qualified for the work. Immediately Mr. Moody secured the services of Dr. A. C. Dixon, of Brooklyn, and Mr. J. H. Burke, the famous singer, who have already started for Tampa. Since then the services of Gen. O. O. Howard, eminent alike in war and in Gospel service, have been obtained, and he, too, has started for camp. Other evangelists will probably go, if the necessary funds for tents, etc., can be secured. Among them will be Major Whittle, of army fame, and Dr. L. W. Munhall, who carried the colors of his regiment in twenty-seven of the bloodiest battles of our war, both of them admirably qualified for preaching to the young soldiers. Our readers know by past experience that under CHRISTIAN HERALD administration not a dollar will be spent unnecessarily, but it is inevitable that at least a thousand dollars a month will be needed to do the work efficiently. We are sure that the expenses already incurred will be endorsed by our readers and that funds to extend the work will be supplied.

THE COMPANY'S COOK.

It is proposed, also, if funds can be secured, to send to the camps some of the most useful volumes of Mr. Moody's Colportage Library. These well-known paper-covered books would be ideal works for reading in camp. The Rev. John G. Anderson, Pastor of the First Presbyterian Church of Tampa, Fla., makes a special appeal for these books. In a letter to Mr. Moody, after describing the situation at the camp at Tampa and the character of the men there, he writes: "I make an appeal on their behalf. Could not a fund be raised, sufficient to send us ten thousand copies of such numbers of the Colportage Library as 'All of Grace,' 'The Way to God,' 'Life Warfare and Victory,' 'The Overcoming Life,' 'Naaman the Syrian,' and 'Weighed and Wanting.' I wish you could send us five thousand of these at once. The men now in camp have opportunity to read the books, and I believe great good would be accomplished by them. They are a fine, noble set of men, and it makes me sad to look at them and think of their probable fate when they meet the enemy. As Jeremiah wrote: 'Weep sore for him that goeth away; for he shall return no more, nor see his native country.' We cannot tell how many of these there will be, but we want none to fall unprepared. Who can tell how many might be saved by the reading of such books as I have named." A similar earnest appeal comes from Chaplain Orville J. Nave, of Fort McPherson, Ga., who begs for more copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for distribution in hospitals and among regiments in the camps. Another letter just to hand from Chaplain C. G. Wright, of the United States ship Franklin, says: "I am distributing to-day, among the Maryland and Michigan Reserves, the thirteen packages of CHRISTIAN HERALDS you sent me. They seize every copy eagerly. I want to bespeak earnestly a repetition of the favor."

This is the field. The demand is urgent. Evangelists have already gone. More are waiting to go. The books and papers can be sent. Will our readers, who have never yet failed to respond to an appeal for aid in work for Christ, authorize us to go forward with this effort and provide the means for carrying it on? Subscriptions for this purpose should be clearly marked, "For Gospel Work in the Army and Navy," and should be sent without delay. They will be acknowledged in this journal, and will be applied to meeting the unavoidable expenses of the Gospel services. In view of the active measures for prosecuting the war now contemplated by the Government, it is important that the work should be done quickly lest the opportunity be lost.

Our Fleets and Armies Alert.

READY TO INVADE CUBA, WHEN SPAIN'S CAPE VERDE FLEET HAS BEEN FOUGHT.

Activity of Our Forces on Land and Sea — Pitiful Condition of the Reconcentrados — Our Plan of Cuban Invasion—Sixty-one Thousand Regulars and Volunteers to Land in Cuba—Commodore Dewey's Humane Course after the Great Victory at Manila.

OUR war with Spain makes rapid progress, and there are indications that the crisis of the campaign, by land and sea, is not far off. Admiral Sampson's fleet is believed to be in Porto Rican waters, ready to engage the Spanish Cape Verde squadron, which is momentarily expected in that locality. It is believed to be a part of our naval plan to take the port of San Juan, Porto Rico, and thus deprive the Spanish ships of a coaling station and a refuge. No movement may be made on Havana until this menacing squadron has been met and conquered. Meanwhile, large bodies of troops have been transported from our central camp at Chickamauga Park to the Florida coast, where they are waiting the signal to embark on the fleet of troopships, which is to bear them to Cuba. Then will follow the combined movement against Havana by sea and land, in which the insurgent army in Cuba will play a prominent part.

For six days the country waited with intense anxiety for news from Commodore Dewey, the commander of our victorious fleet at Manila, in the Philippines. Immediately after the engagement with the Spanish fleet, the Commodore had directed the cable to be cut, with the object of preventing the Spaniards from transmitting false reports about the battle. On Saturday, May 7, communication was restored, and the first official cablegram was received from Commodore Dewey. It excited as deep a sensation as did the news of the battle itself, for it brought the astonishing intelligence that the splendid victory had been won without the loss of a man on the American ships, and that our squadron was unharmed. A few of the men have sustained trifling injuries during the engagement. On the other side the results produced by the American guns were appalling. On the Spanish flagship, the Reina Maria Christina, alone, 150 men were killed, including the captain. In the whole Spanish fleet 300 men perished, and 400 were wounded. Some estimates place the Spanish losses on fleet and forts together at a very much higher figure. The unerring marksmanship of the American gunners, together with the superb tactics employed by Commodore Dewey during the battle, were the principal factors in winning the day. Seven Spanish cruisers, four gunboats and two transports were either exploded and burned or sunk, and one transport, several tugboats and small steamers were captured. The forts at Cavite and Corregidor were silenced, and their defences destroyed. The battle began at 5.30 a.m. Sunday, and the final surrender took place at 12.50 p.m. Manila itself was not bombarded, but it is absolutely at the mercy of our fleet.

Throughout the whole expedition our officers and men behaved with the utmost gallantry and with praiseworthy humanity, as became the citizens of a Christian nation. Some 250 wounded Spanish sailors fell into Commodore Dewey's hands, and great was their astonishment when, instead of being condemned to execution immediately, they were treated kindly and tenderly by the surgeons of the American ships. The Spanish population on shore were equally in dread of bombardment and of an attack by the native insurgents who had threatened a massacre, as soon as the American warships arrived, but Commodore Dewey assured them of protection, and sternly forbade any insurgent attack.

At the time the official despatch was sent our fleet was lying safely at anchor in Manila bay. No landing parties had been sent ashore, the Commodore preferring to await the arrival of reinforcements from home, rather than to deplete his available strength by detaching a landing force. Ten thousand troops will be sent from San Francisco on swift transports, together with large quantities of coal, provisions and ammunition, although he has cabled that he has still an abundance of supplies on hand.

ADMIRAL MONTOJO.
Defeated by Dewey at Manila, and killed by the insurgents.

By the President's order, Secretary Long cabled congratulations to Commodore Dewey. He has been appointed Rear-Admiral, and Congress has officially thanked him and will vote him a sword, and medals to the officers of his command. Naval experts regard his victory at Manila as, in many respects, the most remarkable in the annals of naval warfare, and the greatest in modern times. Its immediate effect has been to give to the United States a high rank among the naval powers of the world.

Spain's third fleet, now at Cadiz, is hardly expected to be serviceable in the present war, unless hostilities should be prolonged. None of the vessels will be in readiness to go into commission for many weeks to come. It is reported that everything in the Spanish dockyards is in a deplorable condition of unreadiness and disorganization, and that the officers and men of the navy have been greatly disheartened by the reverse at Manila, in which they see a foreshadowing of the fate of their other fleets.

Madrid is greatly disturbed by apprehensions of revolution, and a dynastic overthrow is not improbable. In the provinces the agitation is even more pronounced, and serious riots have occurred at many points. It is said that the Queen Regent and young King Alfonso have made preparations for flight, should the situation become so grave as to compel them to leave Spain, and that quarters are ready for them in Vienna. Premier Sagasta and his associates in the Cabinet are striving to keep alive the expiring fires of patriotism in the hearts of the nation, and are hoping against hope for some opportunity to redeem the faded glories of Spain, after which, it is said, "the government will accept intervention, to honorably end the war."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S special correspondent writes from Key West:

From Cuba comes most heartrending news as to the reconcentrados. In the excitement attending the war, but little attention seems to be paid to these unhappy victims of Weyler's policy of extermination. Sufficient is known, however, from trustworthy sources on the island to leave no doubt that they are perishing more rapidly than before. Even if all Cuba were thrown open for relief work at this moment, there are fifty thousand reconcentrados who are beyond the aid of food or medicine. They are already doomed, whether Cuba is freed or not. They are nearly all women and children, and continued misery has placed them beyond reach of hope. Fifty thousand are certain to perish under the most favorable circumstances. It remains to be seen whether the vastly larger number who might be saved will perish also. Only prompt action will save their lives. How will that action be taken?

A Cuban showed me a letter, this evening, which he had just received from another in Havana. In this letter it was stated that the Spaniards regarded war as a release from all obligations to the reconcentrados, and the latter viewed with despair the absence of their American friends. Many of them had regained health and love of life under the kind treatment accorded to them through the generosity of the American people, but even these will hardly survive, if aid is withdrawn from them for any long period. My Cuban informant added that from what he had learned, the liberality of the American people would be heavily taxed for some time after the war to supply the poor peasants, robbed of their all, with the means to restore their homes, and cultivate their lands. Agricultural animals and agricultural implements would be indispensable, if the reconcentrados who should survive were to be made independent and self-supporting as they had been before. Nearly all the agricultural animals have been appropriated for food, either by Spanish insurgents, and none were left for plowing or other farm work in the fields.

"There is a good deal of misery in Key West among the refugees from Cuba, many of whom can find no employment and are pining away in abject misery, while all about them is the bustle and excitement of war. Agents of the Cuban Relief Committee have distributed rice and other food to these destitute people, much of the fish having been captured in boats taken from the Spaniards.

"It is the common opinion here that the Americans will meet with but little substantial resistance in Cuba. The Spaniards are believed to have no heart, and the active negotiations now going on at Key West and Tampa between the United States authorities and emissaries from Maximo Gomez indicate that the insurgents will soon develop new life and energy, and get into a condition resembling that of a regularly organized military force. The United States evidently intend to make considerable use of the Cubans in the present war."

As this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to press, intelligence comes from Madrid of the resignation of the Cabinet. Martial law has been proclaimed in many Spanish cities, and riots were increasing in frequency. A serious famine threatens the kingdom. Anarchy reigns at Manila, and the insurgent rioters have killed many Spaniards, among them Admiral Montojo, the Spanish commander of the defeated fleet. Admiral Dewey at last accounts was unable to control the rioters or to protect the residents. A frightful massacre was feared.

UR new conquest in Asia, the Philippine islands, captured by Commodore Dewey without the loss of a man or a ship, is one of much greater value and importance than is generally supposed. As the American people become better acquainted with the character and possibilities of this group of islands, which have now come under the dominion of the Stars and Stripes, they will recognize the importance of the acquisition to our already vast dominions.

Next to Cuba, the Philippines constituted Spain's most valuable colony. When a comparison of extent and resources are made, it is difficult to see why they are not of equal or superior value to Cuba. The area is more than twice that of Cuba, being 114,326 square miles to Cuba's 43,220. Their population, according to the most reliable figures obtainable for 1896, was 10,426,000 to Cuba's 1,631,687 of that date. Settlement of Cuba was begun in 1511; of the Philippines in 1565.

ATIVES OF THE INTERIOR.

A SCENE ON THE PASIG RIVER, MANILA.

Spain herself has never thoroughly known this East Indian property of hers. There are native tribes in unexplored interiors, who have always governed themselves independently of Spain.

The natural resources of the islands are very varied and their commercial importance should be great. The soil produces almost everything from the coffee, sugar-cane, cotton and rice of the tropics, to the potatoes, wheat and maize of northern latitudes.

Next to hemp, sugar is the chief product, and its preparation for market is an important industry. The commission merchants of Manila are usually Chinese, and they transact most of the business between planters and exporters.

Manila hemp is the best known to commerce. The provident cocoa-palm, the bread-fruit tree, and the mastic and useful bamboo furnish the natives ready food and drink, and supply materials for some dignified industries. They manufacture some elegant silk and linen fabrics, and are to some extent carriage-makers and ship-builders. They have, however, a dislike for work.

The religion is Roman Catholic, where it is not savage paganism. Education is entirely in the hands of the Roman Church. In the city of Manila, with its 330,000 inhabitants, a Jesuit college is the only educational institution. Outside of the cities, few people can read and write. The population is one of mixed races. The Chinese have been industrious and provident, and the rich mercantile and banking classes are largely made up of Chinese full-blood or half-caste. The bulk of the population is of the Malay race. The homes of the rich half-castes who live in the mercantile quarter of Manila are very luxurious, but for the most part, squalor abounds. The full-blood Spaniard is decidedly in the minority, it is said there are only 5,000 in the group of islands, of which the island of Luzon is the largest.

Should we decide to retain these islands, it will be our task to colonize and Christianize their population, and to give them good government and just laws. As a field for missionary effort they will attract the attention of Christians throughout our own land, and we may soon expect to see agencies at work that will redeem the Philippines from the moral degradation in which they have existed under the rule of Spain. It is probable that a Military Governor will be appointed, and that a sufficient force of American troops will soon reach the islands to enable us to hold our new conquest, and restore order to its oppressed and distracted provinces, now in a state of anarchy.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

S. S. Lesson for May 29. Matt. 26 : 17-30. Golden Text, I. Cor. 11 : 26.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

AS often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show (R. V., proclaim), the Lord's death till he come." The Lord's supper is indissolubly connected with his death and with his coming again. Commemorative of his death, anticipative of his coming. A death is not often ushered in by a feast, but this Passover of passovers ushered in the death of the Passover Lamb, "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1 : 29). The great supper of Luke 14: 16-24, is in no way a type of the Lord's supper. Only chosen disciples, only the twelve apostles, not even the seventy, were called, although it may be that a Judas was there. No guests were bidden; it was the custom of the disciples to sit down with their Master to eat with him; it was the family gathering of his own.

Guests were bidden, and even constrained to come to the supper of Luke 14; the streets and lanes of the city were searched for them, and the highways and hedges; the poor, the maimed, the lame and the blind were brought in, and all found a welcome. And such a welcome the Son of man gives to "that which was lost." Those of us whose sins have impoverished us and who are blinded, lame, maimed in spirit, soul and body, are welcomed by the great Physician, the soul and body Healer; for the Son of man is come to seek and to save that which was lost. The only fitness for such provision as he gives is to be in want, and that ensures a welcome. This is the sinner's supper, but not the Lord's supper.

"Till he come." The Gospel supper of Luke 14 may have a meaning after the Lord is come, but the marriage feast will be fulfilled when Rev. 19: 7-9 is fulfilled, and the Lord's Supper will have served its purpose when the membership of his body are all perfected into one (John 17: 23), one perfect man grown up into the measure of the stature of Christ to be united with him as members, with the Head, as the Bride with the Bridegroom forever.

It was at an intense moment that the Lord kept the Passover with his disciples, and instituted the Lord's Supper in remembrance of him. Judas, who was sitting among the twelve, had already sold his Lord for thirty pieces of silver, the price of a slave. The death of Jesus had been determined on by the chief priests; the remarkable prophecy of Caiaphas, that one man should "die for the nation" (John 11: 50) had been uttered. More than once Jesus had said that his hour was come, and the disciples might have known that his repeated predictions of his coming sufferings were about to be fulfilled, but even now they understood not.

On the first day of unleavened bread they came to him with the inquiry, "Where wilt thou that we make ready for thee to eat the Passover?" (Matt. 26: 17, R. V.). His answer was remarkable: "Go into the city to such a man and say unto him, the Master saith, my time is at hand; I keep the Passover at thy house with my disciples." "My time is at hand." How was it they did not understand? Alas, they were not free from the miserable strife as to which of them should be the greatest (Luke 22 : 24), and this unworthy preoccupation of their thoughts prevented them from being alive to the awful crisis which approached. And now when the Lord may be at hand, shall any of us be engrossed with such contemptible considerations as our own greatness, and what we consider due to us from others?

The disciples did as he had told them, and made ready the Passover. Little did they think as they slew the lamb, sprinkled the lintel and the door posts with the blood, and roasted the flesh of the lamb, that their Lord himself would, ere twenty-four hours had elapsed, be himself sacrificed for them, and for the lost world. And yet he had told them! When they were sitting at meat, Jesus was troubled in the Spirit, and testified, saying, "Verily I say unto you, that one of you shall betray me" (John 13 : 21, R. V.). No wonder "they looked one at another, doubting of whom he spake." Then the question arose on all sides, "Is it I?"

"AND THEY BEGAN TO BE SORROWFUL AND TO SAY UNTO HIM, ONE BY ONE, 'LORD, IS IT I?'"

At last the answer came. "He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish, the same shall betray me. The Son of Man goeth even as it is written of him; but woe unto the man through whom the Son of Man is betrayed; good were it for that man if he had not been born." Solemn, awful words! The Scripture must be fulfilled, but he who by his own wilful sin deliberately plays the part of the betrayer must take upon himself the terrible responsibility. The Apostle John relates that Jesus gave him a sop, and after this Satan entered into him. It was not the first time (John 6 : 70-71). "Now he went out to do his evil deed, and it was night" (John 13 : 27-30), a night which knew no morning for the miserable betrayer.

Then Jesus took bread and blessed it and gave it to the disciples, and said: "Take, eat; this is my body." That body was about like a seed, to fall into the ground and die, that it might bring forth much fruit" (John 12 : 24). But it was as a living body that he would impart himself to them and to us. The cross was in his heart already. His will and affection, reputation, rights, and all that as a sinless man he was entitled to, he had already died to, and he would in the figure of that bread make them bone of his bone and flesh of his flesh, character of his character, wholly one with him, spirit of his spirit.

"And he took a cup and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying: 'Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new covenant which is shed for many unto the remission of sins.'" The nature is in the flesh. There is one flesh of men, and another of beasts, and another of birds (I. Cor. 15 : 30). So there is in man proud flesh, cowardly flesh, covetous flesh, etc., but Christ's was self-renouncing flesh, truly newness of life. The life is in the blood. Oh, it was new life—a life poured out, the life of renounced life which he had to give, and which we have to receive as we really enter into the Lord's Supper.

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

PATHETIC in many aspects was the simple repast of this momentous evening. Luke tells us (22 : 15), how Jesus had set his heart on eating the Passover with his disciples before he died. It was to the Jew the kind of celebration that Christmas is to us, except that there was a more urgent reason, in the divine command, for every Jew wheresoever he might be, to go to Jerusalem, if it was possible, that he might unite with his family in the celebration. Jesus knew that the end was near, but he hoped that nothing might occur to prevent his joining in this solemn, simple festival, which would practically close his relations with his disciples. As they gathered in the room, lent for the occasion by some friend, the disciples apparently had no idea of the feelings in the mind of Christ. There would otherwise have been no dispute as to precedence, and it would not have been left to Christ to perform the foot-washing, customary before a meal. But they saw that their Master was troubled, and at last he spoke. One of them, he said, was about to give him up to the enemy. Apparently Judas was in consternation when he found that Christ knew his secret, and seems to have hastily quitted the room before the conclusion of the repast. There is some doubt about this, but it is probable. One formality remained to be observed. In every Jewish home then, and to this day, one of the children, addressing the head of the household, is taught to ask: "What is the meaning of this meal?" which gives the father an opportunity to narrate the events of the Passover and the deliverance from Egypt (Exodus 12). Doubtless the usual question was put on this occasion by one of the disciples. Instead of the usual reply, Christ gave the ceremony a new meaning. He made it a memorial of himself. It was a simple, touching request, such as a loving father, or husband, might make on his deathbed. Then the ceremonies of the day being concluded with the usual hymn, probably Psalm 115 or 116, they went out together once more for a walk in the garden of Gethsemane.

He sat down with the twelve. Evidently to the usual Passover meal, which was being eaten at the same time in every house in Jerusalem. It was a memorial meal that meal eaten in haste in Egypt over fifteen hundred years before. The Jew never felt himself so much a Jew on these occasions when he thus celebrated the birth of his nation. Some such desire was probably in the mind of Christ when the feast approached its close. He would take the simplest part of the repast, the bread and the wine, and make the partaking of them a memorial of himself, so that his followers might feel their union with him and with each other when they partook of them in remembrance. He gives them a reason, which must have recalled to their minds what he had said in one of his former talks, about his being the bread that came down from heaven. Like the bread and wine that nourish their bodies, he was the nourishment of their souls. With a strange perversity some Christians have insisted on reading something occult into this simple ceremony, but there is no reasonable ground for it in the accounts we have of the institution. A number of boys and girls, cousins from several households, were in a country house one Christmas having a merry time with sports of many kinds. But that night an accident happened and a baby, the pet of the whole family, died. Ever afterward when the cousins were in the same home in Christmas, they agreed together to visit that baby's grave. It was an observance which they agreed upon and never forgotten. Some twelve years after the baby's death, one of the cousins, grown to womanhood, lay on her dying bed. She said to her parents: "I wish you would ask my cousins when they pay their usual visit to baby's grave next Christmas, to remember me. I have been with them every year, and sometimes seemed as if we were nearer to each other at that time. I do not wish to be forgotten; ask them to think of me, and Christ's personal memories has never been forgotten though often misunderstood. It may be observed without the aid of priest or clergyman. Whenever Christians gather as Christians, around the table in love and fellowship.

He that dippeth his hand with me. Dr. Tristram, the Oriental traveler, writes: "Often as I have been entertained in houses or under tents, the customs never varied. A great circular dish, generally wooden, and shallow with a rim two or three inches deep, was filled with wheat, rice or vegetables, over which was spread the lamb, or poultry that had been roasted or boiled for our entertainment, and upon this poured the brown gravy, and then the whole sprinkled with capsicum, savory and bitter herbs and sometimes dried apricots. Into the dish or gravy the guests simultaneously plunged morsel of the meat which they have torn off with the thumb and two forefingers of the right hand, or it may be, gathered the gravy with morsels of barley cake." Rev. William Ewing, in his article in the Sunday School Times, adds another significant detail: His host asks him what no host does in Europe or America to show special regard for a guest, and proceeds to show him the Eastern custom. "We do this," he said, detaching a piece of roast mutton with his fingers, and putting it to me, which I took in my fingers from his and ate. The host asked, "Now do you know what I have done?" I replied, "Perfectly well; you have given me a piece of roast meat and I have eaten it." The host answered, "That is not it. By that act I have pledged you every drop of my blood, that while you are in my territory, no evil shall come to you. For that space we are brothers." It was therefore a peculiarly villainous thing that Judas did to dip with Christ in the dish and then go out from that sacred presence and sell his Master to his enemies.

I' AN EGYPTIAN PRISON.

SAD scenes are witnessed in these days in the prisons of Egypt. If the stones in the walls could tell all that has passed behind them in the long years since they were built, the story would be n f cruelty, starvation, and heart-rendisery. The rulers of Egypt, ancient modern, have never been characterby humanity, or pity for the prisonrs But a few years ago, an era of reset in under British rule. An shman named Crookshank was aped Director General of prisons, and mediately commenced a new order nagement. The dingy places were leed and put in sanitary condition; wardens were appointed; and fresh ul made for the government of the pris-s. The renovation was wonderful in gptian eyes, and the prisoners blessed better days on which their lot had lh. Now, however, there has been a uen halt in the work of reform. The ccnts of the government have to be sutitted to a board of audit, and the bo l's decisions, if adverse to the officials, mabe reviewed in the law courts. On eoard, as well as in the courts, the old sysm of bi-partisan control still survives. Reesentatives of France retain the se, they held in the old days, before the Frch Government repudiated responsil for Egypt. These men take pleasren embarrassing the Government, by sowing items of expenditure which hav been charged to the Egyptian accot. Among the items recently disallowed wa ne for the food of the men confined in the risons. It has consequently been nec sary to revert to the former system, wh n Mr. Crookshank abolished. This wa o make the prisoners dependent on the friends for food. The result has bee an increase of suffering for the prisne and great hardships for their famie. The wives of the prisoners are admi d to the prison-yard, where they come wit their poor scraps of food, which the pass through the bars. A few of the bring clothing, too, but the majority of e men have no change of garments, an he only way remaining for such prisne to be cleanly is to take off their co ing and pass it through the bars to the omen, who wash it in the yard, dry it a l pass it back to the men. It shows ho far-reaching human actions are, when the ealousy and petty spite of statesmen in ris involve hunger and hardship for the ife and children of an obscure felon in airo. These high and mighty men nnot know, and may not care if they do now, but they cannot escape the respsibility.

I ou sayest, Behold we knew it not; doth not he t pondereth the heart consider it? And he tha eepeth thy soul, doth not he know it? And sna not he render to every man according to his wor? (Prov. 24: 12).

How Her Hair turned White.

An Oakland, Cal., journal reporting a case in the courts recently, says that one of the witnesses, a woman whose hair was white as snow, was questioned about her age. She proved to be under thirty, though she looked fully sixty. She explained the anomaly by relating a thrilling experience. She said that a short time before, she went to live at Dutch Flat. The miners there were engaged in a fierce dispute with a corporation, and when she settled among them, they thought she was a spy. She was ordered to leave, but did not obey. One night, according to her story, the miners appeared at her cottage, compelled her to dress and accompany them. They took her one mile from the town on a high trestle, where they tied her with ropes and straps to the ties and track, and left her to die. The train was almost due. The miners left their victim alone to die, and went away assured that she would be mangled beneath the wheels of the train. Providentially, the train was late, and after lying there what appeared to her hours, a section-hand crossing the trestle, saw her and released her. She was barely free from her bonds, when the train thundered past. Her terror had been so extreme that her hair turned white, though she had not a grey hair previous to that night. Many instances are on record of the hair turning white under violent emotion, and we can easily understand how terrible those moments must have been during which she waited for the coming of the wheels which would crush out her life. Yet the fate that threatened her was only death, which she knew was inevitable in some shape, at some time. It is singular that the fear of death should be so extreme as to turn the hair white, while the prospect of eternal death, which is infinitely more appalling, should disturb so few people, or lead them to accept the offer of escape from it.

Be not afraid of them that kill the body and after that have nothing more they can do. But I will forewarn you whom ye shall fear: fear him who after he hath killed hath power to cast into hell: yea I say unto you fear him (Luke 12: 4, 5).

A Barn in the Way.

The highway between two towns in Maine was blocked recently for two days owing to a religious difference. The town of Presque Isle, says a dispatch to a New York paper, has built a new townhall, and, having no use for the old one, sold it to a contractor in the neighboring town of Blaine. He determined to use it as a barn, and as there was still hard snow on the hillside in that northern latitude, he put the old building on huge runners to haul it intact to his farm. He is one of a few men in that locality who, though not Jews, observe Saturday as the Sabbath: so when he engaged his men and teams for the hauling, he stipulated that no work should be done on Saturdays. They worked all day Thursday and Friday and brought the old building down the hill and into a narrow road which is halfway up the ascent to the town of Blaine. It was in a bad position to leave, as it completely blocked the road, but the owner was firm. As it was market-day at Presque Isle and many carts were going to and fro with produce, there was a great deal of anger aroused. The venders had to unload their carts and carry the contents past the town-hall. On Sunday morning the contractor was there early prepared to superintend the completion of the work, but there were no men nor teams. He went in search of them and found the men getting ready to go to church. He protested, but on reading over the contract it was found that there was no provision requiring them to work on Sunday. They were merely prohibited from working on Saturday. The contractor pleaded and argued, but the men said it was against their conscience to work on Sunday and they would not do it. Accordingly the building remained in position another day. Meanwhile there arose threats of action for blocking the highway, and in fear of these, the contractor and a few of his friends procured axes and broke the building up and carried it piecemeal to his farm. The haulers now threaten him with action for breach of contract. It is not the first time that a religious dispute has been the cause of obstruction. The contractor is simply meeting the usual fate that has befallen kings and mighty statesmen who have tried to compel other people to concur with them in their religious ideas. He seems to have forgotten the Apostle's injunction:

Let no man therefore judge you in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days (Col. 2: 16.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Any reader wishing to send THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to a friend or relative in the army, can do so by sending to this office twenty-five cents for a three months' subscription or one dollar for a year. The address will be changed as often as may be desired.

The Baptist Missionary Union deficit for the yearending March 12, was $71,561.

An English journal states that the Baptist Missionary Society which was nearly $50,000 in arrears a few weeks ago, has now $1,000 in the treasury, the deficit having been met by the self-denial of its members.

A resident of Brussels has placed a building at the disposal of the local Y. M. C. A. It is by the side of the university, in the heart of the city, and when renovated and adapted will afford excellent facilities for the work.

The oldest letter in the world is a love letter. It is three thousand five hundred years old, and is written in baked clay. The Egyptologists of the British Museum, where it is preserved, have deciphered it and find it is an offer of marriage to an Egyptian princess.

We regret to learn that people are still being swindled by persons claiming to be authorized agents of this journal. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD sends out no canvassing agents. If our readers will warn their friends against intrusting subscriptions to strangers, they may save them from being victimized.

The fifteenth annual meeting of the International Missionary Union is to be held at Clifton Springs Sanitarium the second week in June. All foreign missionaries retired or in active service will receive free entertainment on application to Mrs. C. C. Thayer, at Clifton Springs, N. Y., if word is sent promptly.

The Second Presbyterian Church of Pittsburg, Pa., is rejoicing in a period of unusual progress. Since the beginning of the year 111 have been added to the membership on profession of faith, besides those who have joined by letter. This is the more remarkable because there has been no special effort by evangelist or other means except the regular ministry.

To an inquirer who asked Dr. Charles Berry, chairman of the English Congregational Union, why he was a total abstainer, he replied: "My reason was that as a minister I could not indulge, however moderately, in a luxury, the very sight of which involves such terrible temptation to many of my fellow-men, and whose abuse has led, and is leading, to unspeakable degradation and suffering."

At the recent anniversary of the American Sunday School Union, it was stated that during the past year its missionaries had succeeded in organizing 1,522 new schools, in which the number of teachers and scholars aggregated 58,138. They also put in circulation Bibles and Testaments to the number of 11,342. In keeping track of schools previously organized, it was found that last year eighty of them had developed into churches.

A Western speaker at a meeting on the question of war, suggested that it might furnish us with a higher grade of national heroes than the grabbing millionaires whom it was becoming the custom to worship. He expressed his pleasure at the prospect, inasmuch as Lincoln, Grant and Sherman were more to his taste than such men as certain others whose names he mentioned, whose one heroic quality was the acquisition of wealth.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey is back again in New York. He had engagements in London extending through the month of May, including meetings of the Ragged School Union, the British and Foreign Bible Society, the London City Mission, the Presbyterian Foreign Missionary Society and other famous organizations, but in view of the critical times at home and the uncertainty as to the needs that might arise for Gospel work here, he cancelled all engagements and returned.

The Mission World thus summarizes the progress of Christianity among the Jews: "There are in the Christian Church over a hundred thousand proselytes from Judaism, and in the Church of England two hundred and fifty of the clergy are either Jews or the sons of Jews. As each Lord's Day comes round the Gospel is proclaimed in more than six hundred pulpits of Europe by Jewish lips. Over three hundred of the ministers of Christ in Great Britain are stated to be Hebrew Christians."

Rev. F. B. Meyer wishes to repudiate the interview recently published by a Western journal. He says: "I have always spoken in the warmest terms of the kindness shown me by the people on your side. I should be grossly ungrateful, if I did not do so. All I said, on the occasion referred to was, that it seemed to me a great mistake for Christian men to abstain from municipal and political life, because of the evil result that must accrue to society, when their salt and light are withdrawn. I also spoke in high appreciation of some things, such as the humane treatment of prisoners, in which the United States is far ahead of England."

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

THE BLESSINGS OF HOME TIES.

None can Take Another's Place — Only God can fill Vacant Lives—The Grandparent's Place in Child-life.

WE are inclined to feel very sorry for the little boy or girl who has never known the blessing of grand-parents. To be grandparentless is orphanage in a certain sense. God has so made life that all its relationships are essential to its completeness. Husband and wife, father and mother, grandfather and grandmother, brother and sister, friend and acquaintance, all fill their own mission of beautifying and enlarging life, and none can take the other's place. If we realized this, how much jealousy and heart-burning we might be saved! No one can take another's place! When a dear one has passed behind the veil of death, only God can fill the vacancy. Thus, it sometimes comes that lives bereft of every human tie are filled to the brim with the love of God, and so, take the whole world into sweet relationship.

In our illustration, the married daughter, with her husband and little boy, have come to visit the old home again. We see who is the hero of the occasion—to whom all render first honors, in utter forgetfulness of personal claims. Mamma has her hat on and from her appearance, has not even been embraced, while grandpapa and his little grandson are holding quite a confab and taking their time about making each other's acquaintance. Even auntie, mamma's dear sister, forgets mamma—forgets her knitting, too, to the delight of pussy and the envy of Fido, whose attentions to needle and ball pussy has anticipated. There is a well-worn Bible on the table at grandpa's side, and his good, kind face shows that our little boy is fortunate in possessing such an influence on his life. The record of his mother's birth, and marriage, of his own birth, is in that Bible. His name is written in honorable places, though the home is a poor and humble one. He will never forget all his life long that greeting from grandpa, and may the old clock on the wall never tick out for him a moment when he will remember it with less than pride. One figure is missing. Where is grandmamma? It we could look through the window we might see the churchyard where she lies.

GRANDPAPA'S GREETING TO THE GUEST OF HONOR.

A Daughter of the Revolution.

There is growing in Georgetown, a palm which is an offshoot of one that came over in the famous cargo of tea that was dumped into Boston harbor in 1775. The seed had on board three small sago palms of which we make happier disposition. One went to Mount Vernon, another to the home of Governor Morris of Morrisania; and the third found a place of honor in the Pratt gardens near Philadelphia. In 1813, an offshoot of the last traveled in a lady's carriage from Philadelphia to Georgetown (a four days' journey), at the bottom of a basket where it had several little plants for company. Its present owner is Martha Washington's granddaughter, Mrs. Eleanora W. Kennon, widow of Comptroller Beverly Kennon. The lady who brought the palm from Philadelphia to Georgetown, was Mrs. Kennon's mother, Mrs. Thomas Peter born Martha Custis. The palm stands in the conservatory in winter, on the lawn in summer, is almost a century old, and has never known any other habitation than Tudor Place, as the ancestral residence of its possessor is called.

Companionship for Children.

An only child is naturally at a disadvantage in his home, because he is an only child, says H. Clay Trumbull, in Hints on Child-Training. He lacks the lessons which playmates there would give him; the impulses and inspirations which he would receive from their fellowship; the demands on his better nature, and the calls on his self-control and self-denial, which would come from their requirements. Parents who have only one child ought to see to it that the lack in this regard is, in a measure, supplied by the companionships of children from other homes. Even where there are half a dozen or more children in one family, there is still a need of outside companions for each child, of the same age and wants of that child. Because a child's companionships are so influential, it is the more important that they be closely watched and carefully guided by the child's parents. While doing this it is only right to remember the rights of other children, and in no way can one's own child be better served than by training him to a full sense of his responsibility as regards the influence he exerts over his playmates.

Russian Dishes.

They have some very curious dishes in Russia. Before dinner they have an odd sort of course which they call "zakuska," and which seems to American appetites a very formidable feast in itself. The things they eat at this course (or whatever it is) are radishes, olives and smoked salmon, peculiar pickles, and odoriferous cheeses as a sort of by play to smoked goose and uncooked flesh. Raw pig, cut in very small cubes, highly seasoned and served on toast, is one of the "zakuska" delicacies. The fresh caviare spread thick on toast and sprinkled with chopped onion and lemon, is fine for those who like it. The fish literally burns one's tongue with the fires of cayenne seasoning. With these solids the Russians drink the popular Russian tea: and "listofka," which is made by steeping young currant leaves in fermenting spirits. After the hot, stinging food and drinks of the "zakuska," comes the first course of the regular dinner. A soup, "ice-cold and delicious," called "okroshka," and which is sometimes unfortunately (as we regret to say are also the dishes of our own country) rendered pernicious by a dash of wine.

Her Doll and the Queen.

The Queen of England, like other great people, does not by any means see all the letters that come to her. It would take all her time to read them—besides many very absurd letters are addressed to her. Her secretaries weed out her correspondence and bring under her notice such letters as they think she would care to see. Here is a letter, which though it certainly belongs to the class of absurd ones, is so very charming that it was brought under the observation of Her Majesty:

"Dear Queen: I let my doll fall into a hole in the mountain, and as I know that the other side of the world belongs to you, I wish you would send some one there to find my doll."

The little girl who wrote it knew that the Queen owned Australia; some one mischievously suggested that her doll had fallen through to that country, and the little girl went to the Queen with her trouble. It is hardly necessary to add that a beautiful new doll came to her from the Queen, who expressed regret that she could not literally fulfil the little maid's request.

Lesson of the Birds.

Here's a good story for little folks—and big ones, too:

The basket of blocks was on the ground, and three rather cross little faces looked down at it. "It's too heavy for me," said Jimmy. "Well, you're big as I am, cause we're twins," said Nellie. "I won't carry it!" said the little cousin with a pout. Mamma looked from her open window, and saw the trouble. "One day I saw a picture of three little birds," she said. "They wanted a long stick carried somewhere, but it was too large for any one of them to carry. What do you think they did?" "We don't know," said the twins. "They all took hold of it together," said mamma, "and then they could fly with it." The children laughed and looked at each other; then they took hold of the basket together and found it was easy to carry. "The way to do all hard things in this world," said mamma, "is for every one to help a little."

Heaven Near.

They whose hearts are whole and strong,
Loving holiness,
Living clean from soil of wrong,
Wearing truth's white dress
They unto no far-off height
Wearily need climb;
Heaven to them is close in sight
From these shores of time.

LUCY LARCOM.

OPEN THE WINDOWS.

OPEN the windows, summer is coming.
Daintiest robings mantle the trees;
Hear the birds singing, hear the bees humming;
Open the windows, let in the breeze.

Open the windows, let in the gladness,
Sunshine will cheer the home and the heart,
Health is in sunlight, life in the breezes,
Darkness is death, O, bid it depart.

Open the windows, open them God-ward,
Then shall be banished sorrow and sin,
Blessings untold are ready to enter,
Open the windows, let them come in.

His First Suit of Clothes.

CAN the dear fathers, mothers and children who read this page, conceive of a little child who had lived in its several years of existence had on at one time an entire suit of clothes? Miss Helen Collins, for several years matron of our Children's Home at Nyack-on-the-Hudson, believes there are many such; many missionaries, of large experience, say the same thing. That we have good grounds for their conclusion the following incident told in this office a few days ago by Miss Collins will serve to show:

"One day last summer a poor little fellow came to us in a surprisingly ragged and untidy condition—and it is hard to surprise us in such matters. If the parents cannot or do not keep them up in some measure, the missionary who brings them to the Bible House makes an effort in this direction. See how this little one had been picked up and brought on what we may suppose to be been his normal condition—for I don't see how it could have been worse. I never saw so dirty and ragged little creature; his one wretched undergarment was held on him by a pin which caught together over his shoulder, it looked as if it had never been in a washerwoman's hands, just as his poor body looked as if it had never known a bath. We took him and his older brother—who was in somewhat better condition—into the bath-room, scrubbed them and put them into entirely new suits. The elder accepted it all with joyful demonstrations, almost shouting with delight over his own and his brother's transformation. The little one took it all very quietly — so quietly that we were puzzled. He was evidently happy, for he rubbed his hands with almost reverent approval over his new garments. An entire new suit of clothes—underwear, trousers, blouse, jacket, socks, shoes and even a hat. Such a transformation as it was! And what a pretty little fellow as he stood there, neat and trim, face and hands clean and curls brushed. But he never said a word. When we took him out and carried him down stairs, we noticed that he was quite pale—and then he fainted! Think of it! The wonder and joy of having on a whole new suit of clothes had nearly killed him. Our doctor took him in hand, and told us that his life was really in danger from the shock of great and sudden joy! Since that time we have been careful to work such transformations more gradually. It takes so little to make a child happy, and the home, Mont-Lawn, is so blessed a work that I wish that all readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD could see for themselves the health, happiness and moral improvement which their kindness prothers on the little children of the poor.

Preparations have already begun for putting our Children's Home at Mont-Lawn in order for the coming summer, and the familiar place will soon look its loveliest, and the hill-sides will echo with the voices of the merry children. Our friends who have been so greatly interested in this charity during the past four summers, will have opportunity of again sharing with us the pleasure of this excellent work whose sole aim is to help the neglected children of the tenements.

LETTERS FROM THE CAMP.

How the Soldiers Welcome "The Christian Herald" at Chickamauga Park—A Chat with the Army Chaplains.

OUR special correspondent at the National Camp at Chickamauga Park, Ga., has sent us several interesting letters, with photographs. Several of the latter appear on other pages of this issue.

First Letter.

He writes as follows:

ON THE FIELD,
CAMP GEORGE H. THOMAS,
CHICKAMAUGA.

Chickamauga Park, in Georgia, is thirteen miles from Chattanooga, Tenn. There are eighteen camps spread over twelve square miles, some of the regiments being miles apart. The whole has been christened 'Camp George H. Thomas,' in honor of the victor of Chickamauga in Sept., 1863.

Major-Gen. Brooke, commanding this section of the army of invasion, has his headquarters on a hill in the centre of the park. He will review the troops daily from a captive balloon and direct field manœuvres. The signal corps has connected all the camps by telegraph and telephone with Gen. Brooke's headquarters. In the balloon with the General will be Adjutant-Gen. Sheridan and a telegraph operator, the latter to transmit messages by wire to headquarters and thence to the division commanders.

The spiritual welfare of the 12,000 men now in camp is in the hands of Chaplain Prioleau, of the Ninth Cavalry, and Chaplain Steward, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, both colored.

'Four troopers in my regiment,' said Chaplain Prioleau, 'are studying theology under my direction. They are all pursuing their studies earnestly, each bent upon becoming an army chaplain. There are two, as you know, colored regiments in the army; the Ninth and Tenth Cavalry, and the Twenty fourth and Twenty-fifth Infantry, and all are here. We have a Christian Endeavor society with over a thousand members of my race. The society meets in the field every Sunday after divine service. Last Sunday we had an attendance of 1,500 men (both colored and white) at our 3 o'clock service, when I preached. All remained for the Christian Endeavor meeting which followed. The band played hymns, and a thousand voices made the hills echo with praise.'

'I have talked with some two hundred of the men in the different camps, and all assured me that while they have no dread of Spanish bullets, they do dread the fever. "We swore to serve our country," they say, "and we will keep our promise. Christian soldiers have no need to fear death. None of us think of the danger. We want this matter over as soon as possible; we prefer battle to suspense."'

'All the men camped here are able to read and write. This shows that the army schools at the posts throughout the country are well attended. All through the camps men may be seen writing letters. Bales of hay, saddles, or mother earth serve as tables. The post-office on the battle field has suddenly become a station styled "first-class," and 8,000 letters are mailed daily. As there are 12,000 men on the field, the sale of postage stamps shows that two-thirds of the men in camp write a letter home every day. And as for reading—all the men complain that there is not reading matter enough. Every newspaper, every printed page brought into camp, is passed around, read and reread till it is worn out. Hundreds of troopers every day swarm around THE CHRISTIAN HERALD headquarters, asking for just one more Army Chaplain number. The supply of this issue for distribution was exhausted in less than two hours.

GILSON WILLETS."

Second Letter.

ON THE FIELD, CHICKAMAUGA, GA.

'I want to tend stock or fight.' This is now a famous saying among the troops at Chickamauga. It originated on the lips of a lad of twelve years. At Memphis he jumped aboard the troop train which was carrying the Seventh Infantry to Chickamauga. The colonel told him he must get off. He refused, said he had run away from home, had torn his clothes, was therefore afraid to return to his papa, and would 'tend stock or fight.' The colonel relented and allowed the boy to ride with the regiment to Chickamauga. He is now in camp. Out of pieces of old clothes, the men have made him a brand new uniform; and how proudly he wears it! They have given him a drum, he has learned the calls and is now, as far as a lad of twelve can be, an army drummer-boy of the old-fashioned sort.

"Another boy, aged seventeen, boarded the First Cavalry train at Knoxville, and wanted to enlist then and there. Upon examination he proved not strong enough, physically. The surgeon said 'No.' The boy insisted—came on with the men anyway. He is now here at Chickamauga, wearing a uniform too large for him, cap over his ears, but perfectly happy in the belief that he is an enlisted man. He carries water for the cook of the First, waits on the adjutant, and is general 'stiker' (man of all work) for Company G.

"Sunday sermons are now held not only in one camp, but all over the field. This has been accomplished through the efforts of Post-Chaplain Bateman, who is attached to the Sixteenth Infantry. He went to Chattanooga and secured the co-operation of several pastors of the city churches. The pastors not only gave their own presence and words of good cheer, but brought along the choirs of their respective churches. The men attending these services come in companies of a hundred or more, making, in the aggregate, congregations larger than could be packed in all the churches of Chattanooga. Even the officers and their wives—for many officers have quartered their wives in farm-houses surrounding the field—attend service, not only as an example to the men, but of their own accord. General Brooke and his entire staff sat on tree stumps last Sunday and listened to the sermon preached by Chaplain Steward of the Twenty-fifth Infantry.

"We have here a number of interesting instances of the patriotism of young America, of the desire of the youth of the country to fight for Uncle Sam. Sons of four of the officers of the Seventh Infantry, on the day war was declared, enlisted in the ranks. They are treated just the same as their comrades, salute their respective fathers just as respectfully as the other men, and eat with their mess-mates the same bacon and fried potatoes, beans and stewed tomatoes; eat these things, monotonous but wholesome, from the same tin dishes, and drink the same coffee from the same tin cup. These young men, ranging in age from 18 to 21, are Colonel Benham's son, Major Corliss' son, Captain Parker's son and Chaplain Swift's son. Colonel Arnold, of the First Cavalry, also has a son in the rank and file.

"A sham battle was fought, during which a certain trooper proved himself a hero. A picket line was thrown around the entire camp, thus guarding the three square miles within which the troops were massed. Skirmish lines advanced, fell flat on their stomachs, fired at an unseen enemy, then arose, advanced and again fell to the ground. The light batteries boomed and boomed. Regiments of infantry stood ready to back them up. Whole regiments of cavalry, with carbines, sabres and pistols, charged imaginary foes. There was firing, but no blood-shedding. There was fighting without carnage, all the tricks and strategies of battle without conflict, an engagement without a foe, a game of solitaire on a gigantic scale. In this smoke enshrouded field, amid the volleys, the rattle of rifles, the booming of the batteries, the tooting of the bugles, the shouts of officers and the yells of men, a child toddled, chewing her thumb. She was a little colored girl, a pickaninny. As she emerged from the woods and advanced across the open toward the masses of cavalry, the troopers heard the order 'Charge.'

"Instantly four thousand men gave rein and four thousand horses rushed forward. Then they saw the child coming toward them across the open. Oh, horrors! Four thousand cavalrymen were charging full speed upon a child. Those in front tried to stop. They could not. The troopers behind, not understanding, urged them forward. In a moment the hoofs of four thousand horses would trample out that little life. Those in the front rank shouted warning to those in the ranks rushing upon them. Was there no way to prevent this dreadful murder? Yes! Out of the front ranks a trooper suddenly shot forward, dashed on, reached the child, caught her up, and carrying her in his arms, again dashed forward just in time to avoid the shock of the onrushing troopers. Heroic trooper. Who was he? He belonged to the Seventh Cavalry, a colored regiment. This hero was black as licorice.

"General Brooke, who had seen the heroic action, complimented him.

Tartarlithine in Rheumatism.

DR. M. L. SMAIL, OLCOTT, VT., writes: "Your Tartarlithine has proved a wonderful weapon for rheumatism. I have used a very great quantity of it in the last three or four months and I have never seen anything like it. I had one case who had tried all of the alkaline lithiates, and everything else. He has had rheumatism all his life, and nothing completely stopped all the manifestations of the disease like Tartarlithine, which did completely, with one bottle.

I have another old man, who travels much on the road peddling, who has been lame with rheumatism for five years, and one bottle cured all lameness, and he says he has not felt as well in five years as now. These are only the two worst cases of many that I have tried it on."

HELPFUL ANECDOTES.

BY REV. LOUIS ALBERT BANKS, D.D.

THE LIFE PLANT.

THERE is a strange plant in Jamaica called the life-plant, because it is almost impossible to kill it or any portion of it. When a leaf it cut off, and hung up by a string, instead of shrivelling up and dying like other leaves, it sends out white, thread-like roots, gathers moisture from the air, and begins to grow new leaves.

Christianity is the life-plant of the moral and spiritual world. Toss the Bible or a fragment of it anywhere, and it will take root in the affections and hopes of mankind and send out its tendrils of life. In the heart of Africa, or among the snows of the Arctic, it has the same vitality which no climate or heathenism has the power to kill.

Must Face His Record.

A strange thing comes to light in the aftermath of the Maine disaster. Some years ago a young man residing in Omaha, became wild and wayward, and fell into bad company. He went from worse to worse, until he was convicted of burglary and sentenced to fifteen years in the penitentiary.

Before being taken to the penitentiary he escaped from the Omaha jail, made his way to Boston, enlisted in the United States Navy under an assumed name, and was assigned to the Maine some months ago. He was among the few survivors of the explosion which destroyed the great battleship, escaping with his life, though severely wounded. A letter from him to his parents told of his experience in the wreck, and application has been made to the Governor of Nebraska for a pardon. No man can bury his sin. Somewhere a man must face his record. Until it is pardoned it stands forever against him. Nothing is truer than that the man who covers his sins will not prosper, and that only through confession and forgiveness is there safety and peace.

"Be Ye Also Ready."

The recent war talk has brought to light a great many things of interest connected with earlier wars. When France declared war in 1870, it is said that Von Moltke was awakened at night and told of the fact.

He said, coolly, to the official who aroused him: "Go to pigeon-hole No ——, in my safe, take a paper from it, and telegraph as there directed to the different troops of the empire." He then turned over and went to sleep, and awoke at his accustomed hour in the morning. Everyone else in Berlin was very much excited, but Von Moltke took his morning walk as usual, and a friend who met him said: "General you seem to be taking it very easy. Aren't you afraid of the situation? I should think you would be very busy." "Ah," replied Von Moltke, "all my work for this time has been done long beforehand, and everything that can be done now has been done." We ought to live in that attitude toward God and man. Our Saviour asks us to be always ready for any emergency that may come. Nothing could be more unwise than to put off something which we want to change before we die. If there is anything that must be done before then, we should do it at once. The consciousness that we are ready for everything, will cause us to do our work more bravely, and will give us peace as to the future.

The Magnetism of a Great Personality.

William Wetmore Story was fond of telling an interesting tale of James Russel Lowell and himself:

It was when they were young men, and they were very angry with Daniel Webster for staying in Tyler's cabinet, and, as he was to speak in Faneuil Hall one evening, they determined to go in from the Harvard Law School and hoot at him, and show him that he had incurred their displeasure. The house was packed with people, and the young men felt sure that the crowd would hoot with them, young as they were. But they reckoned without their host. Mr Story says: "Mr Webster beautifully dressed, stepped forward. His great eyes looked, as I shall always think, straight at me. I pulled off my hat; James pulled off his. We both became as cold as ice, and as respectful as Indian coolies. I saw James turn pale, he said I was livid. And when the great orator began that most beautiful exordium, our scorn turned to deepest admiration, from abject contempt to belief and approbation." Christianity encourages the power of individual personality. It is the very essence of the Christian teaching that a man's greatness does not consist in what he has, nor in his position, but in what he is. Men poor in purse, and of no physical authority, are often splendid in influence, because of the subtle power of character which men feel in their presence. Paul said his bodily presence was insignificant, but men feel him yet, after all these centuries.

The New R. & G. Corset

Our new number 397 has attained a greater popularity than any other number we ever put out.

It is a corset that fits more forms than any other. It has the correct corset shape for the average woman. It is modelled on sensible lines—long where it should be long—short where shortness means comfort.

More than all else—it is comfortable—and it fits.

It fits always—because it is an R. & G. It will not give or stretch.

Every R. & G. Corset is tested and stretched, damp, over a steam-heated iron form. If the cutter or stitcher varied a sixteenth of an inch from his pattern, the corset will not fit the form, and it is never honored with an R. & G. trade-mark. It is not an R. & G. Corset until it is trade-marked. It is not trade-marked unless it is perfect.

The size of an R. & G. is always the same. You don't have to "break it in." From the first it is as comfortable as an old corset.

Number 397 is a dollar corset. Most dealers have it, but if you don't find it easily, send us your dollar and we'll see that you get it.

OUR FREE BOOKLET

We have a book that ought to interest every woman who wears a corset, no matter what corset she wears. It is called "Corset Facts," and we will send it FREE, on request, to every woman who wants to know how to choose the right corset for her figure.

HIS MOTHER'S HYMN.

A Thrilling Story of Rescue Work Among the "Lost Boys of the Bowery."

OUR readers, to whose generosity the Bowery Mission owes in such a large measure its usefulness, will be encouraged in their good work by the following instance—one of many—of lost ones reclaimed. We give it as it fell from the lips of Mrs. Bird, feeling that in our retelling it, it would lose much of its vivid and pathetic interest:

Sunday morning at the mission the janitor approached me and took from his pocket the photograph of a young man—almost a youth—with "a very fine lady" had given him the day before. The lady was the boy's aunt. The boy, she told the janitor, had run away from his home in the country last fall, had not been heard from since, and his parents were distracted with grief and anxiety. The aunt was in deep sorrow. Her home was in New York City, on one of the handsome up-town residence streets. Her nephew had spent much of his life with her, and she was like a fond mother to him. She had been trying to trace him as best she could, and had at last come to the Bowery Mission, hoping that its workers might aid her in her loving quest. The janitor, studying the portrait, said, "Madam I think I have seen him. I am sure that this gentleman is in the habit of coming to our meetings." The lady, her eyes full of tears, said, "The next time he comes, send for me."

Half hour later that Sabbath morning the janitor came to the desk and whispered: "Mrs. Bird, the gentleman whose picture I showed you is in the room." I pointed to a vacant seat in front of me. "Bring him there," I said, "and I will take him under my care until his friends comes." During the four hours' service he sat there, trying to sing now and then, but for the most part looking profoundly sad and downcast. Meantime, the janitor dispatched a messenger boy to a splendid home in upper Fifth Avenue, New York, where a gentle woman sat grieving for her wayward boy. Word was returned that she would come down to the mission as quickly as possible. Just before the close of service the janitor approached and said:

"Mrs. Bird, the lady is here now and wants to speak to you." I went to the door and found her there, weeping bitterly, an officer, citizen's dress beside her. "Our poor boy," she said, "where can I find him, Mrs. Bird? Is he really here?" I tried to comfort her and help her compose herself, telling her that I believed her nephew was with us. "I have come to claim him," she said. "I can adopt him. I am not a poor woman." She turned to the janitor and thanked him for his kindness to her boy, handing him a ten-dollar bill which he declined to take). "We are so heavy-hearted," she said to me. "He left home last November, and we have not heard from him since. It would just break your heart to read his parent's letters. Can I see him now?" I said: "Services have just closed. The boys, after taking their coffee, pass out. You will be served last, and when he has finished his cup, we will speak with him." Still she could not realize that her boy was found, and kept asking, "Do you think it is really he?" "Come with me now," I said, "and sit in the room behind him while he is taking his coffee." When we were in our places, I touched him, saying, "Turn around and see. There is a friend sitting behind you." He turned his head, gave a great start, and the lad fell on his shoulder, sobbing, "How could you leave us? How could you leave us?" He seemed to seem indifferent, but failed.

She then passed a letter to him, saying it was from his father, and "this will break your heart." While he was reading, she said to him, "You will come home with me?" He lifted his eyes and gave her such a look!—I cannot describe it; you would have to see it to understand such looks as we workers in the Bowery see from reclaimed lost ones. It said: "Is there any love left for me—can you take me back?" and something more which words cannot picture—unutterable remorse, voiceless anguish and repentance, and something which often means a life forever set to noble purpose. He arose and they passed out together. The janitor, whose close observation and large experience in such matters make him often a true prophet, said, "He'll do better than ever. He is but a lad. I've had talks with him before. He drew half of his bank-account and went off to have his 'fling;' and he lost, or was fleeced of all his money, and has had trouble enough to satisfy him. He was ashamed to go home, and was going down hill as fast as he could. He heard us singing one of his mother's hymns in here one night and drifted in—instead of to the river. 'Twas his mother's hymn saved that boy."

The Duke and the Chaplain.

A British army chaplain asked the Duke of Wellington, so the story goes, if he thought it were worth while to preach the Gospel to the Hindus. The great general asked: "What are your marching orders?" The chaplain answered: "'Go ye into the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.'" "Then follow your marching orders," said the man of discipline. "Your duty is to obey."

The Soldiers' Bible.

By the especial command of Cromwell, says The U. S. Soldier and Christian Sentinel, every man in his army carried a "Soldiers' Pocket Bible" with him, wearing it generally near his heart. It was a single sheet, of sixteen pages, containing selections from Scripture, in eighteen chapters, each with an appropriate heading; as e.g.: "A soldier must not do wickedly; a soldier must pray before he goes to fight." It is certainly remarkable that the success of Cromwell's army commenced immediately after the publication of "The Pocket Bible," and, after they began to use it, they never lost a single battle.

Have You Asthma in Any Form?

Medical Science at last reports a positive cure for asthma in every form in the wonderful Kola Plant, a new botanical discovery found on the Congo River, West Africa. Its cures are really marvelous. Rev. J. L. Combs, of Martinsburg, W. Va., writes that it cured him of Asthma of fifty years standing, and Hon. L. G. Clute, of Greeley, Iowa, testifies that for three years he had to sleep propped up in a chair, being unable to lie down night or day from Asthma. The Kola Plant cured him at once. To make the matter sure, these and hundreds of other cures are sworn to before a notary public. To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, the Kola Importing Co., No. 64 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who suffers from any form of Asthma. All they ask in return is that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbor about it. Send your name and address on a postal card, and they will send you a large case by mail free. It costs you nothing, and you should surely try it.

HOPE.

OUR journey leads across
A wide and dangerous sea
With rolling billows tossed
Like waves on Galilee.

CHORUS.

Hope cheers us on though waves roll high,
We're anchored safe beyond the sky.

Though threat'ning waves assail
Our bark on every side,
The voyage cannot fail
For Jesus rules the tide.

CHORUS.

Hope cheers us on though waves roll high,
We're anchored safe beyond the sky.

Our ship still onward goes
Though dark is heaven's dome,
Yet every gale that blows
But wafts us nearer home.

CHORUS.

Hope cheers us on though waves roll high,
We're anchored safe beyond the sky.

BURDEN-BEARERS.

Our Brother's Burden and Our Own.
Gal. 6: 1-5.

At first sight it seems like a paradox to declare that "each man shall bear his own burden," and yet that Christians are "to bear one another's burdens;" but a very slight experience in helpful effort makes it clear. Many a wife whose burden is heavy, with a lazy, dissipated husband and the cares of the household, and possibly of sick children, has found her burden lightened by the visit of some kind Christian neighbor, who perhaps can do no more than express her sympathy and utter a few words of encouragement. The burden is just the same as before, but it is easier to bear when there has been friendly companionship for a time. "Have you not worries enough of your own?" asked a querulous wife of her husband, who, knowing that another business man was in difficulties, went to him to help him with his advice and his financial skill. "Yes," was the reply, "but they qualify me to help others, and somehow my own worries seem less after I have wrestled with some belonging to my friend." It is quite true that each man must bear his own burden. No one can relieve him of that duty: but how do other burden-bearers act toward him? Some jostle him heedlessly as they pass, increasing his difficulty; some go by on the other side, not caring whether he sinks under his burden; some look on him with interest, but say, "It is no business of mine." The one man who, like the Good Samaritan, gives him the help he needs even at some inconvenience and expense to himself, is the one man who has the spirit of Christ. One effect, and that not the least important, that true religion produces, is to make men sympathetic and helpful one to another.

ROMANISM IN AMERICA.

True Antidotes and Christian Methods of Warfare in the Presence of a Real Danger.

Efforts to arouse public attention to the growing power of the Roman Catholic Church in America have been made with renewed vigor of late years. There can be no doubt, in view of the facts which have been published, that there is need of vigilance. Romanism is aggressive and exuberant. It works diligently and insidiously to gain control of education and of our public institutions. Its policy is directed by men entirely devoted to their cause, very astute and well organized for effective work. By no means, an enemy to be despised, is the Roman Catholic Church, and as such it must be regarded as an enemy. Because its influence is opposed to free institutions and its effects, as we see them wherever they gain dominance are fatal to social progress. There is, however, reason to doubt whether the policy hitherto pursued by the opponents of Romanism is the wisest that could have been adopted. The wholesale denunciation, the reckless charges brought against the church, and the animosity deliberately provoked, are not a Christian mode of warfare. Where there is an open Bible, where the Gospel is preached in its purity, and where children are trained to use their reasoning powers, there is little danger of Romanism making serious progress. It thrives best where there is ignorance and superstition, and where men are willing to avoid the trouble of thinking for themselves, and to take their religion on trust from the priests. The best way of resisting the advance of Romanism is not in arousing the passions and prejudices of the people, but in disseminating the pure Gospel and inculcating the principles of Christianity.

A Peculiar Incident.

An incident occurred at the W. C. T. U. State convention at Cortland, New York, early in October, that marks an era of progress, and is interesting inasmuch as it indicates the trend of thought of the present day. It was proposed that Postum Cereal Coffee be served at meals for delegates, in place of ordinary coffee. Some of the ladies stated that they had tried Postum once and did not fancy it. However it was served at the first general meal, and the ladies were very emphatic in their terms of approval. Some one thereupon put the question, whether the convention be served with ordinary coffee or with Postum, and the vote was for Postum without one dissenting voice, the ladies flocking about the cook to ascertain how to make such a delicious beverage on which many of them had failed in their first attempts. The answer was simple; boil 15 minutes after boiling commences, while for church suppers, conventions, etc., enclose the product in two cheese-cloth bags in coffee boiler, and boil one hour. The famous Postum Coffee thus made furnishes a hot beverag full of nourishment for nerves and brain and delicious to the taste. People are slowly awakening to the fact that the daily drugging with narcotics in the shape of coffee and tobacco accounts for the many ills of head, nerves, heart, and stomach. The action of the New York State convention indicates their intelligence on the subject in hand.

Beware of harmful substitutes and adulterated coffee sold for Cereal Coffee under same fetching name. Genuine package have red seals thereon and the words "It makes red blood."

SPIRITUAL GROWTH.

Stability and Power to be Gained by Union with Christ and by Personal Experience.
Col. 2: 7-15; Eph. 4: 11-16.

An important result of Christian growth is presented by the Apostle in this letter to the Ephesians. He wants his readers to grow, that they may be strong. We know that in the natural world there are growths which tend to weakness. Again, there is growth which runs to foliage instead of to fruit. But in the spiritual growth which the Apostle advises to see, there is a knitting together, an increase of stability which resists opposing forces. At no time in the history of the church has there been the need that is now, for this kind of strength. It is folly to ignore the fact that there is in many a church a widespread decay of faith. There are those who keep up their membership and attend to their religious duties, who do not believe as their fathers believed, and are not sure where they stand. The result is precisely that which the Apostle deprecates. They are "tossed to and fro, carried about with every wind of doctrine, by the sleight of men." It is a dreary, uncomfortable condition, due mainly to a defect in Christian life. No one can fall into it who has incorporated his principles in his life. The man who knows by personal experience that these things are true cannot be convinced by any process of reasoning that they are false. Even when pressed by sophistries which he has not the skill to disprove, he exclaims, as did the man whose eyes Christ opened, "One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see." When a man makes a personal test of Christ's power, when he feels in his own nature the change of disposition, of desire and of motive that takes place in the regenerated soul, when he can look back at what he was, and comparing himself with what he is can humbly rejoice in having become more Christlike—he is not likely to be carried away by the sleight of men. It is this strength of character that the apostle desires his readers to attain and tells them that they can attain it by growing into Christ "in all things."

"HOW BEAUTIFUL TO BE WITH GOD!"

(Last words of Frances E. Willard.)

Joy is earth o'er, its trials past?
Am I to be released at last
From toil and pain? Is heaven this,
Which in my soul creates such bliss?
"How beautiful to be with God!"

This body, where I now reside,
Will soon by death be laid aside,
And I shall rise by power divine,
Whence, with heaven's effulgence shine.
"How beautiful to be with God!"

'Tis joy to walk with him thro' life;
To feel his presence in the strife;
To know his hand was guiding me;
My helmsman o'er life's troublous sea.
"How beautiful to be with God!"

Is this dying? I've no dread,
For Jesus waits me just ahead;
A radiant glory lights the way
And turns all darkness into day.
"How beautiful to be with God!"

Where no parting ever be
From those we love? Shall these eyes see
Faces, many years before,
Greeted for yon' peaceful shore?
"How beautiful to be with God!"

The loved of earth, how hard to leave
Behind, who sorrow, pine and grieve.
Yet when shall dawn heaven's morning bright,
We all shall see with undimmed sight.
"How beautiful to be with God!"

Frazer—A Wonderful Shrub.—Cures Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

New evidence shows that Alkavis, the new botanical product of the Kava-Kava Shrub, is indeed a true specific cure for diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disorders of the Kidneys and urinary organs. A remarkable case is that of Rev. A. Darling, of North Constantia, N. Y., as told in New York World of recent date. He was cured by Alkavis, after, as he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was preparing to die. Similar testimony of extraordinary cure of Kidney and bladder diseases of long standing comes from many other sufferers, and 1200 hospital cures have been recorded in 30 days. Up to this time the Church Kidney Cure Co., No. 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of Alkavis, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to any reader of The Christian Herald who is a sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send the names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prove its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you entirely free.

HAIR ON THE FACE, NECK, ARMS OR ANY PART OF THE PERSON QUICKLY DISSOLVED AND REMOVED WITH THE NEW SOLUTION

MODENE

AND THE GROWTH FOREVER DESTROYED WITHOUT THE SLIGHTEST INJURY OR DISCOLORATION OF THE MOST DELICATE SKIN.

Discovered by Accident.—In COMPOUNDING, an incomplete mixture was accidentally spilled on the back of the hand, and on washing afterward it was discovered that the hair was completely removed. We purchased the new discovery and named it MODENE. It is perfectly pure, free from all injurious substances, and so simple any one can use it. It acts mildly but surely, and you will be surprised and delighted with the results. Apply for a few minutes and the hair disappears as if by magic. It has no resemblance whatever to any other preparation ever used for a like purpose, and no scientific discovery ever attained such wonderful results. IT CAN NOT FAIL. If the growth be light, one application will remove it permanently; the heavy growth such as the beard or hair on moles may require two or more applications before all the roots are destroyed, although all hair will be removed at each application, and without slightest injury or unpleasant feeling when applied or ever afterward. MODENE SUPERCEDES ELECTROLYSIS.

Recommended by all who have tested its merits—Used by people of refinement.

Gentlemen who do not appreciate nature's gift of a beard, will find a priceless boon in Modene, which does away with shaving. It dissolves and destroys the life principle of the hair, thereby rendering its future growth an utter impossibility, and is guaranteed to be as harmless as water to the skin. Young persons who find an embarrassing growth of hair coming, should use Modene to destroy its growth. Modene sent by mail, in safety mailing cases, postage paid, (securely sealed from observation) on receipt of price, $1.00 per bottle. Send money by letter, with your full address written plainly. Correspondence sacredly private. Postage stamps received the same as cash. (ALWAYS MENTION YOUR COUNTY AND THIS PAPER.) Cut this advertisement out.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Subscriber, Altus, Ark. Does God exercise control over our temporal affairs? Is it any use to ask him for happiness? Should we not accept whatever comes and look to the next world for happiness?

Yes we believe God does direct our temporal affairs and we are encouraged to go to him in prayer about them (See Matt. 6: 11; Phil. 4: 6, etc.). We doubt whether it is of any use to ask him for happiness. It might be better to ask him to help you to be good and useful. Happiness comes in that way more surely than when it is sought specifically. You need not wait for the next world; there is a great deal of happiness in this. It comes from a cheerful, contented disposition; from doing your duty and trying to make other people happy.

J. B., Farrington, N. H. What did Christ mean by enjoining on his followers that they should hate their kindred (Luke 14: 26)? It seems inconsistent with his gentle loving character.

Read the whole chapter and also the parallel account in Matthew 10. You will see what Christ meant. A motley crowd followed him, curious to see miracles worked and multitudes fed. It seemed to them a very light matter to identify themselves with the popular young Jewish leader. He wished them to see how serious and radical a matter it was. Some of them would have to choose between him and all they held dear in the world. He wanted them to understand the cost of following him and not to begin unless they were prepared to pay the penalty, whatever it might be. Christ used the same word (Matt. 6: 24) in showing the impossibility of serving two masters. In this case, as in the other, the hate consisted in nothing more than in treating their claims as of no weight in comparison with those of Christ.

D. V. H., Newark, N. J. Will you kindly tell me in Text Matt-ers the difference between a torpedo-boat, a torpedo-boat destroyer, a torpedo-boat tender, and a torpedo-gunboat?

A torpedo-boat is a craft constructed for the sole purpose of discharging torpedoes at the enemy; a torpedo-boat destroyer is much larger and carries quick firing guns of a calibre sufficiently heavy to riddle a torpedo-boat; a torpedo-boat tender is a vessel spread out before and astern of a war-ship, and a torpedo gunboat is simply a gunboat equipped with one or more torpedo tubes.

Subscriber, New Hartford, Conn. What is the meaning of the word displacement as related to war vessels?

The quantity of water displaced by the weight of the ship, the weight of the displaced liquid being equal to that of the ship.

Kedarah G. H., Gloucester Mass. 1. Who hoisted the first Yankee flag? When and where? 2. Why is England called "John Bull"?

1. The first American flag was hoisted on Jan. 1, 1776. It then introduced the stripes of the present flag, but retained the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew on a blue ground in the corner. When the flag was changed to the stars and stripes, it was hoisted for the first time over the U. S. House of Representatives, on April 14, 1818. 2. "John Bull," is said to be derived from Arbuthnot's satire, "John Bull," published in 1712.

1. 100-ton Krupp gun, we believe. 2. His father was Julius Y. Dewey, of Montpelier, Vt., President of the National Life Insurance Co. His mother was a daughter of Governor Goodwin. 3 and 4. No means of answering.

E. R. B., Marion, S. C. Who was Attila?

Attila was a famous king and military leader of the Huns, who was surnamed the "Fear of the World," or the "Scourge of God." He was born about 406 A. D., and with his brother Bleda, began in 434 to rule over many tribes north of the Danube and Black Sea. He made away with Bleda and continued the conquests which they had jointly begun, causing even the haughty Romans to pay him tribute. He was superstitiously reverenced by his countrymen. On his death in 453, his vast empire went to pieces, no one chief being powerful enough to control it.

An American who was in Cuba and interested in the relief work there, before leaving (on account of the blockade) sent us this suggestive note which was delayed in transmission:

People should not put letters in the packages or write on the boxes their sentiments concerning political matters in Cuba. An interpreter at the Custom House reads them, and it does us much harm. On one box was: "Long live free Cuba;" on another: "This box is donated by Johnson & Slosh. Johnson is for annexation, and Slosh for free Cuba."

In all likelihood, when the blockade is lifted, there will be no objection to any inscriptions patriotic Americans may write on their boxes for Cuba, as it will then no longer be a possession of Spain.

J. L. B., Germantown, Pa. Kindly direct me to the best published work on the present war?

The best, if not the only one, is the book entitled, "Columbia's War for Cuba," published by P. F. Bromfield & Co., Bible House, N. Y. City. It contains everything relating to Cuba and the war, and is very fully illustrated. It is sent by mail for $1.

Reader, Sedalia, Mo. 1. How far can an ordinary cannon fire? 2. How far can an ordinary rapid-fire gun fire? 3. How many men compose the Spanish Cortes?

1. The range is from three to five miles. Matanzas was bombarded at about the four mile range. 2. About three miles is the limit, the best execution being done at half that distance. 3. Spain's legislative authority is exercised by the sovereign in conjunction with the Cortes, which is a body composed of two houses—a Senate and a Chamber of Deputies. The Senate is composed of members, some of whom are nominated for life by the King, others by right of birth or office, while others are elected by state corporations, and by the most highly-taxed subjects of the State, for a period of five years. The Senate must not exceed 360 members. The Chamber of Deputies consists of members elected for five years, in the proportion of one deputy for every 50,000 of the population. The electors must be over 25 years of age, and must have paid a land tax of at least $5 a year. Spanish law is founded on the Roman law, the Gothic common law and the "leyes de toro," or national code, proclaimed by the Cortes in the sixteenth century.

Reader, Ohio. Is it possible to overcome effeminacy? If so, how?

Effeminacy—timidity, bashfulness, undue reserve, morbid self-consciousness—is a decided disadvantage to a young man beginning the battle of life. The only way to overcome it is to mix freely with young people of your own age; enter heartily into any conversation on subjects in which you are interested, and endeavor to acquire something of the confidence and self-assertion of those around you. Timidity is often the result of a weak physique. To overcome this, take out-door exercise, and, if practicable, attend some gymnasium. One of the best aids in conquering the tendency to extreme reserve is to join a debating club and become an active and regular participant in the proceedings. After the first barriers have been overcome, confidence in your ability to "hold your own" will beget still further confidence. Keep constantly in mind the suggestive proverb: "Be bold—and everywhere be bold." Of course, there is a reasonable limit to its application; but rightly applied, such courage will do much toward making you a victor in the varied struggles one has to face in a lifetime.

D. L. D., Colorado Springs, Colo. If a Christian prays for a certain blessing earnestly for six years and does not receive it, is he not justified in believing that God will not answer his prayer?

Not on that ground alone. The time for the answer may not have come. There are parents who have prayed for more than twenty years for the conversion of their children, who rightly go on praying, in the hope that in the end the answer will come.

J. G., Lesueur, Minn. A person here whom the physicians could not cure has gone to Chicago to consult a faith healer, and reports that he has heard testimonies of wonderful cures. Do you think it is superstition or that the cures are true?

There can be no doubt that there are some diseases, especially certain forms of spinal disease, which have been cured, or greatly relieved, by the faith cure method. A strong emotion, or mental effort, will frequently have a wonderful effect on the body, when the organs are intact, but are not performing their functions. The principle is the same as that which is involved when, as has frequently occurred, a person lying in bed unable to move hand or foot, jumps up at the cry of "fire," and runs out of the burning house. There are cures at the Roman Catholic shrine at Lourdes which are undoubtedly genuine. In some conditions, all that is necessary for a cure, is to get the sick person to believe firmly and enthusiastically in some power, no matter what. This principle will account for some cures at the institution you name, though perhaps not for all of them.

W. E. M., Hempstead, N. Y. I see Prof. Briggs become an Episcopalian. Are the doctrines he teaches the doctrines of that church?

There are many in that church who hold the same views. The church was established with the hope that Christians holding diverse views, might find a home in it. Accordingly it contains, among others, men as widely separated in belief as those of the low church who are evangelical like the Methodists; those of the high church, who resemble Roman Catholics; and those of the broad church, who differ but little from Unitarians. We do not understand how Prof. Briggs is able to give "assent and consent" to the thirty-nine articles, but we presume there is some way of understanding them as to satisfy his conscience.

G. R. B., Farley, Ia. 1. In view of the prohibition (II. Cor. 6: 14-18), against being unequally yoked with unbelievers, is a minister justified in solemnizing a marriage in which one of the parties is not a Christian? 2. Is a woman justified in marrying again after a divorce, when she has proof that her husband was unfaithful to her?

1. We think he is justified. The word unbeliever, as Paul used it, meant a great deal more than merely a non-Christian. It meant, as in Corinth an idolater of a peculiarly vile type, one whose religion was vicious. Marriage in such a case, would show that the Christian could be no true believer, otherwise the association would be repulsive to a degree. A minister, probably, would not counsel a marriage between a Christian and one who had not been converted, but nothing would be gained by his refusing to solemnize the marriage. 2. We think so. We believe that the marriage tie is dissolved by unfaithfulness.

C. D. H., Hawthorne, Fla. Is it possible to be a child of God and yet not receive the gift of the Holy Spirit?

The Holy Spirit is the agent in conversion and therefore in that sense every Christian has received the Holy Spirit; but you probably refer to the special gifts frequently mentioned in the New Testament. Many Christians have been without these. Even in these days there are gifts qualifying for service, and these are the work of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit rests in an especial manner on those who earnestly and prayerfully seek him, producing growth in grace and enlightenment, understanding, as well as giving power for work in Christ's cause.

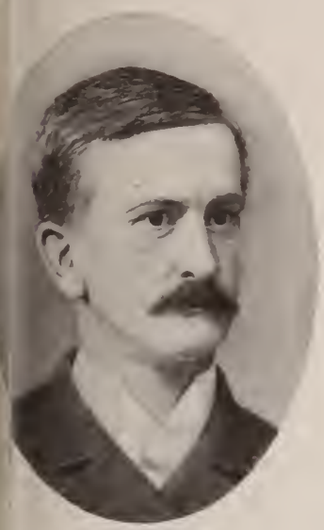
The First Congregational Church of Suffield, Conn., Celebrates Its Two Hundredth Birthday.

FEW churches in the United States have enjoyed the privilege which has fallen to the lot of the First Congregational Church of Suffield, Conn., in celebrating the two hundredth anniversary of its organization. On May 7 and 8 special services were held in the handsome church, when pastors and friends from other churches and adjacent towns came to congratulate pastor and people on the interesting occasion. It is no ordinary record that runs back over two hundred years of continuous life. From the addresses delivered at the celebration many quaint incidents came to light showing how marvelous is the change from the life of 1698 to that of 1898. The present pastor of the church, Rev. D. W. Goodale, the Rev. J. B. Doolittle of West Suffield, Mr. Henry B. Russell, Mr. Horace E. Mather and Mr. William E. Loomis, each delivered addresses covering different aspects of the history of the church and township during the two centuries.



REV. D. W. GOODALE.
(Pastor of the First Congregational Church.)

It appears that the land on which the town of Suffield stands was originally sold for the sum of thirty pounds to Major John Pynchon, of Springfield, Mass. It was then called Southfield, and permission was given to settle a township upon the further condition that within five years there were twenty families resident upon it who "maintained an able minister." These conditions were fulfilled, and the first meeting-house, of which a picture appears on this page, was erected. It was, as may be seen, a very modest edifice, clapboarded, standing north and south. In 1700, this building having become too small, an assessment of sixty pounds was formally voted on the inhabitants to defray the expense of erecting a new meeting-house on the top of the hill, over against the burying-ground." One curious record is that of the appointment of a committee to assign seats to the people "according to their quality." The rules of precedence to be observed were: "First, as to age; second, place of public trust; third, gifts; and then behaviour; and fourthly, wealth or estate." A fortnight was allowed for the correction of any error the committee might make in estimating the quality of the people, in the event of there being any dissatisfaction with the decision. In 1749, nearly fifty years later, this house also was outgrown, and a new building was erected. This served until 1835, when a fine new meeting-house was built of the Grecian-Doric order, with Grecian portico and tower. The needs of the congregation still increasing, the present edifice was erected in 1869 at a cost of $68,387.

ORIGINAL CHURCH, BUILT 1698.

Mr. William L. Loomis in the course of an interesting address at the recent celebration mentioned a number of quaint details showing how closely in early times the church and town life were associated. It appears that the meeting-house was the regular place of assembly for town-business. There the representatives of the families met to arrange the local finances, there they voted taxes for the support of the ministry, for school and ordinary expenses. The meetings regulated the walk and conversation of the members of the community, fixed the price of labor, the hours of the working-day and even the hour when in their opinion all respectable persons should retire to their beds. At the first town-meeting thirty-four persons attended as duly qualified voters representing the entire population of about three hundred souls. All kinds of business in this self-governing town seem to have been regulated by this little assembly. Among other matters they fixed the rate at which grain should be reckoned when paid for private debts, the price to be charged for grinding grain and the salaries of preacher and school master. Any member of this town council failing to be in his place at the council-table at the proper time incurred a fine of six pence for his lack of punctuality and of half-a-crown "if he were wholly absent." Among the items of expenditure voted by the council was one in 1685 for the purchase of a ladder wherewith to raise a red flag as a signal for assembly.

Subsequently, the march of improvement requiring an advance, a drum was substituted for the red flag, which might not be seen by a member who was much engaged with his private business. A few years later the modern appliance of a bell in the tower displaced the drum, whose beat had previously summoned the people to worship on the Sabbath. Another item in the account was for "a pew before and just under the pulpit a little higher than the other seats, for the accommodation of the wives of Ensign Pengilly and Corporal Ailyn, said wives being thick of hearing." As the wealth of the town increased, the Council voted, in 1721, money to make four pews on each side of the meeting house and to buy a cushion for the pulpit. All able-bodied persons were required to be regular in attendance at public worship. Any person being absent without sufficient reason for one month was fined twenty shillings, and if unable to pay the fine, was to be set in the cage or stocks for three hours. These were the customs of two hundred years ago in the primitive Connecticut township.

The Christian Commission Begins its Work Among the Boys in Blue—Cheering Letters from the Military Camps—What the Army Chaplains are Doing.

OUR readers, who are always quick to interest themselves in every deserving work which has for its object the spiritual elevation of our fellowmen, will be pleased to learn that the Christian Commission has already begun active operations among the rank and file of the army. Their first fields of service are Chickamauga and Tampa—two great military camps, where many thousands of regular troops and young recruits are assembled. A week, or at the furthest, a month hence, they may be on the Atlantic, or camping under the tropic sun of Cuba, far away from all religious privileges, and from the opportunities of spiritual refreshing.

It is for the purpose of urging forward this much-needed religious work among the troops at our great military camps, before they are summoned to the front, that Mr. Dwight L. Moody, the well-known evangelist, and a number of other devoted workers for souls have organized the Christian Commission. Mr. Moody is President of the Commission, and among its active members are Rev. A. C. Dixon, Gen. O. O. Howard, Major Whittle, Dr. L. W. Munhall, Mr. J. H. Burke, the Gospel singer, and several other Christian gentlemen, many of them men prominently known in the world of business. Several of the members of the Commission are now at the camps. Rev. A. C. Dixon writes us from Tampa, giving a glowing account of the opening of the spiritual campaign at that place. He says:

"TAMPA, Fla., May 13.

"I know it will interest you to hear that the work began among the soldiers last night, with a meeting which was remarkable in many respects: remarkable for the number present, for after all the seats were filled, about one thousand soldiers stood through the whole service; remarkable for the close attention, quiet as a church service, and most remarkable for the results, not less than one hundred and fifty soldiers who requested Christians to pray for them. That means more for a soldier in camp than for a citizen in New York or Brooklyn.

"We have now an opportunity for preaching the Gospel to men such as may not come again in this generation. Let the best men in the country be put in the camps, and there should not be a camp in the land without daily evangelistic services. May God bless THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and its readers for aiding the work. We need some copies of the Psalms and John and Proverbs. There is scarcely a Bible in camp. The soldier's baggage is so heavy that he is apt to leave his Bible out, but these little vest-pocket editions of separate books can be easily carried.

"A. C. DIXON."

Speaking of the Commission and its efforts, Mr. Moody says: "There is a great demand for Christian workers in the camps." He strongly urges the claims of this providentially-opened field upon the attention of God's people everywhere, and believes that they will rally nobly to the moral and financial support of the Commission, when they understand the nature and object of its labors among the troops. With proper co-operation, thousands of souls may be won to Christ. A soldier who has given his heart to the Saviour will be infinitely better prepared for the emergencies that attend war, than one who has no thought of eternity. Besides, there are many temptations to sinful indulgence in the life of the camp, and these can only be overcome by the presentation of the Gospel, which will imbue the men with higher aims and nobler aspirations. Any contributions that may be sent by our readers to assist in this evangelistic work in the Army, will be forwarded to Mr. Moody and acknowledged by him, and also in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Our special correspondent at Chickamauga, Mr. Gilson Willets, sends us this interesting letter which presents another phase of the Gospel work in the Army:

CHICKAMAUGA PARK, Ga.

For the boys in blue, Sunday is a day of rest. All drills, all fatigue work, all duties not absolutely necessary are dropped. From the time they answer to the reveille roll-call at 5.20 a. m., till tattoo roll-call at 9 p. m., the enlisted men have everything their own way. The intervening hours are their own to spend as they choose. Some go to Chattanooga, some stroll through the country, but the majority remain in camp. For the thousands of stay-at-homes to-day with nothing to read, came plenty of the best reading matter. How eagerly they sought the copies of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD! How promptly they went to the shade of the nearest tree to read them! How grateful and appreciative they seemed!

At Battlefield Station at early morning we hired a surrey, and into it stored 5,000 copies. The work of distribution consumed an entire day. At sunset we had visited every camp, placed a copy in every tent, handed a copy to every passing soldier. Mrs. Willets distributed copies to hundreds who gathered around our wagon, and our colored driver carried copies to those in remote places.

I had expected to find some scoffing, but found none. Nearly all the men were already acquainted with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. According to their own words, it was "a good paper to read." "At last, at last!" some of them said. "Why didn't you come before?" "Just what we have been waiting for." "Haven't seen a copy since leaving Fort Assiniboine," or "Fort Riley," or "Fort Logan," according to the post they had come from.

It is unnecessary to add that we visited officers as well as men.

Mrs. Willets' experiences were quite as gratifying as my own. A woman in camp at any time is one upon whom is conferred the deepest respect. The men tilted their campaign hats with Chesterfieldian grace, and loaded her with keepsakes, and the queerest keepsakes, too—as their thanks for copies of the paper.

What a pleasure it was as we drove back by this or that camp already visited, to see the men singly or in groups, everywhere under the trees, on bales of hay, in the shade of tents, busily reading.

"Glad to see you," said Chaplain Bateman, at the Tenth Infantry camp. "You are doing good work. Giving the men something to read is a kindness in itself. When the reading is a paper like THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the kindness is of a good, helpful, practical sort. All of the men in the Sixteenth know of your paper—in fact, we have been receiving it weekly for a long time at post. Put me down for a thousand copies every week. I will distribute them myself, too. I have had some correspondence with the publisher. Through his paper he is well known by the men of the Sixteenth. Thank him for me."

In the post office at Battlefield Station, at the close of the day, we posted a home-made, but nevertheless, business-like sign. It reads:

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be mailed weekly, free of charge, to all who wish it. Please indicate your desire by writing your name in the book on the counter—also give both your regimental and home address."

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Exasperating Comforters.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Job 16: 2, ... } Miserable comforters are ye all.

THE man of Uz had a great many trials—the loss of his family, the loss of his property, the loss of his health; but the most exasperating thing that came upon him was the tantalizing talk of those who ought to have sympathized with him. And looking around upon them, and weighing what they had said, he utters the words of my text.

Why did God let sin come into the world? It is a question I often hear discussed, but never satisfactorily answered. God made the world fair and beautiful at the start. Why did it not stay so? God had the power to keep back sin and woe. Why did he not keep them back? Why not every cloud roseate, and every step a joy, and every sound music, and all the ages a long jubilee of sinless men and sinless women? God can make a rose as easily as he can make a thorn. Why, then, the predominance of thorns? He can make good, fair, ripe fruit as well as gnarled and sour fruit. Why so much, then, that is gnarled and sour? He can make men robust in health. Why, then, are there so many invalids? Why not have for our whole race perpetual leisure instead of this tug, and toil, and tussle for a livelihood? I will tell you why. God let sin come into the world—when I get on the other side of the river of death. That is the place where such questions will be answered and such mysteries solved. He who this side that river attempts to answer the question only illustrates his own ignorance and incompetency. All I know is one great fact, and that is, that a herd of woes has come in upon us, trampling down everything fair and beautiful. A sword at the gate of Eden and a sword at every gate.

More people under the ground than on it. The graveyards in vast majority. The six thousand winters have made more scars than the six thousand summers can cover up. Trouble has taken the tender heart of this world in its two rough hands and pinched it until the nations wail with the agony. If all the mounds of graveyards that have been raised were put side by side, you might step on them and nothing else, going all around the world, and around again, and around again. These are the facts. And now I have to say that, in a world like this, the grandest occupation is that of giving condolence. The holy science of imparting comfort to the troubled we ought all of us to study. There are many of you who could look around upon some of your very best friends, who wish you well, and are very intelligent, and yet be able truthfully to say to them in your days of trouble: "Miserable comforters are ye all."

I remark, in the first place, that very voluble people are incompetent for the work of giving comfort. Bildad and Eliphaz had the gift of language, and with their words almost bothered Job's life out. Alas! for these voluble people that go among the houses of the afflicted, and talk, and talk, and talk, and talk. They rehearse their own sorrows, and then they tell the poor sufferers that they feel badly now but they will feel worse after awhile. Solace! Do you expect with a thin court plaster of words to heal a wound deep as the soul? Step very gently around about a broken heart. Talk very softly around those whom God has bereft. There go your axes. A man has a terrible wound in his arm. The surgeon comes and binds it up. "Now," he says, "carry that arm in a sling, and be very careful of it. Let no one touch it." But the neighbors have heard of the accident, and they come in, and they say: "Let us see it." And the bandage is pulled off, and this one and that one must feel it and see how much it is swollen, and there is irritation, and inflammation, and exasperation, where there ought to be healing and cooling. The surgeon comes in, and says: "What does all this mean? You have no business to touch those bandages. That wound will never heal unless you let it alone." So there are souls broken down in sorrow. What they most want is rest, or very careful and gentle treatment; but the neighbors have heard of the bereavement, or of the loss, and they come in to sympathize, and they say: "Show us now the wound. What were his last words? Rehearse now the whole scene. How did you feel when you found you were an orphan?" Tearing off the bandages here, and pulling them off there, leaving a ghastly wound that the balm of God's grace had already begun to heal. Oh, let no loquacious people, with ever-rattling tongues, go into the homes of the distressed!

Again I remark: that all those persons are incompetent to give any kind of comfort who act merely as worldly philosophers. They come in and say: "Why, this is what you ought to have expected. The laws of nature must have their way:" and then they get eloquent over something they have seen in post-mortem examinations. Now, away with all human philosophy at such a time. What difference does it make to that father and mother what disease their son died of? He is dead, and it makes no difference whether the trouble was in the epigastric or hypogastric region. If the philosopher be of the stoical school, he will come and say: "You ought to control your feelings. You must not cry so. You must cultivate a cooler temperament. You must have self-reliance, self-government, self-control;"—an iceberg reproving a hyacinth for having a drop of dew in its eye. A violinist has his instrument, and he sweeps his fingers across the strings, now evoking strains of joy, and now strains of sadness. He cannot play all the tunes on one string. The human soul is an instrument of a thousand strings, and all sorts of emotions were made to play on it. Now an anthem, now a dirge. It is no evidence of weakness when one is overcome of sorrow. Edmund Burke was found in the pasture-field with his arms around a horse's neck, caressing him, and some one said: "Why, the great man has lost his mind." No: the horse belonged to his son who had recently died; and his great heart broke over the grief. It is no sign of weakness that men are overcome of their sorrows. Thank God for the relief of tears. Have you never been in trouble when you could not weep, and you would have given anything for a cry? David did well when he mourned for Absalom, Abraham did well when he bemoaned Sarah, Christ wept for Lazarus; and the last man that I want to see come anywhere near me when I have any kind of trouble is a worldly philosopher.

Again, I remark: that those persons are incompetent for the work of comfort-bearing who have nothing but cant to offer. There are those who have the idea that you must groan over the distressed and afflicted. There are times in grief when one cheerful face, dawning upon a man's soul, is worth a thousand dollars to him. Do not whine over the afflicted. Take the promises of the Gospel, and utter them in a manly tone. Do not be afraid to smile if you feel like it. Do not drive any more hearses through that poor soul. Do not tell him the trouble was fore-ordained; it will not be any comfort to know it was a million years coming. If you want to find splints for a broken bone, do not take cast iron. Do not tell them it is God's justice that weighs out grief. They want to hear of God's tender mercy. In other words, do not give them aquafortis when they need valerian.

Again I remark: that those persons are poor comforters who have never had any trouble themselves. God keeps aged people in the world, I think, for this very work of sympathy. They have been through all these trials. They know all that which irritates and all that which soothes. If there are men and women here who have old people in the house, or near at hand, so that they can easily reach them, I congratulate you. Some of us have had trials in life, and although we have had many friends around about us, we have wished that father and mother were still alive that we might go and tell them. Perhaps they could not say much, but it would have been such a comfort to have them around. These aged ones who have been all through the trials of life know how to give condolence. Cherish them; let them lean on your arm—these aged people. If, when you speak to them, they cannot hear just what you say the first time, and you have to say it a second time, when you say it a second time, do not say it sharply. If you do, you will be sorry for it on the day when you take the last look and brush back the silvery locks from the wrinkled brow just before they screw the lid on. Blessed be God for the old people! They may not have much strength to go around, but they are God's appointed ministers of comfort to a broken heart.

People who have not had trial themselves cannot give comfort to others. They may talk very beautifully and they may give you a great deal of poetic sentiment; but while poetry is perfume that smells sweet, it makes a very poor salve. If you have a grave in a pathway, and somebody comes and covers it all over with flowers, it is a grave yet. Those who have not had grief themselves know not the mystery of a broken heart. They know not the meaning of childlessness, and the having no one to put to bed at night, or the standing in a room where every book and picture, and door are full of memories—the door-mat where she sat, the cup out of which she drank—the place where she stood at the door and clapped her hands—the odd figures that she scribbled—the blocks she built into a house. Ah! no, you must have trouble yourself before you can comfort trouble in others. But come all ye who have been bereft, and ye who have been comforted in your sorrows, and stand around these afflicted souls and say to them: "I had that very sorrow myself. God comforted me and he will comfort you;" and that will go right to the spot. In other words, to comfort others, we must have faith in God, practical experience, and good, sound, common sense.

But there are three or four considerations that I will bring to those who are sorrowful and distressed, and that we can always bring to them, knowing that they will effect a cure. And the first consideration is that God sends our troubles in love. I often hear people in their troubles say: "Why, I wonder what God has against me?" They seem to think God has some grudge against them because trouble and misfortune have come. Oh, no. Do you not remember that passage of Scripture: "Whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth?" A child comes in with a very bad splinter in its hand, and you try to extract it. It is a very painful operation. The child draws back from you, but you persist. You are going to take that splinter out, so you take the child with a gentle but firm grasp, for although there may be pain in it, the splinter must come out. And it is love that dictates it, and makes you persist. My friends, I really think that nearly all our sorrows in this world are only the hand of our Father extracting some thorn. If all these sorrows were sent by enemies, I would say, Arm yourselves against them, and as in tropical climes when a tiger comes down from the mountains, and carries off a child from the village, the neighbors band together and go into the forest and hunt the monster, so I would have you, if I thought these misfortunes were sent by an enemy, go out and battle against them. But no, they come from a Father so kind, so loving, so gentle, that the prophet speaking of his tenderness and mercy, drops the idea of a father, and says, "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."

Again I remark there is comfort in the thought that God by all this process is going to make you useful. Do you know that those who accomplish the most for God and heaven have all been under the harrow? Show me a man that has done anything for Christ in this day, in a public or private place, who has had no trouble, and whose path has been smooth. Ah, no.

I once went through an axe factory, and I saw them take the bars of iron and thrust them into the terrible furnaces. Then besweated workmen with long rods stirred the blaze. Then they brought out a bar of iron and put it in a crushing machine, and then they put it between two that bit it in twain. Then they put it on an anvil, and there were great hammers swung by machinery—each one half a ton in weight—that went thump! thump! thump! If that iron could have spoken it would have said: "Why all this beating? Why must I be pounded any more than any other iron?" The workmen would have said: "We want to make axes out of you, keen, sharp axes—axes with which to hew down the forest, and build ships, and erect houses, and carry on a thousand enterprises of civilization. That is the reason we pound you." Now, God puts a soul into the furnace of trial, and then it is brought out and run through the crushing machine, and then it comes down on the anvil and upon it, blow after blow, blow after blow, until the soul cries out: "O Lord, what does all this mean?" God says: "I want to make some thing very useful out of you. You shall be something to hew with and something to build with. It is a practical process through which I am putting you." So my Christian friends, we want more axes in the church of God; not more wedges to split with. We have enough of these. Not more bores with which to drill. We have too many bores. What we want is keen, sharp, well-tempered souls, and if there be any other way of making them than in the hot furnace, and on the hard anvil, and under the heavy hammer, I do not know what it is. Remember that if God brings any kind of chastisement upon you, it is only to make you useful. Do not sit down discouraged and say: "I have no more reason for living. I wish I were dead." Oh, there never was such a reason for your living as now! By this ordeal you have been consecrated a priest of the most high God. Go out and do your whole work for the Master.

Again: there is comfort in the thought that all our troubles are a revelation. Have you ever thought of it in that connection? The man who has never been through chastisement is ignorant about a thousand things in his soul he ought to know. For instance, here is a man who prides himself on his cheerfulness of character. He has no patience with anybody who is depressed in spirits. Oh, it is easy for him to be cheerful, with his fine house, his filled wardrobe, and well-strung instruments of music, and tapestried parlor, and plenty of money in the bank and nothing for some permanent investment. It is easy for him to be cheerful. But suppose his fortune goes to pieces, and his house goes down under the sheriff's hammer, and the banks will not have anything to do with his paper. Suppose these people who were once elegantly entertained at his table get so short-sighted that they cannot recognize him upon the street. How then? Is it so easy to be cheerful? It is easy to be cheerful in the house, after the day's work is done, and the gas is turned on, and the house is full of romping little ones. But suppose the piano is shut because the fingers that played on it will no more touch the keys, and the childish voice that asked so many questions will ask no more. Then is it so easy? When a man wakes up and finds that his resources are all gone he begins to rebel, and he says: "God is hard; God is outrageous. He has no business to do this to me." My friends, those of us who have been through trouble know what a sinful and rebellious heart we have, and how much God has to put up with, and how much we need pardon. It is only in the light of a flaming furnace that we can learn our own weakness and our own lack of resource.

There is also a great deal of comfort in the fact that there will be a family reconstruction in a better place. From Scotland, or England, or Ireland, a child emigrates to America. It is very sad parting, but he comes, after awhile, to feel at home as to what a good land this is. Another brother comes, a sister comes, and another, and after a while the mother comes, and after a while the father comes, and now they are all here, and they have a time of great congratulation and a very pleasant reunion. Well, it is just so with our families: they are emigrating toward a better land. Now, one goes

John Holland, when he was dying, said: "What means this darkness in the room? Have you lighted the candles?" "No," they replied, "we have not lighted any candles." Then said he "Welcome heaven!" The light already shining upon his pillow. Oh! ye who are persecuted in this world, your enemies will get off the track after awhile, and all will speak well of you among the thrones. Ye who are sick now. No medicines to take there. One breath of the eternal God will thrill you with immortal vigor. And ye who are lonesome now. There will be a million spirits to welcome you into their companionship. O ye bereft souls! there will be no gravedigger's spade that will cleave the side of that hill, and there will be no dirge wailing from that treble. The river of God, deep as the joys of heaven, will roll on between banks bordous with balm, and over depths bright with jewels, and under skies roseate with gladness, argosies of light going down the stream to the stroke of glittering oar and the song of angels! Not a sigh in the wind; not a tear mingling with the waters.

SPRING OPENS THE KLONDIKE.

Letters from Gold-Seekers Who Tempted the Passes—Sufferings, Dangers, Disappointments — The Great Treasury of Alaskan Gold.

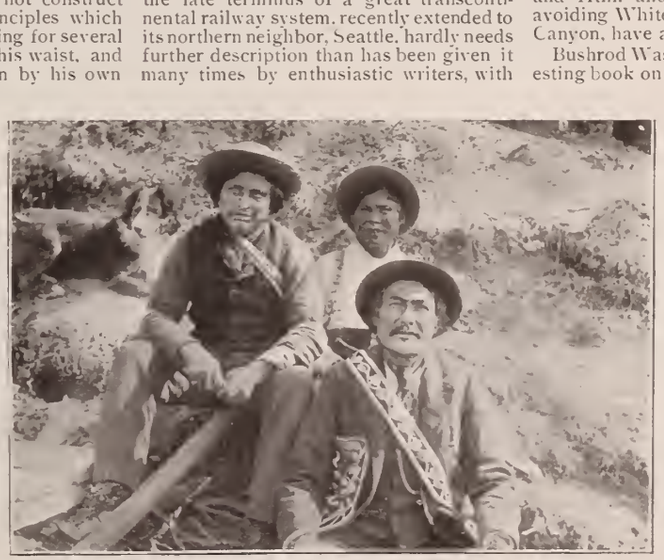
THUS far the Klondike has verified its claim as the possessor of vast riches difficult of access. Still the glowing expectations of many who have gone to Alaska have not been realized, and the caution which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gave to its readers when the excitement broke out a year ago, is still in order. There are, undoubtedly, numbers of people now preparing to go who, before many months are passed, will be among the great army of the disappointed, who gave up the comforts and manifold advantages they were enjoying at home to seek that which proved to be a shadow.

AN OUTFIT ON TAGISH LAKE.——INDIAN WOMAN OF THE LOWER YUKON.——"MILES CANYON" ON LEWIS RIVER.

Some of the gold-seekers who set out last fall have written letters to friends in New York City, regretting the step they have taken, and describing, in a pathetic way, the hardships they have had to undergo. One declares that he is now sure a kind providence did not construct his physical frame on principles which would warrant him in standing for several hours daily in snow up to his waist, and that he wishes he was again by his own fireside. Another writes that he never knew what misery was until, with hundreds of others, he made the desperate venture of crossing the Chilkoot in winter. The writer of this last-mentioned letter was one of a party who narrowly escaped being suffocated in the great snow-slide, or avalanche, which overwhelmed nearly a hundred victims in the mountain pass. He describes the scene after the avalanche as heart-rending—friends vainly calling for friends, wives for husbands, brothers for brothers. Large numbers threw up their outfits, representing all their possessions, and turned their backs forever on the fatal mountains, beyond which lay the gold which had already cost so many lives. Many of the gold-seekers, too disabled to turn back or go forward alone, required a great deal of attention from those more fortunate. Comfort of any description was out of the question: colds, sickness, pneumonia and a multitude of other troubles met them everywhere.

These depressing accounts are, of course, from those who belong to the army of the unsuccessful. There are others, of brave hearts, who have overcome the dangers of the journey and arrived at the fields, who will set to work earnestly endeavoring to win the wealth for which they have made so great a sacrifice.

Evidences of winter in the Klondike are now rapidly passing away, and in a short time the roads will be open for travel. It has been a hard winter for many who months ago, settled up their affairs and after spending all their available means in an outfit, started for the gold fields. Tacoma and Seattle are the points of departure from which the pilgrims of the pick set forth for the northern Eldorado, and since the gold fever began the development of these two cities has been phenomenal. Many curious visitors, not seeking gold so much as recreation, will doubtless spend summer vacations in interested study of both places and neighboring districts. Tacoma, "Bride of the Opal Sea," as the Western poets call this city, more practically known as the head of navigation on Puget Sound and the late terminus of a great transcontinental railway system, recently extended to its northern neighbor, Seattle, hardly needs further description than has been given it many times by enthusiastic writers, with our young State might, like Tacoma, well tempt the traveler to stay his footsteps here rather than tempt the Alaskan passes for the Yukon's hidden gold.



ISAAC, CHIEF OF THE KLONDIKE TRIBE, AND HIS TWO SONS.

Having shown clearly and conscientiously that great difficulties, dangers and uncertainty beset the quest of Yukon gold, we may state in cold figures the brilliant facts so far as they can be tabulated correctly of Alaskan gold production. Up to 1890 the Alaskan output of gold and silver was $5,000,000: from 1890 to 1896, inclusive, the output of gold alone was $20,000,000: that for 1897 has been estimated at $10,000,000. The number of lives lost, of physical constitutions wrecked forever, of unutterable sufferings endured in wresting these millions from mother earth's unfriendly treasure-house in the Arctics, has never been computed.

The educated Alaskan of fifty years hence will bear but small resemblance to the typical woman, as shown in our cut, or to Chief Isaac and his sons, although it is to be hoped that their qualities of robust endurance will not be eliminated by the sometimes weakening process of civilization. It is interesting to forecast in a speculative way the changes time will work in the territory's rugged physical features. Science may find better ways than now exist of overcoming the difficulties of Miles Canyon and White Horse Rapids (otherwise known as "Miner's Grave,") the most dangerous parts of the Yukon. Through Miles Canyon, 50 feet at the broadest and 25 feet at the narrowest, the Lewis River rushes between perpendicular walls of red granite, 50 feet high and even dogs show fear of the journey as they drag the sleds along the narrowing ridge of ice on the side of the swirling rapids, down which boats go at the rate of many miles an hour when the stream is fairly open for travel. Railway and steamboat connection between Dyea and Dawson City, by way of Lakes Tagish and Atlin and the Hootalinqua River, avoiding White Horse Rapids and Miles Canyon, have already been planned.

Bushrod Washington James, in his interesting book on Alaska, writes that the native Indians of the territory, with few exceptions, "are teachable, intelligent, and eager to learn. . . . There is not the usual wild rush for freedom so characteristic of children used to civilization. The world of wonders open to the Indian children and even adult scholars, is so fascinating that the hour for leaving them is received without any demonstration of delight . . . With mining machinery and tools for building, let school supplies be forthcoming, together with facilities for teaching properly, so that there may be no half-Christian natives to redeem from vice." The influx from all points of the globe, means the importation of many vices, and the importance of planting schools and missions throughout the territory cannot be too strongly emphasized. In addition to the Sitka Industrial School and the Haines' Training-school at Chilkoot (which are the educational centres), there are about fourteen schools all under Government supervision and making reports to the Government. Most of these schools —if not all—were planted by missionaries, and the degree of civilization found in Alaska is conceded to be the work of missions established prior to gold discoveries.

Seattle, founded in 1852, and older by sixteen years than Tacoma, is established on such secure natural advantages that the fire of 1889, whose wholesale destruction of property is still remembered, seemed only to give it a fresh impulse. The population, 26,740 in 1889, is now about 75,000. Surrounded by fertile valleys and well-timbered hills, this city of pens inspired by the grandeur of Mount Rainier and the beauty of Puget Sound. It is yet a city of undeveloped possibilities and much promise.

PROGRESS OF THE WAR.

SPAIN'S CAPE VERDE FLEET REACHES WEST INDIAN WATERS

Touches at Martinique and then at Curacao—A Hostile Meeting Between the Fleets Looked for—Bombardment at San Juan, and Sharp Skirmishes at Several Points Along the Cuban Coast—Suffering in Havana—Many Reconcentrados Perish.

OUR war with Spain has made rapid progress during the past week, and important events have followed each other in quick succession. Porto Rico has been shelled, and its fortifications demolished; sharp engagements, attended by loss of life on both sides, have occurred at Cardenas and Cienfuegos on the Cuban coast; the Spanish fleet, so long mysteriously hidden, has been definitely located, and preparations are now well advanced for a crushing and fatal blow at the naval strength of Spain. Temporarily, the projected attack on Havana by sea and the invasion of Cuba by our land forces have been postponed until the Cape Verde fleet is destroyed or captured. Our nation has to mourn the loss of valuable lives; but it has cause to be thankful that, thus far, such sacrifices have been few, and we have been spared many of the horrors that usually accompany a state of war.

San Juan Bombarded.

On Thursday, May 12, at sunrise, Rear-Admiral Sampson's fleet bombarded the defences of San Juan, on the island of Porto Rico. It was believed that the Spanish fleet would head for San Juan and there establish a base of operations, and consequently the bombardment was undertaken for the purpose of defeating Admiral Cervera's plans. The battle-ship Iowa fired the first shot, and the Indiana and other vessels of the fleet smartly joined in the attack. Morro Castle, the chief defence of San Juan (having the same name as that at Havana), was soon reduced to a ruin, and its garrison dispersed in flight. The other forts and batteries were quickly demolished, and all the shore defences destroyed, and their garrisons driven to the interior with considerable loss. The Spanish fire was ineffective, and, although several of our vessels were hit, no serious damage was sustained. Thousands of the population and the foreign Consuls sought refuge in the interior of the island. Our fire was continued at intervals for nearly eight hours. A shell demolished the roof of Governor-General Macias' palace. That official bravely tried to rally his panic-stricken forces, but in vain. His daughter Paulita, a beautiful and high spirited girl, stood in the middle of the main street, imploring the Spanish troops to remain and fight, but she was swept aside by the stream of fugitives, who were terrified by the havoc wrought by the American guns. Our casualties were one seaman, on the cruiser New York, killed by the bursting of a shell, and four others wounded.

Sighting the Spanish Fleet.

Shortly after the Porto Rico fight came news of the discovery of the Spanish Cape Verde fleet, which had reached the French Island of Martinique, nearly two days' sail to the southeast of Porto Rico. This news was hailed with joy by our navy, as it was feared that the Spaniards might lay a strategic trap and make a sudden descent upon our North Atlantic coast, while our naval defenders were absent in Cuban waters. Admiral Sampson prepared to intercept them in the event of an attempt to reach Cuba by either the Mona or Virgin passages, and Commodore Schley, with the Flying Squadron, was dispatched from Hampton Roads, with a view of protecting our blockading fleet off Havana. After a short stay at Martinique, the Spanish vessels sailed to the southwest, and, two days later, were heard from at Curacao, a small Dutch island off the Venezuelan coast, where it was believed they would coal. The position of our fleet had undoubtedly compelled a change in the Spanish plan of campaign, as it is believed that Admiral Cervera's orders were to make a dash for some Cuban port, and, after destroying as many of our blockading vessels as possible (they being greatly inferior in armament to his own) to seek the open sea with his swift cruisers before our fleet could overtake him. Shortly after the Spanish fleet sailed from Martinique, our auxiliary cruiser Harvard arrived at the port of St. Pierre, and the Spanish torpedo destroyer Terror was detached from the Cape Verde fleet to wait for and attack the Harvard. The latter, however, had some repairs to make, and decided to remain in the French port. Owing to the superior speed of the Spanish fleet, it is not considered probable that our squadron will be able to compel them to face an engagement, and it is more likely that they will make for the South Atlantic, presumably with the hope of meeting and destroying our battleship, Oregon, and her consorts, the Marietta and Nictheroy, which are now on the way from Rio Janeiro to Key West.

On Wednesday, May 11th, three of our smaller vessels, the gunboat Wilmington, the revenue cutter Hudson, and the torpedo boat Winslow, had a sharp engagement with the Spanish batteries at Cardenas. The Winslow, which carries only light, one-pounder guns, was a little over a mile off-shore, when a masked four-inch Spanish battery opened fire. The vessel was struck many times, and five of her crew were killed and five others wounded. The killed were Ensign Worth Bagley, two firemen, a cook and an oiler. Lieut. Bernardou, commander of the Winslow, was among the wounded, his thigh having been cut by a shell. His vessel was disabled and at the mercy of the enemy, when the Hudson appeared and towed her out of reach. Our dead and wounded were taken to Key West. It is reported that our vessels subsequently bombarded Cardenas, and that several hundred Spaniards were killed, 113 bodies being found among the ruins of a battery.

Naval Skirmishes.

There were several other exciting skirmishes between our gunboats and the Spanish coast batteries. While the Wilmington was patrolling the coast of Guanabacoa, ten miles east of Havana, she shelled a force of 500 Spanish cavalry and infantry with startling results. A force of Cubans and American volunteers was landed near Mariel, and was attacked by 200 Spaniards, but succeeded in driving them off without loss, the Spaniards losing sixteen dead and twenty wounded. This was the first brush in which Cubans and Americans fought side by side on Cuban soil. None of these, however, were more than mere skirmishes, and were undertaken more for the purpose of feeling the enemy's strength and locating his defences, than as a beginning of the real work of invasion. In no case was any U. S. vessel of heavy calibre engaged. While the cruiser Marblehead, the gunboat Nashville, and a cutter were engaged in dragging for the cable off Cienfuegos, a boat's crew was fired upon by a Spanish battery, and one man was killed, seven others being wounded. Lieut-Commander Winslow, of the Nashville, was struck by a bullet, but not seriously hurt.

Great Suffering in Cuba.

Major Lima, of the Cuban army, who was taken off the island a few days ago by an American gunboat, states that the condition of the poor in Havana is appalling. Hundreds of the reconcentrados are dying of starvation. Their bodies are flung outside of the Spanish lines, at Havana, and other cities, in large numbers daily, for the buzzards to devour. The Spanish troops are also suffering severely, and unless the blockade is broken, and supplies come in, the mortality will be beyond all precedent.

Dr. Rodolfo Guzman, of Havana, was one of the very last among the Cuban refugees to leave that city before the outbreak of hostilities. It will be remembered that when the proprietor of this journal left Cuba, which he had visited in the interest of the relief work, Dr. Guzman was acting as director of the distribution. He now writes:

MY DEAR SIR:—I followed your excellent system for the forwarding of provisions to the reconcentrados, and sent to the Province of Pinar del Rio enough to supply the demand for all the towns. To Matanzas City, I sent to the American Consul: 100 barrels Indian corn meal, 6 tierces lard and four cases containing 2,600 lbs. of bacon. To the American Consul at Sagua la Grande, I sent 500 barrels Indian corn meal, 10,000 lbs. bacon, and six large cases of clothing, to be used in assisting the whole Province of Santa Clara.

Owing to the alarming conditions of Havana, and fearing for my personal safety, I was forced to leave the island for this hospitable country; but before so doing, and having full confidence in the honesty and integrity of the employees that were assisting me in the handling and distribution of the kind donations of provisions, medicines and clothing received from the United States, I instructed them that the Central Station would continue the daily assistance to the 21,000 reconcentrados who were assisted weekly, as well as to continue sending said assistance to the outside towns in all the Provinces, as long as possible. Through some gentlemen just arrived from Havana, I have learned that, up to the 21st of April, on which they left said port, the assistance was going on uninterruptedly.

It pleases me very much to give you this information, and, at the same time, I entreat you to thank the Cuban Relief Committee and the generous American people, in the name of all the Cubans who have suffered from hunger, and by which thousands of innocent women and children have been rescued from sure starvation.

RODOLFO GUZMAN.

Francisco Gonzalez, a rebel leader, escaped from Baracoa, on the eastern end of Cuba, in an open boat and landed on the coast near Puerto Plata, San Domingo. He gives a sad account of the state of affairs in Cuba. "The Spaniards here," he says, "are more brutal than ever. They treat the Cubans as allies of the United States, and visit upon them imprisonment, torture and starvation. Women and children are dying by wholesale, and the native Cubans are waiting and praying for the landing of American troops. They will flock in large bodies to the American standard to fight their hated oppressors."

The following letter received from Rev. J. V. Cova, a devoted Gospel worker in Tampa, Fla., describes the condition of the Cuban refugees at that place:

"TAMPA, FLA.

"Editor Christian Herald:

"I send you a photograph showing a group of Cuban refugees here at the moment they come to receive their evening meal at the soup house. They use to bring tin cans for taking home their portions. This consists of a single piece of meat, rice, beans and bread, and is afforded to 700 a day by the Christian care of several persons of this city; there is a large number who cannot be fed for want of means.

"We have 4,000 refugees without work or any other means of living, and must be cared for besides food, with clothing, bedding, shoes, etc. The majority are women and children. They left the island after having lost all they had, and each recites a pitiful story of fear, persecution, death and bereavement. Tampa has been able to employ a number of them, but the remainder are miserable.

"I am caring for them in the best way I can, providing for their most urgent needs, medical care, medicines, food, etc. Twice a week I gather them in my mission and give them the comforts of the Gospel of peace.

"The latest steamers from Cuba brought large crowds of new refugees. They are American citizens and their families, but there is scarcely one who is a born American. They are naturalized Cubans, and the larger number are destitute.

"May the Lord provide for these unfortunate people in this city of refuge at this time moment. Yours in Him,

"J. V. COVA."

NOTES OF THE WAR.

—ALL the members of the Spanish Cabinet have resigned.

—A BREAD famine prevails in Spain, and the population is represented as crying for food, not for war.

—ALL the Spanish prisoners that have taken since the war began are now at Fort McPherson, near Atlanta, Ga.

—REAR-ADMIRAL Dewey has sunk or captured four more Spanish gunboats, and has raised the steel guns from the sunken Spanish fleet in Manila Bay.

—SPAIN is said to be preparing to send 40,000 reserves to retake the Philippines. The government does not believe she has any serious intention of doing so.

—THE HAWAIIAN annexation movement is gaining new strength. It is urged that the islands would be of the greatest importance to us in future naval operations.

—DIPLOMATS claim that France has violated her neutrality obligations by permitting Admiral Cervera's fleet to coal at Martinique, and by delaying official dispatches sent by the American Consul, Mr. Darte, to this government.

—ENSIGN Worth Bagley, who was killed at Cardenas, was a young North Carolinian. His mother resides at Raleigh, N. C. He was appointed to the Naval Academy in 1891, graduated last year and appointed an ensign. He was about twenty-five years old and a very promising officer.

—THE QUEEN REGENT OF SPAIN, in a recent interview on the war, said: "The American Government gave way before the pressure of public opinion. We had agreed to do everything we could do. They knew that when we granted autonomy to Cuba, we practically abandoned our rights in the island."

—MAJOR-GENERAL Wesley Merritt has been appointed Military Governor of the Philippines, and commander of our military expedition to these islands. The expedition force will consist of 15,000 troops, and will sail shortly from San Francisco. When it reaches Manila, Admiral Dewey will demand the city's surrender, and the army of occupation will then be landed.

Every branch of the military service is now represented at the National Camp. During the past ten days, troops from many different States have arrived there, and is expected that the maximum of 50,000 campers will soon be reached. This figure would have been passed some time ago had it not been for the heavy drafts of troops sent to Tampa, Fla. Both Tampa and Key West are now crowded with our troops—both volunteers and regulars—all in readiness to embark for the projected Cuban invasion, which is only delayed until our fleet shall have encountered and vanquished that of Spain.

Our illustrations on this page, which have been received from our special Chickamauga correspondent, Mr. Gilson Willets, were photographed specially for this journal. They give an idea of the daily life at the camp, and of its surroundings. There has been, fortunately, very little sickness at Chickamauga Park. One of the photographs (No. 2) shows a storming party, practicing guerilla warfare, with a log cabin as a point of observation. No. 3 furnishes convincing evidence that even camp life may have its occasional taste of domestic joys. No. 4 is a representative gathering of officers. No. 5 pictures a regimental band at morning concert. The sixth illustration shows a group of young lads—the sons of well-known army officers—who have enlisted as privates for the war, and who, doubtless, hope, by gallant conduct on the field, to attain that promotion and recognition which are the goal of every soldier's ambition. Camp life at Chickamauga is probably pleasanter than at either Tampa or Key West. At the latter, the troops have suffered inconvenience in consequence of the scarcity of fresh water, and at Tampa the heat has been intense.

Face to Face with Our Destiny.

WE did not want this Hispano-American war. It was forced upon us by considerations of humanity. It is in no sense man's war at all. We reluctated and held back. We preferred the work of feeding the hungry, clothing the naked and saving the dying from death. Instead of this, God has put into our hands a sword bathed in the sun; a sword that will flash its light over all the world, and in the eyes of future generations. The God of Battles called us to arms, and at one stroke has cured all the alienations of the civil war. The boys in blue are shoulder to shoulder with the boys in gray, and they are all on the way to the front.

The victory of Commodore Dewey at the Philippine Islands is an eye-opener. He fired another shot that has been heard all around the world. We cannot help our destiny. Hereafter, America must have a voice in all great Eastern questions. The Monroe doctrine is not against this, though it has been so interpreted. We have always thought that having nine millions of African descendants in the United States we ought to have had some voice in the partition of Africa. But, no, it was supposed to be against the Monroe doctrine and the "Farewell Address." But times are changed. We did not attack the Philippine Islands because we wanted them. We only wanted to keep the Spanish fleet from doing damage in American waters. But now they are ours, and the members of the British Parliament begin to forecast as the result our future influence in all great Oriental questions.

There is no doubt that this Hispano-American war has already opened a golden gate of entrance for us into the Orient. War is God's way of throwing those parts apart and giving us what he intends to be our share in the enlightenment and redemption of the whole world. Long live America! All long live America's banners of freedom! To keep the other nations of the world from domineering here is the Monroe doctrine. To hold fast what we have that no man take our crown, is the American.

Reviewing the Police.

LOOKING over the police reports of our American cities, I find that there were no arrests of any one occupation so much as those with no occupation. Five thousand and fifty-six of those arraigned of the law in one city last year were idlers. Just as I expected. Where do the officers of the city go to find culprits? They go among the young men who stand at street corners with their hands in their pockets. They go in places where men are wasting their time, having opportunity to work if they wanted it, but refusing the opportunity. The general rule is that, when a man stops work, he first lives up what money he may have on hand, then he borrows. After that he steals.

The moral of these police reports is: Go to work. Get large wages if you can; if not, get small wages; but wages or no wages—work! If nothing better opens, spend your morning in bringing coal from the north side of the cellar to the south side, and your afternoon in removing the coal from the south side to the north side. So I had a man come to my door begging. He said he had not any work. "Well," I said, "I have work for you if you will do it." So I took him down cellar, and I said: "There is that coal; you move it over to that side." After a few hours I heard a report from him, and I went down to the cellar again. "Now," I said, "remove the coal from that to the other side." Said he: "I don't see any use in it." I said, "I see use in it; I want to know whether you are lazy or not."

Do something you must, or perish. But if there is any one fact established by our city documents, it is that dishonesty does not pay. Out of the $230,475 stolen in one city during the past year, $191,803 were recovered. To put it so you can remember it: there was about $230,000 worth of property stolen and about $191,000 worth recovered. That is an astounding statistic! It is the best possible eulogy of the efficiency of the police, while at the same time it shows that in most cases dishonesty will have to disgorge. But you say: "I cannot get any work." God help you! There are tens of thousands of honest men who cannot get any work. While I have no sympathy with voluntary idlers, my soul is deeply stirred for those who faithfully seek employment and cannot find it.

In reviewing the police reports I thank God for the mercies of the city ambulances proved by these documents. In one city one thousand and eighty-three times during the year have these ambulances, by the authority of the city, sped on their Christian errand. If there is anything more beautiful than this, I do not know what it is, and when I stood in my study and looked out of the window, and saw a crowd of persons around an invalid fallen in the street, and in three minutes I saw an ambulance dash past with horse at full run, I said: "God be praised!" Hitherto the victims of sudden sickness, or casualty, must wait for the extemporized stretcher, or the wagon, where in the hot sun or the driving rain the sufferer was exposed before he could get to his home or the hospital; but now by the click of the telegraph the news goes to headquarters, and the horse, already harnessed to the ambulance, flies to the relief. The sufferer is tenderly picked up, and put on cushions, in covered wagon with easy springs, and the city becomes a gentle mother to the broken limbed. The highest medical skill comes to the rescue. Life is spared, last hours made pleasant, and upon the city comes the benediction of Him who said: "I was sick and ye visited me."

A NEGLECTED SENSE.

ALTHOUGH we hardly realize the fact, no sense is more closely connected with the sphere of the soul than the sense of smell. It reaches more directly and excites more powerfully the emotional nature than either sight or hearing, for its agency is subtle and goes down to the very depths of our nature. Hence many of the Bible images appeal to our sense of smell, for it is regarded as an important means of communication with heaven and a direct avenue for the soul's approach to the Father of Spirits. Thus the acceptance of man's offerings by God is expressed in the sense of smell. When Noah offered the first sacrifice after the flood "the Lord smelled a sweet savour." The drink-offerings and burnt-offerings of the law were "a sweet savour unto the Lord." Christ is said to have given himself a sacrifice to God for "a sweet smelling savour;" and the Apostle Paul speaks of himself and the other apostles as "unto God a sweet savour of Christ." The Psalms and the prophetic writings are full of the most beautiful metaphors borrowed from perfumes; and the Song of Solomon is a garden of flowers and perfumes.

In the gorgeous ceremonial worship of the Hebrews, the sense of smell occupied a most prominent place, and the offering of incense was an essential part of religious service—the altar of incense occupying one of the most honored positions in the temple; that is, it stood between the table of shewbread and the golden candlestick in the holy place. Nearly the whole thirtieth chapter of Exodus is taken up with directions about the various perfumes to be used in the service of the temple, and the holy anointing oil, perfumed with cassia, cinnamon and sweet calamus, could not be taken for any private or personal use under pain of death.

Incense was offered when the people were in the act of prayer; and their prayers were supposed to ascend to heaven in the smoke of that fragrant offering. We are told that after the awful death of Korah and his associates, Aaron took a censer and put fire from the altar on it, and incense on the fire, and standing between the living and the dead, swung his censer as he made atonement for the people, so that the plague was staid. And Malachi, predicting the universal spread of Jehovah's worship, sums up that worship under the symbol of incense. "And in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering; for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of Hosts."

The New Dispensation was inaugurated at the altar of incense; for it was while standing at his ministry at this altar, that Zacharias received the promise of John the Baptist's birth; and both at the birth, during the ministry, and in the burial of Jesus Christ, perfumes play a very remarkable and prominent part. Consecrated anew to burial purposes, by their use in the sepulchre of Christ, the early Christians gave them great honor, both in their worship and their burying. The Litany was always chanted with incense; and St. Paulinus, a writer of the fifth century, says that the wax tapers of the altar are made to "shed fragrance as well as light." Until very recently, the reigning monarch of England offered spices upon the altar on Twelfth Day, but latterly the ceremony has been done by proxy. But I remember well, when the floors of some of the great cathedrals of England, particularly Norwich, were strewn with sweet sedge, which exhaled when trod upon, a most delicious perfume. And still all over the world, the Roman Catholic Church preserves the consecrated use of perfumes in their solemn litanies and in the burial of the dignitaries of the church. Dr. George Wilson in defending the use of incense with prayer says, "It appealed to those who were both blind and deaf, a class usually shut out from social worship by their affliction; through the sense of smell, the hallowed impressions shut out by one avenue, were admitted to the heart by another."

Perfumes have also a decided mental influence. If the nose suffers with a bad odor, all the body suffers with it, "for there is no schism in the body," and when "one member suffers, all the members suffer with it." Who has not felt the exhilarating effect of the sea air? or the perfume of a hay, or a clover field? And who is not familiar with the powerful influence of opium, or tobacco? The nose can be educated as well as any other organ of the body. Wine merchants, tea brokers, drug dealers, hop buyers, and perfumers go through a regular nasal education; and those who love sweet scents, and cultivate the taste, become very sensitive to their influence. There are more than two hundred different odors known to perfumists by name. Did God make all this charming variety, to waste its sweetness on the desert air?

No! Not without religious, as well as æsthetic purpose, did God impart fragrance to objects—which as far as we can see—might have done as well without it. All this Eden-scented nature, is doubtless intended to lead our thoughts heavenward; to make us remember Christ upon the hills of Jerusalem, renewing the primeval blessing upon the flowers of the field. Every odor that rises from leaf and blossom should be our "altar of incense:" for not without deep spiritual significance, does the scent of the wild, white c... sweeten the toil of the farmer; or the ...rm fragrance of heathery hills, the care of th... shepherd; or the rich scent of a thou...nd flowers, the labor of the gardener.

ITALIAN DISTURBANCES.

REPORTS of rioting and street-fights of serious magnitude have been coming for several weeks past from the great cities of Italy. They are so much alike in their chief characteristics d:em to have been so carefully plan-, to suggest the suspicion that the y was on the verge of organized tion. Should this occur, the dynasty must fall.

Kings and statesmen often forget, in their ambitious projects, that their people cannot be plundered and oppressed with impunity. They disregard their own safety and the stability of their dynasty when they disregard the warning of God's word.

Because they turned away from him and would not consider any of his ways: so that they cause the cry of the poor to come unto him and he heareth the cry of the afflicted: whether it be done against a nation or against a man only (Job 34:27-29).

Dispute About a Boundary.

In the course of a discussion on the subject of landmarks, at the Engineers' Club in Philadelphia recently, a curious explanation was given of the irregularities of the frontier line between Pennsylvania and New York. The latest survey, one of the engineers said, involved a dispute. One of the Pennsylvania Commissioners insisted that the line should exactly coincide with the forty-second parallel. It was found that the previous survey made in 1784 had been marked by boundary stones, some of which were more than a quarter of a mile from the correct line.

THE CITY OF NAPLES, ITALY, ONE OF THE SCENES OF THE RECENT RIOTS.

As the Pennsylvania Commissioner was persistent, the line was drawn exactly on the forty-second parallel, but before it was definitely settled an inquiry was held as to its effects. It was then found that the rectification would cause serious disturbance of property rights and endless confusion. It was therefore decided to adhere to the old line, although it was crooked. One of the engineers said that he had examined the land at the place of divergence and had discovered the cause of the irregularities. It contained magnetic ore, which had disturbed the compass which the surveyors used in 1784, and so they had been misled as to the course of the parallel which they thought they were following. Unhappily there are many who diverge from the straight path of duty while they think they are following it, and the cause is frequently as with these surveyors, that there is some hidden attraction which disturbs their guiding principle:

Ponder the path of thy feet: turn not to the right hand nor to the left: remove thy foot from evil (Prov. 4: 26, 27).

A Long Search Ended.

A singular statement was made in a court in New York last week by a Bohemian woman. She said that six years ago she came to this country in search of her husband. He had married her in Bohemia, when she had twelve hundred dollars to her credit in a local bank. After their marriage he had induced her to intrust him with the money on the plea that he had an unusual opportunity for purchasing a valuable property. As soon as he obtained the money he deserted her and came to America. She immediately sold their furniture and followed him. On her arrival she had secured a situation in which she had earned a good income. She spent it in trying to trace her husband. She had caused a search to be made in distant States and had followed the faintest clues, often at heavy expense. One day last week she saw him on Third avenue and followed him to his home. She found that all the time she had been searching for him he had been living on the next block to her. She immediately applied for a summons to compel him to perform his duty to her. It was strange that while she had been searching in distant places for him, he was near to her all the time; but the same mistake is often made by people who are seeking God while he is near them, and, unlike this man, is waiting to help and bless them:

It is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off: it is not in heaven that thou shouldest say who shall go up for us to heaven and bring it unto us? neither is it beyond the sea: but the word is very nigh thee, in thy mouth and in thy heart (Deut. 30: 11-14).

Electricity Without Wires.

An extraordinary exhibition of electric power was given last week in Madison Square Garden, New York. A miniature ship floating in the fountain was blown up at a given signal by an instrument placed sixty yards away in a gallery at the opposite end of the garden, without any connecting wire. A small instrument called a coherer was fixed on the edge of a basin in the centre of which is the fountain, and this coherer collected the electric force and communicated it to the miniature ship. The instrument in the gallery from which the power came is a complicated contrivance which is likely to play an important part in future electrical experiments. What it does is to create electrical sparks, which pass between metallic balls and produce violent electric oscillations, which in turn generate electric waves which go out in the form of ever-increasing spheres. These spheres have the power of passing through any material, the walls of a building or a crowd of people presenting no appreciable impediment to the passage of the waves. The same instrument set in motion a six-inch bell in another part of the Garden totally unconnected with it by wire. The spheres appear to do all that the wire has hitherto done in the transmission of a current. We are continually learning new facts about this mysterious force. Not the least important is this that it can operate without the wire connection, which hitherto appeared to be necessary. It will be well if we learn that there is an analogous fact in morals. Our influence for good or evil may be exerted, in ways unknown to us, on people with whom we have no direct connection.

For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth unto himself. . . . Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace and things wherewith one may edify another (Rom. 14: 17, 19).

Held by His Foot.

A sad fatality is reported from Plainfield, N. J. It appears that a man, who was walking along the tracks of the Lehigh Valley Railroad a few weeks ago, attempted to cross the slanting pieces of timber devised as a guard to keep cattle from the tracks. In some way that cannot now be explained, he slipped, with the result of wedging one of his feet in between the timbers so that he was compelled to remain in that position while the fast Western express approached and crushed out his life. When within a hundred yards of the spot, the engineer saw in the gleam of the headlight the form of a man swaying back and forth in desperate endeavor to get loose from his perilous position, the air brakes were applied, but too late. The train was stopped and run back. It was found that the man had been instantly killed. Doubtless if there had been time the man would have willingly sacrificed his foot to get away and so save his life. What was denied him is possible to some whose souls are in peril. When some habit or dearly loved connection is holding a man back from seeking God, it should be sacrificed though it is as precious as a limb.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell (Matt. 5: 30).

Admiral Dewey's Ordeal.

The remarkable achievement of Admiral Dewey at Manila, in winning so glorious a victory without the loss of a ship or a man, gives special interest to a story of his boyhood, which is related by a correspondent of the New York Sun. He says that Major Z. K. Pangborn, now the editor of a New York journal, went, in the early fifties, to Montpelier, Vt., to teach school. He was a young man just graduated from college and physically smaller than some of the boys he undertook to teach. They were an unruly lot and had a bad character in the neighborhood. Several teachers had been driven away by them, and the one who preceded Pangborn they had carried out and thrust head foremost into a deep snowbank. A few days after Pangborn's arrival, young Dewey, the biggest boy in the school, and the leader in the anti-teacher rebellion, informed him in open school that the boys did not propose to submit to him and intimated that they would thrash him if he attempted to enforce discipline. The teacher was prepared for some such defiance, having heard the character of the school. He had provided himself with a rawhide whip, with which he administered to young Dewey so thorough a thrashing that he was soon howling for mercy. From that time the boy had a wholesome respect for his teacher. A cordial liking sprang up between them, which resulted in young Dewey making rapid progress in his studies. Many years afterwards when, an officer in the navy, he visited his former teacher, he recalled the incident and acknowledged that it had been the turning point in his career. He said: "I shall never cease to be grateful to you. But for the thrashing you gave me, I might have gone from bad to worse, till I reached State's prison." He has now administered a lesson of the same kind to the Spaniards, whose long record of infamy and misgovernment, proved that they could learn wisdom by no other way.

He openeth their ear to discipline and commandeth that they return from iniquity; but if they obey not they shall perish by the sword (Job 36: 10, 12).

JESUS CONDEMNED.

S. S. Lesson for June 5. Matt. 27:11-26.
Golden Text, I. Tim. 1:15.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

IT was the testimony of one of the thieves who was crucified with Jesus, "We receive the due reward of our deeds, but this man hath done nothing amiss" (Luke 23:41). The same statement made by the Holy Ghost through the lips of Peter on the day of Pentecost, was mighty to convict three thousands souls of their sin in crucifying him. The responsibility of condemning him was laid upon the Jewish nation, and their ignorance of their own Scriptures was the cause. But the Jewish nation were guilty only of disregarding the Old Testament Scriptures in their rejection of the Messiah. "Of how much sorer punishment" shall the guilty church of Christ be thought worthy which has ignored the Old and New Testaments, and which practically ignores the Lord's second coming!

Jesus condemned! No man had been able to answer his question, "Which of you convinceth me of sin" (John 8:46)? Who could give the lie to Peter when he affirmed of Jesus, "Who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth" (I. Peter 2:22, R.V.)? Yet he was condemned by men who were themselves "condemned already," because they had not believed on the name of the only begotten Son of God (John 3:18). He knew it was coming to this; he had read in the Scriptures "the things concerning himself" (Luke 24:27); he knew from Isa. 53. that he should not only be despised, but rejected also, and therefore condemned. He knew that men would hide their faces from him, and he that had gone about "doing good and healing all that were oppressed of the devil" (Acts 10:38), should nevertheless not be "esteemed." He knew and accepted the place of the Sin-bearer, and all that it entailed of shame and grief. He knew that by oppression and unjust judgment his life should be taken away. "Although he hath done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth." He accepted the will of God in the Scriptures which others rejected, and was the Lamb "that openeth not her mouth."

THE ECCE HOMO ARCH IN JERUSALEM, THE TRADITIONAL SCENE OF THE CONDEMNATION.

But although the Jewish nation was chargeable with the awful deed of putting to death the Prince of Life, yet it could not have been without the consent of one man, a Roman, and at that time the only man who could sign the death warrant. That man was Pontius Pilate. The chief priests and elders, foiled in their attempt to substantiate a charge against Jesus when he stood before the high-priest and the false witnesses whom they had hired not agreeing together, they had brought him to Pilate. He, convinced of the innocence of Jesus, and glad to shirk the responsibility of either condemning or acquitting him, sent him to Herod, but this expedient did not answer: a second time uncondemned he was returned upon the hands of Pilate: he must take the responsibility.

The only plausible excuse which the Jews had for examining him was that he had permitted the multitude to cry, "Blessed is the King that cometh in the name of the Lord, Hosanna in the highest," when he rode into Jerusalem on an ass's colt, in the midst of an unarmed rabble, when, instead of causing any disturbance in Jerusalem, he only "healed the blind and the lame" in the temple, and quietly returned to Bethany. It was a poor pretext that the safety of the public was in danger from this meek and lowly man. But it was all that Pilate had to go upon, and therefore his question, "Art thou the King of the Jews?" "Thou sayest," was the only answer. And no more could he wring from the patient, kingly Lamb of God. Knowing well how such silence would be interpreted, he who had for thirty-three years been laying down his life for man in will and deed, not pleasing himself (Rom. 15:3), nor living for himself, was quite ready, by death to consummate this daily dying to himself. He made no effort to prevent it.

But Pilate! Could he be a party to such a travesty of justice as to condemn a man against whom no charge could stand? Would he dare to take upon himself so awful a responsibility? Alas, this man, who seems to have been one who wished to do right, had one great weakness. To ensure popularity, he sold himself to the will of the people. Instead of boldly declaring that he would not consent to the execution of an innocent man, he tried to get the people to ask for the liberation of Jesus as a favor to them. They were entitled to the release of one prisoner at their annual feast, and if they would choose Jesus that would solve the difficulty. Probably he thought that if the alternative was made between a man so dangerous to society as the notable insurrectionist and murderer, Barabbas, and Jesus, whose words and deeds blessed, everybody, they would certainly choose Jesus, and so he might succeed in delivering him. Pilate had miscalculated: he had given the people their choice: they had taken it, and he must now sign the death-warrant of him whom he knew to be a just man, if not the Messiah for whom the Jews were looking. Popular feeling taking advantage of the powerless governor, and urged on by the chief priests and rulers, rose to an excitement, with the reiterated cry, "Let him be crucified." Pilate feared a tumult; but he dreaded the responsibility of condemning Jesus. Taking water he washed his hands before the multitude, saying, "I am innocent of the blood of this just person: see ye to it." "His blood be on us and on our children," was the daring reply. A prayer that God has not failed to answer to the letter! And the deed was done. Pilate released Barabbas, but Jesus he delivered to be crucified!

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

SAD in all its aspects was this trial and condemnation of Christ. The accounts given by the four evangelists, when woven into one narrative, give a vivid idea of the scene. The Roman Governor roused from his slumbers at five o'clock in the morning by the tumult around his palace, coming down to ascertain the cause, and finding the mob led by the priests, and the one pale, unresisting Prisoner thrust to the front, with his hands tied behind his back. It was an awful spectacle. Pilate was used to such scenes, for these Jews were a difficult people to govern, with their strange beliefs, which he regarded as superstitions. But his plan was to humor them, and above all things, to avoid riots and disturbances. He did not want to exasperate them, because they might send complaints of him to the Emperor of certain acts of his administration which would not bear investigation. The priests, chagrined that they could not execute the sentence of their own Supreme Court, and humiliated at having to ask a Pagan, whom they despised, to ratify it, surlily demanded that he give his consent, as a matter of course. But Pilate knew the men, and was aware that they were capable of condemning a man to death on frivolous charges. So he demanded to know what crime the Prisoner was accused of committing. He speedily reached the conclusion that Christ was innocent. But he seemed to be friendless, and on the whole, there seemed to be less danger in yielding to the priests than in resisting them. After several vain attempts to save Christ from their fury, he let them have their way. It was the act of a weak, if seeking man, and it has given his nam immortality of infamy. He stands in tory as a warning to everyone who cl perceiving a duty, permits popular cl to keep him from performing it.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

Children and their Pets.

The Value of Animal Playthings in Child-L—Object-Lessons in Ethics and Nat-u History—A Word for the Donkey.

THE possession of animals as pets, plays an important part in the development of child-character. The benefit or disadvantage of the relationship between possessor and possessed is mutual. [illegible] should not have a live plaything unless [illegible] understands how to handle it kindly. [illegible]ild should be permitted to retain a pet which he is cruel, or which [illegible]e neglects. This rule is not so [illegible]u in the interest of the animal, [illegible]i that of the child. The manner [illegible]ich a child treats his pets develo[illegible]es in himself habits of cruelty, [illegible]ousness and thoughtlessness, [illegible]bits of gentleness, faithfulness, [illegible]nsiderateness. If mamma will [illegible]a a note of this fact, she may [illegible]ss Goldie, Fido, and Tabby, [illegible]er service in raising Carl and Ka[illegible] aright. The possession of pet should imply their conscien[illegible]t care. It is easier for mamma [illegible]d Fido and Tabby, and keep [illegible]e's cage in order (or have [illegible] do so), than to teach Carl and [illegible] to do these things.

[illegible] Fido, Tabby, and Goldie [illegible]t possibly do Carl and Katie [illegible]e good they should unless [illegible] and Katie are exercised and [illegible]ted through them in service. [illegible]rl and Katie become indifferent [illegible]amma need not scold; she can [illegible]y deprive the children of Fido, Tabby's and Goldie's company until they become more appreciative. Then, too, by taking a [illegible]ut of the kindergartner's book, [illegible]raining the children to habits of [illegible]telligent observation of the [illegible] of animals, she may make the [illegible] of pets so pleasing a task that [illegible] folks will need small coercion [illegible] matter of much more importance than we are apt to think.

[illegible]e little boy in our picture seems [illegible]e on excellent terms with his [illegible]nd donkey. Perhaps a good [illegible]teller might make the donkey [illegible]ore interesting by telling his [illegible]tle master what an important part that animal has played in [illegible]y, travel and commerce. The [illegible]ey, or ass, is mentioned in very [illegible]nt history, and its use probably antedates that of the horse. [illegible] an cavalry rode to battle on [illegible]ass. Asses were bearers of kings and queens, and the gift of a white [illegible] was well worth royal acceptance. This animal has ever been held in high esteem in the Orient, where its usefulness in all manner of service caused it to be considered the emblem of strong and patient labor. It was honored above all other animals, for our Lord rode on an ass when he made his triumphal entry into Jerusalem. This animal is employed now in many countries particularly in Southern Europe and the East; tourists always have amusing stories to tell of riding through Cairo and of climbing the Alps and Pyrenees donkey-back.

Pelted with Flowers.

During Queen Victoria's recent holiday sojourn on the Riviera, there was much to give her pleasure beside the honors paid her by President Faure and other great people. Her Majesty was particularly gratified by the kindness and respect which the humble French peasants around Cimiez showed her. On fine days the royal party took picnic teas out of doors. One of the most charming incidents of her stay was when the aged Queen drove into Nice to see the children's Battle of Flowers, and her carriage was thickly pelted with flowers by happy little folks, among whom were her Majesty's Battenberg grandchildren. The Queen has been so good and pious a woman that one is glad to hear of loving childish hands showering her with flowers.

Indian Names for Maize Foods.

The northern traveler in the South is usually surprised to find how important a part corn, or maize, and corn meal plays in southern cookery. It is the preferred stuffing for fowls, and is made up into innumerable bread forms. In colonial times, maize seems to have been more generally used in the northeastern states than at present. Alice Morse Earle writes that:

Colonists quickly learned from the Indians to harvest, grind, and cook the corn in many palatable ways. And the foods made from maize have retained to this day the names given by the aborigines, such as hominy, pone, suppawn, samp, succotash. Samp and samp porridge were soon favorite dishes. Samp is Indian corn pounded to a coarsely ground powder in a mortar. After these mortars were abandoned elsewhere, they were used on Long Island; and it was jestingly told that skippers in a fog could always get their bearings off the Long Island coast because they could hear the pounding of the samp-mortars.

A Son's Devotion.

A pretty story has been told of Herkomer, the great portrait painter, by Canon Wilberforce. The artist lives with his aged and dependent father in a splendid castle at Bashey. The father, a clay-modeller in past years, has resumed work but fears that age will affect his skill and leave his productions imperfect. Often after he retires at night, the son goes into his studio and contributes to his father's feeble efforts, the touch here and there, which corrects and beautifies. He has his reward when, in the morning the old man comes down, looks over his work, and rubbing his hands, exclaims joyfully: "Ha! ha! I can do as well as ever I did!"

Our Part.

"All that you and I are responsible for is doing our duty," says Dr. Theodore Cuyler. "Ours is the seeding, and God alone beholds the end of what is sown. How do we know how much good we accomplish when we do any good thing or utter any truth in love? Eternity will be full of surprises to us. Wait and see."

The Rose of Sharon.

Does everybody know that the Althea, our common acquaintance, is no less a plant than the Rose of Sharon? It is cousin to the cotton plant and the hollyhock. It is indigenous in the Orient, and its beauty, thriftiness, hardihood, and healing medicinal properties induced its cultivation in other countries. It quickly adapted itself to Occidental climate and soil. The single flowers are frequently larger than the double ones, but the colors are equally gay in both, and range through white, red, purple, and intermediate hues. Their hearts must all be full of honey, for we know the humming bird loves to flutter above and dip his bill into the Roses of Sharon.

THE FAMILY PET AND THE PATIENT BURDEN-BEARER.

Love Better Than Gold.

Within my little cottage
Are peace and warmth and light,
And loving welcome waiting
When I come home at night.
The polished kettle's steaming,
The snowy cloth is spread—
And close against my shoulder
There leans a smooth, brown head!
Her eyes are lit with laughter
(They light the world for me)—
"For how much would you sell me?
Now tell me, sir!" cries she.
'Tis then I answer, somehow,
Between a smile and tear:
"Not for all the gold in Klondike!
The gold in Klondike, dear!"

MATRIMONY IN CUBA.

How Matches are Made in the Beautiful Pearl of the Antilles.

IN the new and splendidly illustrated book, entitled "Columbia's War for Cuba,"* the author gives us this pleasant picture of courtship and matrimony:

With all the attractions that Cuba presents to the intending settler, it is doubtful if it will ever be popular with American young people, unless and until it changes some of its social customs. Old world ideas of the conventionalities to be observed in the relations of the sexes are in full force in the island. The American young gentleman discovers to his dismay that it is more difficult to make the acquaintance of a charming girl in Cuba than it is at home. If, according to the old adage, "faint heart never won fair lady" in other places, the bold wooer finds himself at a disadvantage in Cuba. The citadel must be captured, if captured at all, by a siege proceeding on clearly marked lines and by the regular approaches defined by public opinion.

The young man who discovers that his heart has been pierced by one of Cupid's arrows, must in some way make the acquaintance of the father of the young lady whose charms have impressed him. He must ingratiate himself with this personage, whom at home he would doubtless speak of irreverently as "the old man," and regard as by no means an essential factor in the matter. He is the only way in this case.

The young man must convince his sweetheart's father that he is of good character and a desirable kind of person to have as a friend of the family. This done, he has to be somewhat explicit, in the event of there being more than one marriageable daughter, as to which of the young ladies he desires to visit. If all goes well so far, the young man is "at liberty to call." He may call often, but he never has the happiness of finding the young lady alone. The mother, or some one to play the part of "duenna," is always with her when he calls, and she is never caught napping. She allows no whispering, nor any confidential talk. It is all very proper and formal, but a little dull. If this closer acquaintance has increased the young man's admiration, and if he has seen any signs on the girl's part, that encourage him to hope that she reciprocates his regard, he enters the second stage of his courtship. At home that would be "to propose to the girl," and learn his fate from her lips.

Not so in Cuba. The proper course there is to call in the assistance of his father. This is indispensable, and has sometimes proved an insurmountable obstacle. The young man has to convince his father of the desirability of the connection and to inspire him with some of his own enthusiasm. He does not always succeed, and then the preliminary work, already done, is wasted. But if he wins his father as an ally, that personage waits on the father of the girl and proposes the marriage. The two discuss the business side of the proposition, and if that ends satisfactorily the second stage is safely passed.

The precise point at which the prospective bride's consent is gained, is not clear, but it is assumed that her father has been in some way informed. The young man may then call in his new character as an accepted lover, but he does not get rid of the duenna. Her duties continue. He gets no kiss, no endearment, no exchange of tokens of affection, so precious to American lovers. Not until the marriage has actually taken place are the duenna's functions at an end. The ceremony of marriage is twofold. The parties repair, first of all, to the church, the bride attired in a dress chosen and provided by the bridegroom. The priest performs the marriage ceremony and is duly recompensed by the bridegroom or his father. Then the party proceeds to the town hall or a court of justice, where the two principals must answer certain questions and sign the record. This business completed, the party goes to the home of the bride, where her father has provided a feast, graded in splendor according to his position in society. Among the poor it is simply what they call a "pig-roast," in which a roast sucking-pig is the principal dish.

Presents to the bride from her family and friends are then in order. The festivities are continued for some hours, and when the last of the guests has danced himself tired and gone home, the bride and her husband are at liberty to depart to their new home. This has been furnished throughout by the bridegroom and his family, and, entering it, the young couple, safely through their many ordeals, commence their new life.

The Makers of the Republic.

From the Sermon Preached May 19, 1898, at the Opening of the Presbyterian General Assembly at Winona, Ind., by the Moderator, Rev. Sheldon Jackson, D.D.

Text: Begin to possess that thou mayest inherit the land (Deut. 2: 31).

IT is not without significance that America should have remained hidden from the civilized world until the close of the fifteenth century. For ages history had recorded in brick and stone, on papyrus, and parchment, the rise and growth, the decay and fall of nations in Asia, Africa and Europe; but the story of America remained a blank; its very existence was unknown.

REV. SHELDON JACKSON, D.D.

The Church of God, which in patriarchal days was established in the family of Abraham, and during the Old Testament dispensation was confined to his seed, with the coming of Christ was thrown open to "every kindred and tongue and people and nation." At first creeping along the shore of the Mediterranean to Rome, it spread over all Europe. But everywhere it was more or less complicated with and trammeled by the state, and occasionally used by the state for the oppression of the people. Heathen or Christian, there had always been in the religions of the world a connection between church and state.

The custom of ages had so entrenched itself in men's minds that it did not occur to them there could be a better way. And yet while this connection existed it was impossible for the church to secure an environment suitable to its highest development, an environment that would give it the widest freedom and make possible a "free church in a free state." To secure this it was necessary to get out from under the influence of the past; to find a new land, where ancient customs were not intrenched; where entangling alliances with the state could be thrown off—a new land, where the church could go back to the Spirit of Christ, and start anew in the conquest of the world. Such a land had God reserved for such a time, and he had prepared his Church to take possession of it.

Then was born a nation in righteousness. The nations of Europe and Asia; the nations of antiquity (except Israel), were born in war and conquest, in blood and ambition; but these United States were founded by those who sought first and foremost a land where they could worship God untrammeled by kings and governments; they came not for conquest but for civil and religious liberty. As the first official act of Columbus was the erection of the Cross of Christ upon the New World, so the first sounds heard by the native races on the shores of America were those of prayer and praise.

All the sunlit inlets of the dim woods rang
With the anthems of the free.

It is of interest to note in this connection that the first Protestant worship on the shores of America was by the French Presbyterians, the Huguenots, in 1562—fifty-eight years before the landing of the Mayflower at Plymouth Rock. Many and divers were the nationalities that sought homes in this new land. But those who principally molded and shaped affairs—the pilgrims of destiny and builders of empire, who laid foundations broad and deep for Christ and his church; the men above all others who laid enduring foundations for civil and religious liberty, were the Dutch and Scotch and Scotch Irish, Hollanders, Huguenots and Puritans.

The God-fitted men in the three Kingdoms of Great Britain, Holland, and France, the choicest material for the new republic on the shores of America. And through them were into American life and character the best and highest results of the past. It is also worthy of note that of these four prominent factors in our early American history, three—the Hollanders, Huguenots and Scotch and Scotch-Irish—were Presbyterian. And the fourth, the Pilgrim fathers, held in common with Presbyterians the Calvinistic creed, and many of their churches had the Presbyterian system of ruling elders, of whom Elder Brewster is a well-known example. These and kindred spirits from other lands, only in smaller numbers, were those, whom God in his providence had called out from the ripest civilization of Europe. Men of the highest ability, learning and character and religious consecration. And to whatever causes the historian or philosopher may ascribe the wonderful migration at an early date of Christian people to America, we must see in it over and above all the hand of God. It was his almighty hand that brought this land the brave old Hollanders, the Scotch Presbyterians, the English Dissenters, the Irish Calvinists, the Quakers, the glorious Huguenots, the hymn-loving Lutherans—the chosen seed of God called out from all lands to take possession of and develop this land for Christ. As the angels looked down upon that historic age they heard—

"The tread of pioneers,
Of nations yet to be—
The first low wash of waves,
Where soon shall roll a human sea."

Gaining a foothold upon the Atlantic seaboard, they gradually extended their settlements into the interior, and as they advanced the wild forests and Indians gave way before them. They overflowed the central and western New York and the Western Reserve; over the Alleghenies into the fertile valley of the Ohio; across the Blue Ridge into Tennessee and Kentucky; across the prairies of Indiana and Illinois into Michigan and Wisconsin and wherever they went the log church and log school-house were erected and the rude log homes of the settlers. Then the churches became strengthened, or by means of the Louisiana purchase (which took that mighty empire extending from the Gulf of Mexico diagonally across the continent two thousand miles to Puget Sound) out from under French papacy and called upon the church to "enter in and possess."

Scarce had the church time to grasp the magnitude of the added work before the annexation of Texas, and the close of the Mexican war took out from the blighting influence of Spanish Catholicism and added to Protestant control a region over 4 square miles larger than the original thirteen States. Once securely under the American flag, the marvelous stores of gold and silver in California, Nevada, Utah, Montana and Colorado were uncovered to an astonished world. The year 1867 Alaska, whose western limit places San Francisco east of the centre of the United States, was taken from the control of Greek Catholicism, and laid open to the American Church, and lo! our "Iceberg" astonishes the world by the extent and richness of its gold deposits, and the representatives from many lands are thronging into Alaska by the tens of thousands. This is the continent which God has reserved for his church.

"A glorious land,
With broad arms stretched from shore to shore
The proud Pacific chates her strand;
She hears the loud Atlantic's roar."

And this is the land which God has given his church to possess—to take and hold as a base of operations for the conquest of the world. Hear his voice speaking to the American churches: "I have you from ocean to ocean, from tropical gulf to frozen north, 'Begin to possess that thou mayest inherit the land.'" What goodly for situation, throned in the midst of the oceans! Not "a city," but a "continent" "set on a hill." From its height the church of the United States should cast out its beacon light eastward to the shores of dotalism and formalism of Europe and the heathenism of Africa; westward to the dead conservatism of Asia; and southward to the benighted millions of the "neglected continent." Was there ever a better base? Was there ever a stronger leverage for uplifting the race? Was there ever a grander theatre for action? And on this vantage ground God has placed the American Christian, the resultant combination of English tenacity, Scotch shrewdness, German steadiness, Celtic vivacity, Dutch sturdiness, Huguenot seriousness and Scandinavian thrift—the very best and highest type of character—a character that, brought under the sway of powerful religious motives, "full of faith and the Holy Ghost," becomes invincible in the conversion of the world.

A FOREIGN MISSION AT HOME.

He hold the position of Poet Laureate and Mem er of Honor in the Poetical Academy of Southern France, in consequence of his contributions to French poetry. Thus, it will be seen that by virtue of his culture, and of his knowledge by actual residence in their own countries of the customs and characters, as well as the tongues of foreigners, Dr. Malan is well fitted to deal with that element of city life in which his labors have been so effective.

For the past eight years, Dr. Malan conducted on an average, four services each Sunday, in French, Italian, English, and sometimes Hebrew. He has given instruction and compiled books and hymnals in different languages, and inspired and organized much good work in the distribution of sacred and educational literature among the French and Italians. The monthly organ of the Mission, Roma, is an interesting trilingual literary and religious magazine. Bi-weekly services are held in the Methodist and Presbyterian churches in the vicinity. There are several flourishing day and evening schools, and the Sunday School is well attended. An Epworth League chapter is materially assisting the pastor in his work; and a French Christian Endeavor Society is in successful operation.

Our readers will be interested in the following letter concerning the French and Italian mission from Dr. Malan to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in spite of the fact that it makes such modest claims in the face of large accomplishment of good:

"As for our premises I have little worth showing, except four or five plain rooms, plainly furnished, used in turn for services in three different languages, Sunday School, day school, reading-room, Italian Epworth League, French Christian Endeavor, sewing meetings, social meetings, etc. All the children are taught by American teachers and speak English. Other languages have been discarded except in connection with new arrivals from across the sea. We grow a new generation of Americans. French and Italian services are held for grown people only. Our 150 Sunday School children are all Catholic-born, the majority being Italians. A few of the French are Huguenots, and most of the Swiss are Protestants. During the past seven years about 240 Italian Catholics were converted and joined the M. E. Church, and an about equal number of French also joined.

"My fellow-workers are M. Prestifilippo, my local preacher; Mr. Th. Serafini, President of the Italian Epworth League; Mrs. M. Stillwell, Superintendent of our Italian Sunday School, and Miss L. The Ideal Soldier.

If ever a soldier made battle noble and warfare pure, it was Bayard, the "knight without fear and without reproach." He stands as the ideal soldier of romance and history. Adulation could not corrupt him; conquest could not make him arrogant or cruel. His sword was ready to leave its scabbard in defence of the weak, his head to bow with reverence before all womanhood. The man, who almost single-handed held a bridge against two hundred Spaniards, is worthy of all men's imitation in the care with which he guarded his moral character from even the appearance of evil.

Before he took up the pursuit of arms, he was under the tutelage of his wise and good uncle, the Bishop of Grenoble, who trained him in peaceful arts. His mother's parting counsel was:

"I command three things of thee. . . . The first, that above all things thou shalt love and fear God's service. . . . Each night and each morning recommend thyself to him, and he will assist thee. The second, that thou be gentle and courteous unto all men, keeping thyself from pride. . . . Be loyal in word and in deed. Be a man of your word, and God will reward you. Thirdly, be charitable to the poor."

Bayard answered: "Madam, my mother, for your good teaching, as humbly as possible, I thank you, and hope so faithfully to follow it, by the grace of God, him to whom you recommend me, as to content you."

This was in the fifteenth century, but we certainly cannot improve upon it.

Spring Days at Mont-Lawn.

Our Children's Home Getting Ready for the Summer Opening — The Hillsides and Woods in Vernal Dress.

What we do for the tender little ones,
Do we not do for Thee?
"If ye do it unto the least of these,
Ye do it as unto me."

AGAIN the "time of the singing of birds has come," and the woods and fields around beautiful Mont Lawn are studded with the blossoms of spring. Our Children's Home will soon be reopened and hundreds of its little tenement waifs will wake the echoes with laughter and frolic. Since Mont-Lawn was opened for the first time in the summer of 1894, 7,773 little tenement children have spent their happy summer outings there. Four summers—three months each—make in the aggregate just twelve months. Could more good for the money spent be crowded into one twelve months than this? "I think we may safely say," wrote Miss Russell, a Mont-Lawn teacher and caretaker, "that every child who has been at Mont-Lawn has gone home happier, healthier and better in every way for having been there." These more than seven thousand little folks being made better and happier themselves, make others better and happier also. We believe the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have never done a kindlier or nobler philanthropic work than when they made possible to slum children the blessing of a ten days' outing in the country. They have sowed seed in good ground in thus taking advantage of the time when a child's heart is virgin soil, and planting there the good seed before tares are so thickly sown and deeply rooted that the good seed has no chance to grow. The results of this work will appear hereafter in purer, better and nobler lives. Many a little one has all unconsciously been led to Christ through the kind ministrations and the hospitality of Mont-Lawn.

Last summer there were 2,219 tenement children entertained at the Home, the largest number received in any season since the opening in 1894. During the coming summer the need for helping the children and our opportunity for doing so will be enlarged.

Three dollars pays for a ten days' outing for one child, covering cost of transportation, care, shelter, food and medical attention. To clothe the waifs, also, is often a necessity, and the Home does this as far as possible. The need has been met in various beautiful ways in the Home's past experience. Packages of strong, neatly made little summer gowns have come to the Home matron, accompanied by loving notes from the makers to the little ones who should wear them. Mothers of more fortunate little ones, who recall how happy a small daughter was over each new dress; how proud a little son was over his first trousers, may have some idea of the happiness hundreds of times repeated every summer at Mont-Lawn, when little children of the poor are "mothered" by such gifts from kind friends.

Miss Helen Collins will again have charge of the Home as matron, and will have as her corps of assistants a staff of Christian young women who are experienced caretakers and teachers. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD invokes the kindly co-operation of its readers in this pleasant work in behalf of the tenement children. All donations of money for this work should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York, and will be promptly acknowledged.

Friends who have been personally interested in our Children's Home and its work in past seasons, have written us encouragingly, and stating that they are looking forward with pleasure to the reopening at Mont-Lawn this year. Mrs. J. V. N. Talmage, of Amoy, China, has forwarded a contribution of fifteen dollars, which will give five poor tenement boys and girls a delightful outing. This lady, though on the other side of the globe, has felt a deep interest in the Mont-Lawn work, and has been a regular contributor to the Fresh-Air Fund.

The Three Oldest Bibles.*

THE three oldest Bibles in the world are all written in Greek and are very ancient. The names by which they are known are "The Alexandrian" MS., "The Vatican" MS., "Sinaitic" MS. These three faded old books are very precious indeed, and are very carefully treasured by the nations who possess them. It is rather remarkable that they now belong to the three great branches of the Christian Church—the Greek, the Roman Catholic, and the Protestant Churches. One of them, the Sinaitic (known as Codex Aleph), is in the library at St. Petersburg, and the Greek Church greatly prizes it. Another, the Vatican (known as Codex B), is the valued treasure of the Roman Catholic Church and is in the Vatican library at Rome. And another, the Alexandrian (known as Codex A), is in the British Museum, London, and is of course, very greatly prized.

It is not very easy to fix with certainty the exact date at which they were written, but we may feel sure that we are near the mark if we say they belong to the fourth and fifth centuries. If this be so, we may date them as from about the year 301 to 450 A.D. But some readers may ask: "How do we know the age of these manuscripts, if they have no dates upon them?" There are several ways of getting to know this, which I may explain in a few sentences. The form of the letters in which a manuscript is written; the way in which the words are joined together; and the plainness or ornamentation of the initial letters cad is a guide in fixing the date of a Greek document. If you ever look at a Greek manuscript, and find that all the writing is in capital letters and that the words in one line are all joined together without any division, you may conclude that it is of very great age. It may be written thus, only in Greek characters:

FORGODSOLOVEDTHEWORLDTHAT
ULDNOTPERISHBUTHAVEEVERLA
STINGLIFEFORGODSENTNOTHISSO
NINTOTHEWORLDTOCONDEMNTHE

The documents written in this way are called uncial manuscripts, and are always ancient. Those which are modern are written in a running or flowing hand, and are called cursive. All these old Bibles are uncial manuscripts. If we could visit the British Museum we would see many copies of the Bible and other sacred books with most beautifully illuminated headings and initial letters. We would generally find that these are comparatively modern works. But the very ancient Greek manuscripts, of which there are many beside the three under notice, are usually very plain, and always in the uncial style.

The Vatican Bible.

The Vatican Manuscript is kept in the Vatican Library, which was founded by Nicholas V., about A.D. 1448, and this manuscript appears in the first catalogue, compiled in the year 1475. Nothing is known of its previous history, but its present custodians have guarded it with jealous care, and access to it was often difficult to obtain. But thirty years ago, Pius IX. was the occupant of Peter's chair, and a photographic simile was issued. We notice that it is in book form, having more than 700 leaves about twelve inches square. Each page contains three columns, except the poetical books of the Old Testament, which are in double columns, and the writing is all in capital letters. It is almost a complete copy of the Bible. It has lost Genesis chapters 1 to 46, Psalms 105 to 137, and all that follows Hebrews 9. 14. As we look at this book, we may conclude that it is the oldest Greek Bible known to the world. I say known to the world, because there may be other precious treasures older even than this hid away among the rubbish of some of the convents and other places, some day to be brought to light, as was the Sinaitic manuscript. . . . But this is the oldest at present known. It carries us back probably to the beginning of the fourth century. For more than 1,500 years this manuscript has been in the world; and it is a standing proof that if our Bible is an invention, it must have been forged before the fourth century, when this manuscript was written.

The Sinaitic Writing.

The Sinaitic Manuscript is also in book form: each page contains four columns, except the poetical books of the Old Testament, which are arranged as in Codex B. It is believed to be almost, if not quite, as ancient as the Vatican MS. But its story is most remarkable. For generations, perhaps even for centuries, it lay beneath the books and rubbish of a convent, and was only discovered, as we say, by accident. There was a famous German scholar named Dr. Tischendorf, who devoted nearly the whole of his life to searching for and studying ancient manuscripts of the Bible. It seems that he traveled through many parts of the East, searching all the old libraries into which he could obtain access. In the year 1844, he was paying a visit to St. Catherine's convent at the foot of Mt. Sinai, when he made a fortunate discovery. In the hall of the convent there stood a basket filled with parchments ready for the fire, and he was told two similar basketfuls had been burned. On examining the contents of the basket, he was surprised to find parchment leaves of the Greek Old Testament, the most ancient he had ever seen. He was unable to conceal his joy, and was allowed to take away one-third or about forty-three sheets. Though the lot was destined for the fire, his joy at his discovery aroused the suspicions of the monks, and led them to think that perhaps the manuscripts were valuable, and so they would not give him any more. In the year 1859, he was again at the convent, armed with a commission from the Russian Emperor. . . . To his great delight Tischendorf found not only some of the fragments which he had seen before, but the other parts of the Old Testament complete.

The Alexandrian Writing.

The Alexandrian Manuscript, so called from once having formed part of the library at Alexandria, is the third oldest Bible in the world. It is in four volumes. This manuscript was probably written about the middle of the fifth century. It is written on very thin vellum, and has been in possession of England since it was presented to King Charles I., in 1628, by Cyril, Patriarch of Constantinople. It contains both the Old and New Testaments, though it is not quite perfect. It is marvelous to find a written document of such great age so perfect as this is. The New Testament seems to have suffered more than the Old. Only ten leaves are missing from the Old Testament; but the New has lost more. Twenty-five leaves have gone from the Gospel by Matthew, two from the Gospel by John, and three from Corinthians . . . It is quite worthy of note that the scholarly men who in the reign of King James, made our authorized English Bible, had no access to these three valuable old documents. The Vatican manuscript was in Rome, and the Pope of that day was not the man to let Protestants have the use of this book. The Sinaitic manuscript was buried in the convent at Sinai, and its existence was not known to the company of revisers. And the Alexandrian Manuscript was received in England about seventeen years after the authorized revisers had done their work. The scholars who have prepared our excellent Revised Bible were fortunate. All these three old manuscripts were at their disposal.

Two Elements of Success.*

The story of Peter Cooper's life is very suggestive. . . . He started his glue factory in a little, old stable. But he kept on making glue until he amassed his millions and was enabled to erect Cooper Institute, which gives education to more than twelve hundred boys yearly. . . . My friends, watch the small things, because the drops of water coming down the mountain side will form into a broad river. . . . Self-control is another element in the making of a successful career. When Pilate said to Christ, "Art thou a King?" it was not necessary for Christ to answer that question. Of course, Christ was a King, because he controlled himself. How well Christ controlled himself. In the face of the strongest temptations he was able to say, "Get thee behind me, Satan!" What miserable failures men can make of themselves simply because they do not master self.

y will pardon, dear lady, a very e ression of opinion, and the use h ely proverb, I should say that w simply be "jumping out of the s-p into the fire," should you enter the oposed marriage. Let me tell h an arrangement of this kind e turned out within the bounds of my a nce. My friend was a widow, g fortably in a little home with ns cher own. The house was a tiny and she kept no servant; but she d her own little work without able, d she lived as cozily as a bird a ng. To her door one day there e ting an elderly farmer, who ed le lands and a big house. This r sented to her that she could fr her small sphere into a large , fr poverty to affluence by listening to his suit. In a weak moment she consented to be married to her wooer, a person of whom she knew nothing as an individual beyond the fact that he was an elder in the church, and a man known far and wide through the county for his thrift and his large bank account. Alas, poor woman, when once she was established in the wide house, she found herself a slave in a way she had never dreamed of in her life. She had to wash and iron and cook and scrub for a large number of hired men. The thrifty husband did not provide her any help; did not even do any chores himself which he could leave to her; and the result of it all was, that after a year of most exhausting bondage and utterly distressing back-breaking work, without a kind word or a kind look, she had a serious illness; nearly became insane, and her very life was only saved by the intervention of some relatives, who came and took her away from her husband.

THIS man who offers marriage to you may be of a very different stamp; but let me tell you, with the utmost positiveness, that there can be no happiness in marriage unless there be beneath it the strong foundation stone of true, pure love. Blessed is spinsterhood, wherever it is found, as compared with the lot of an unloved wife. Do listen to what I say, and let your wooer go his way and find a fitting mate in some woman whom he can love, or at least, let him learn to love you and you in return learn to care for him, before you think of such a thing as joining your fate with his for all the rest of your life. Why not insist upon a proper business arrangement in your kinsman's house? If you should go away and he were obliged to hire a housekeeper, he would have to pay her living wages. Why not insist upon having them yourself, as you would from a stranger? If he is not willing to pay you what you deem a sufficient amount for the work you do, it would be much more self-respecting and a great deal better all around, for you to pack your trunk and take your little cousin and go away to some house where you can work and receive a salary. If no such place opens in your immediate neighborhood, perhaps in the next large city there may be some opening, although I never like to advise people to leave the town where they have friends, for the great city where everybody around them will be strangers. Still, do not sit idly to suffer. As the poet says:

"Act, act in the living present,
Heart within and God o'erhead."

New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.—Free to all Readers.

All readers will be glad to know that the new botanical discovery, Alkavis, has proved an assured cure for all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or by disordered action of the Kidneys or urinary organs. It is a wonderful discovery, with a record of 1200 hospital cures in 30 days. It acts directly upon the blood and kidneys, and is a true specific, just as quinine is in malaria. Rev. W. B. Moore, D.D., of Washington, testifies in the New York Christian Witness that Alkavis completely cured him of Kidney and bladder disease of many years' standing. Many ladies also testify to its curative powers in disorders peculiar to womanhood. So far the Church Kidney Cure Company, No. 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, are the only importers of this new remedy, and they are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Female Complaints, or other affliction due to improper action of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We advise all Sufferers to send their names and address to the company, and receive the Alkavis free. It is sent to you entirely free, to prove its wonderful curative powers.

Hood's Sarsaparilla has power to give the blood richness and purity, and upon the healthy condition of the blood the health of the whole system depends. Take only Hood's this spring.

NO SAFER OR MORE EFFICACIOUS REMEDY can be had for Coughs, or any trouble of the throat, than "Brown's Bronchial Troches."

The advantage of using an article that is pure and always uniform, is, you are certain of having the same satisfactory results. Eight prominent Professors of Chemistry, of national reputation, have analyzed the Ivory Soap, and the variation in each is so trifling that the quality of the "Ivory" may be considered reliably uniform. Each pronounced it to be remarkably pure, and a superior laundry soap.

OUR ORPHANS AT OORFA.

An Interesting Letter from Miss Shattuck, the American Missionary.

MISS CORINNA SHATTUCK, the well-known Christian missionary at Oorfa, in Armenia, in whose charge are the orphan children bereaved of their parents by the great massacre at that place, sends us a most interesting letter, giving account of the progress of her work. She says:

Dear "Christian Herald" Friends:

Since last writing you we have a new member, whom I add to your own list of children—a boy of fourteen, whose aged widowed mother had long been promised a home for her son, when she must leave him. She had three grown sons, all unmarried, who were sacrificed, two being slain before her eyes, and the third cared for by us some two or three weeks, only to pass away, from the effects of the wounds received. The good mother had lost her spectacles, and her Bible was half destroyed when her house was burned. One of her early requests was for a full Bible and "glasses," that she might refresh herself by the Word of comfort long familiar to her. She ministered to others, going about as a Bible-reader. Lewone continued in school and devotedly helped his mother till she became too feeble to leave her room, when I employed a good widow as nurse to care for her, and in two weeks more she was released, passing away while praying. We brought Lewone immediately to our home. He is a good boy and doing well in his lessons. He seems peculiarly without relatives. I would be pleased if someone should assume his support for the next five years, willing to send him to college if he prove worthy. We must start him, as over twenty other of our older boys have already been started, in some sort of trade. I would prefer that all our boys, when sufficiently advanced to do so, begin to support themselves and complete their education by alternate teaching and study.

Our boys are not specially quarrelsome, yet in so large a household occasional "differences" arise. I found three in an unhappy state last Sabbath, and they told me that they desired reconciliation "before Easter." They came together, talked over the matter, mutually forgave, and then each asked forgiveness of God. That day my personal text had been, "according to the riches of his glory . . . strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man" (Eph. 3: 16). I thought I saw in these dear boys the beginning of the Spirit's power. Some of our boys are doing Sunday School work, having little children to teach. I told the boys, Sabbath evening, of something written by supporters of one set, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD boys said: "We never get any word from our good friends." I explained, and they understood, but I thought someone with leisure might possibly enjoy sending me a letter, specially for this set of boys. C. SHATTUCK.

Oorfa, Turkey, April 12, 1898.

The World's Navies.

A German publication, Zur Guten Stunde, publishes a unique illustration affording a comparison of the relative strength of the seven chief maritime powers of the world at the present time. The drawings are made to scale, and proportioned according to the relative strength of the nations represented, both as to tonnage and numbers. Britain easily leads the list, with a navy, which, in point of armament and general offensive and defensive strength, is practically unequaled. France is second in the line, and although in grand aggregate of tonnage and numbers she falls greatly below Britain's standard, Russia's navy, though large, is by no means first class, although she is now building a number of ships which will be the equal of any afloat. Italy's navy comprises some gigantic warships. In point of numbers, there is little difference between the United States and Spanish navies. On this subject the London Sketch observes:

"There is a marked difference between these, in that the Americans, an essentially practical people, are apt to be thorough in their undertakings, and their warships are known to be exceptionally well found. In the case of Spain, the reverse holds good, and the fact that the pay of the officers and men is provided irregularly, and that there is understood to be a leakage in the handling of the money provided for the navy tempts one to believe that in the event of hostilities between the two nations, the result would be a foregone conclusion."

Confirmed Sins.

Sot-smelling drunkards can be found ow-days on the little island of Pemba, ear Zanzibar.

The principal settlement has suddenly been hang from a dirty. disreputable village into fragrant with perfume; and that radi- change was brought about solely by the ion of alcohol. Since the natives—egro and a mixed population—had become victims of alcohol to such an extent that there were more drunken people to be seen than sober ones. the British residents prohibited the importation of alcoholic beverages. to stop the evil. Then the native merchants began to import "eau de cologne" in quantities. of course not the real article, but liquor of the worst sort, perfumed and packed in cologne bottles. Now the drunkards of Pemba get their fill of alcohol in this disguise. and the worse the drinker the better he smells! There are some fashionable circles in modern society where the most horrible vices are practised, but people seem to think the curse is taken off because of the perfumed surroundings. But lust and drunkenness and bestiality are none the less sins against God. and not a whit less fatal to the human soul. because their revels are held in a mansion instead of a dive. You may perfume sin all you will, but the fact remains that the "wages of sin is death."

Behind the Cloud the Sun Still Shines.

When the Hindoos along the Ganges began to notice the recent eclipse of the sun. they watched with terror what they supposed to be the overpowering of their beloved divinity by the demon of darkness. They gave themselves up to prayer and bathing in the sacred river.

The people on the bank knelt down and prayed, shouting. "Hori boh!" (God. I cry!). Some covered themselves with dust and others washed themselves in the river. Many thousands of people were gathered together, men. women and children. and all were in a frantic. excited state lest the sun should be altogether swallowed by the demon. and never shine any more. PRAYER.

The Trial and Triumph of Prayer. I. Kings 18:42-46.

How familiar are the words, "Let us pray!" Yet how seldom do we realize all that they imply! Will the God who called the universe into being, in very deed listen to our appeals? May we hope that we, insignificant mortals on a world so small that it is a mere atom in comparison with the vast orbs which circle through space, can reach the ear of the Creator, and that he will hearken to our words? His revelation assures us that we may, and we are encouraged to present our petitions in the full confidence that God will hear and answer. But it is no light matter to enter into that presence. We are invited to address him as "Our Father," but it is well that we should remember who and what he is. The vain words, the heedless utterances, might well halt on our lips as we think of his majesty and purity and wisdom and power. That we have access to him should fill us, not only with joy, but with reverence and humility. We ought to feel that the clamorous urgency with which we beg for some boon for ourselves is altogether improper in our position. To us, short-sighted mortals that we are, the blessing that we crave may appear unspeakably important, and we plead for it as if our importunity must wring it from his hands. Sometimes the prayer that is put up has more of the tone of a creditor demanding that a promise be fulfilled than of a humble suppliant pleading for a blessing. How patient God is with such people, and how graciously he deals with them! But will all our prayers be answered? Does a wise father grant every request that is made to him by the child he loves? Some requests have to be denied for the sake of the child himself, and some for the sake of the general good of the family. But even when he denies a prayer he is not unsympathetic. Christ's prayer in the garden was denied, but an angel came and strengthened him. Paul's prayer, thrice repeated for the removal of the thorn in the flesh, was rejected, but grace sufficient for endurance was given to him. So when we speak of the trial and triumph of prayer, we must remember that God's ways are not as our ways, nor his thoughts as our thoughts.

THE GLORIOUS CITY.

Glimpses of the City Without a Temple. Rev. 21:22-27.

One of the most unexpected details in the description the seer of Patmos gives of the city he saw in his vision, is that there was no temple therein. Can it be possible that the ideal city, the place to which all good men hope to go when they have done with this life, is a city without a temple? It appears so, and we have to look for the reason of it. As we read on, we find that there is no night, that there is no need of sun or moon to give it light, there is no sorrow in it, nor death, nor misery. Light, purity, happiness, glory—all these impressed themselves on John's mind, and they suggest the thought that the city was all temple. There was no need for a material building in a city where every heart was a temple consecrated and dedicated to him whose glory lighted the city. Our houses of worship here are refuges to which good people go to be away from the sordid cares and the perplexing worries and the impure associations, in order that they may worship God in peace. But in that city there are none of these things. There, undisturbed, they may worship God anywhere, and no incongruous or uncongenial sight or sound forces itself on eye or ear. Inexpressibly sweet and delightful and peaceful it must be, beyond anything we can conceive. How much of it is figurative and how much is sober reality we cannot tell. Probably John, like Paul, found it impossible to describe it, and uses only images to bring it within our comprehension. It is useless to conjecture, but his description emphasizes a duty. "There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth." As we look into our own hearts, our hopes sink within us. Preparation there must be for entrance there, and that preparation must take place here. How much remains to be done within us before we are fit to enter! We have need to pray continually for the influences of the Holy Spirit and to welcome any discipline which shall remove impurity from us.

Blindness in the Orient.

In Oriental lands, ophthalmia is a very general universal affliction. Travelers in Syria and Egypt describe the condition of multitudes of the poor, who have become sufferers from ailments of the eyes, as extremely pitiful.

One of the many institutions established in Palestine by Christian people is the Home and School for Blind Girls in Jerusalem. No other special institution exists for blind women and girls throughout Palestine, Syria and Egypt. It is the outcome of a day school commenced in April, 1896, by Miss Ford, a lady missionary. A few young girls, who were anxious to learn, attended the school. There are now a number of girls in the school, which has been made a permanent home for these little sufferers. They are taught by the "Braille System for the Blind," and, besides the usual lessons, have learned many hymns in Arabic and many texts of Scripture. Arrangements are now under way for holding weekly Gospel meetings for blind men and women, and of thus spreading the good news among a much-neglected and ignorant class. Rev. J. Longley Hall, of Jerusalem, will answer all inquiries concerning the work.

CHRIST'S MISSION.

His own Definition of the Purpose for which he Came. John 10: 7-18.

Tartarlithine in Rheumatism.

DR. M. L. SMAIL, OLCOTT, VT., writes: "Your Tartarlithine has proved a wonderful weapon for rheumatism. I have used a very great quantity of it in the last three or four months and I have never seen anything like it. I had one case who had tried all of the alkaline lithiates, and everything else. He has had rheumatism all his life, and nothing completely stopped all the manifestations of the disease like Tartarlithine, which did completely, with one bottle.

I have another old man, who travels much on the road peddling, who has been lame with rheumatism for five years, and one bottle cured all lameness, and he says he has not felt as well in five years as now. These are only the two worst cases of many that I have tried it on."

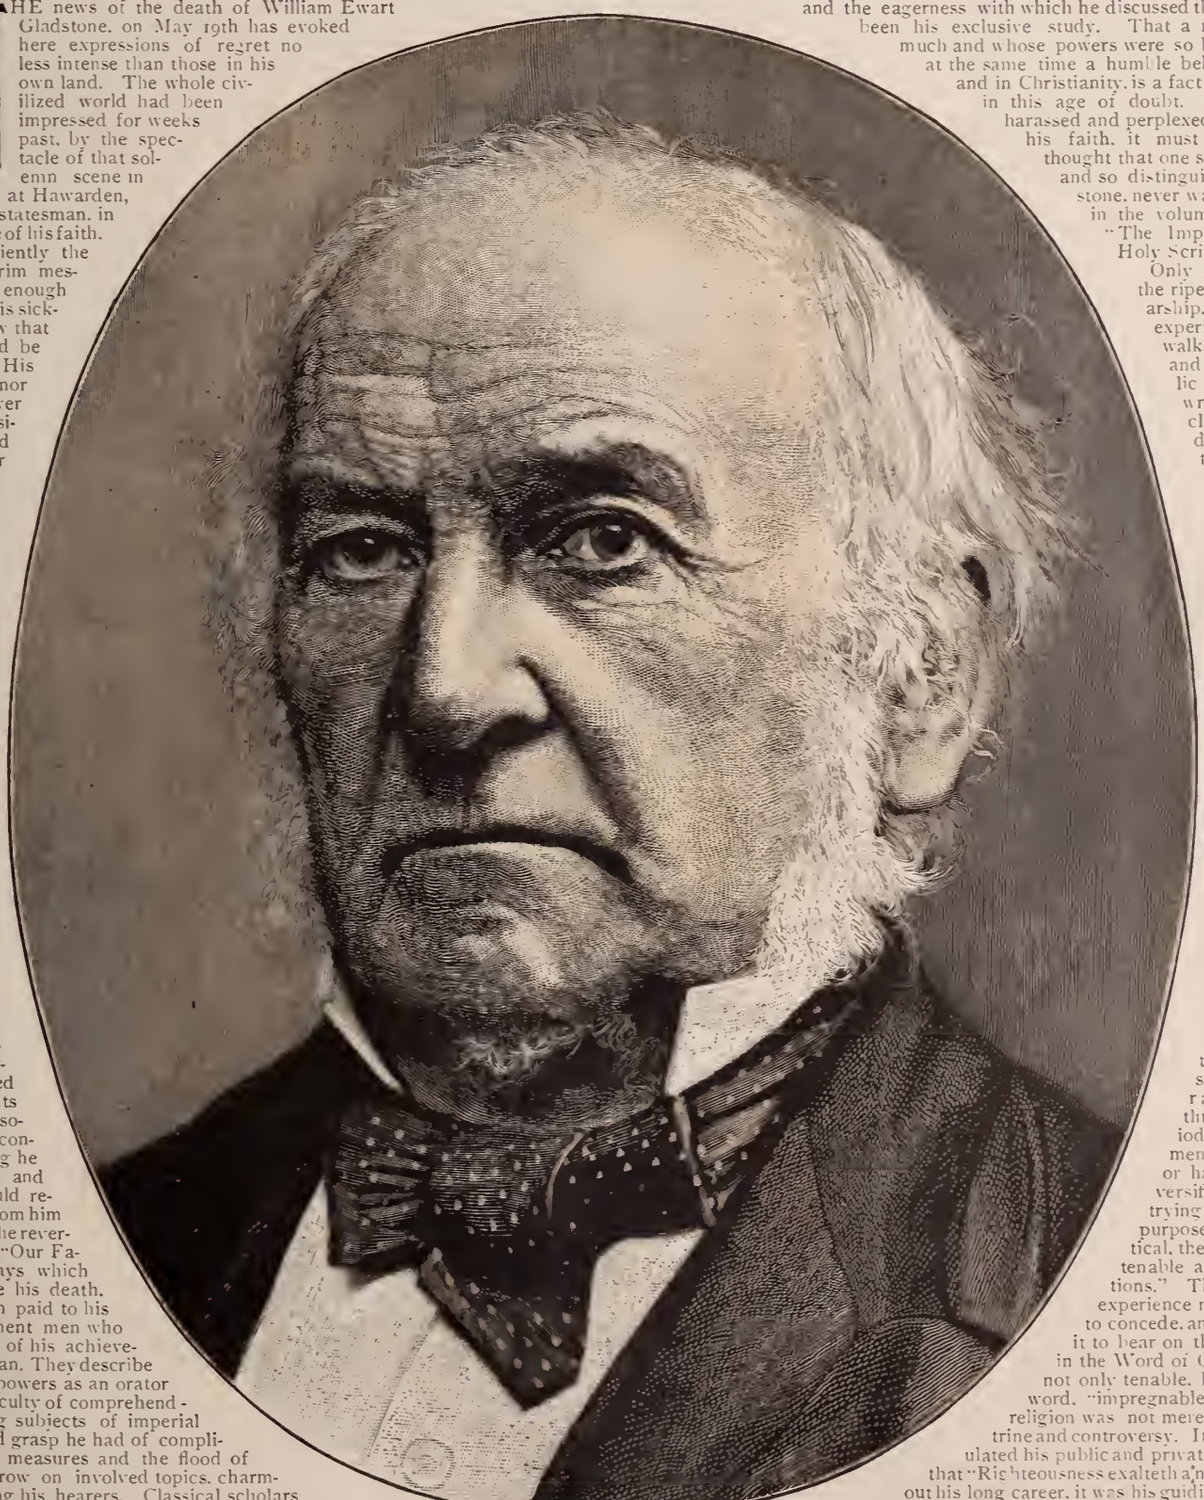
THE CAREER OF ENGLAND'S "GRAND OLD MAN" CLOSED IN CONFIDENT HOPE OF A GLORIOUS IMMORTALITY.

THE news of the death of William Ewart Gladstone, on May 19th has evoked here expressions of regret no less intense than those in his own land. The whole civilized world had been impressed for weeks past, by the spectacle of that solemn scene in et chamber at Hawarden, e the veteran statesman, in cm confidence of his faith. s awaiting patiently the ons of the grim mes- . Classical scholars ave dwelt on the marvelous knowledge he had of the rit of antiquity and on the critical skill which proved his profound study and appreciation of classical lore. Per- son friends describe the surprise with which they listened h conversation in the company of learned scientists, when he showed a knowl- e equal to their own of such subjects as chemistry, biology, astronomy and geology, and the eagerness with which he discussed them, as if they had been his exclusive study. That a man who knew so much and whose powers were so brilliant, should be at the same time a humble believer in the Bible and in Christianity, is a fact full of significance in this age of doubt. To the Christian, harassed and perplexed by the assaults on his faith, it must be a reassuring thought that one so able, so learned, and so distinguished as Mr. Gladstone, never wavered in his faith in the volume which he called, "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture."



The Late Rt. Hon. Wm. E. Gladstone.

Only eight years ago in the ripe maturity of scholarship, and after his long experience in the highest walks of statesmanship and the turmoil of public life, Mr. Gladstone wrote a series of articles with the avowed design of proving that no reasonable man need surrender his belief in the Word of God. They proved that he was thoroughly acquainted with all that had been said by the leaders of modern thought on the other side of the question and, though he modestly disclaimed the right to teach with authority on the subject, he gave good reason for his right to be heard. These articles, he said, in closing, "form the testimony of an old man in the closing period of his life. It is rendered with no special qualification, but possibly this one: Few persons of our British race have lived through a longer period of incessant argumentative contention, or have had a more diversified experience in trying to ascertain, for purposes immediately practical, the difference between tenable and untenable positions." The value of such an experience none would hesitate to concede, and when he brought it to bear on the question of faith in the Word of God, the result was not only tenable, but, to use his own word, "impregnable." Mr. Gladstone's religion was not merely a matter of doctrine and controversy. It pervaded and regulated his public and private life. He believed that "Righteousness exalteth a nation" and throughout his long career, it was his guiding principle. More than once, when Parliament was bent on a course that promised to add glory if not territory to the British crown, he pleaded with eloquence almost pathetic for the course which he believed to be right and just. "You will have done what is right," he urged in his speech to the House, using the argument which would have been for him a sufficient reason for any policy. Early in his political career, when Lord Palmerston was carrying the whole country with him in a policy that appealed to British pride. Mr. Gladstone stood valiantly in the way and boldly denounced the course Palmerston was taking as morally wrong. He failed in his effort for the time, but eventually the country and even Palmerston himself realized that Mr. Gladstone was right. Afterwards, in the cession of the Ionian Isles to Greece and in the surrender in Transvaal, his desire for righteousness predominated over national pride and national interest.

His love of abstract right and the process by which he reached his conclusions and by which he sometimes defended them in public probably owed their origin in part to his Scottish ancestry. He was emphatic in claiming that every drop of blood in his veins was Scotch. He was born in Liverpool, but his father was a Lowland Scot from Lanarkshire and his mother was a Highland girl. The family had once been a distinguished one in Scotland and its head, six centuries ago, was included in a list of noblemen who swore allegiance to King Edward I. They were called Gledestanes in those times, from the name of the old dwelling they occupied on a barren hill. "gled" being the Scotch name for a hawk, and "stanes," the rocky crags where it built its nest. The family, however, had fallen into decadence in the eighteenth century and Mr. Gladstone's father, feeling the pinch of poverty, went south, with an empty pocket, to seek his fortune. He was more successful than the majority of such seekers, for in a comparatively short period he became a prosperous merchant in Liverpool, with the dignity of a baronet. He went back to his Scottish home, found the poor Highland girl whom he loved and took her to his home in Liverpool. William Ewart was their third son. He was anxious to become a clergyman, but his father had perceived the signs of genius in the boy and insisted on his entering the political arena.

He was sent to Eton and afterwards to Christchurch College, Oxford, the two institutions of all others most likely to develop aristocratic predilections and the ardent Toryism which was the father's political creed. Mr. Gladstone distinguished himself in both institutions and at Oxford had the rare triumph of scoring first in both classics and mathematics. He had been a hard student, caring little for athletic sports, but taking a deep interest in the Union, which was the Oxford name for the debating club of the University. He was secretary and afterwards president of the Union, and was an ardent and eloquent participant in the debates. Although holding aloof in huge measure from the popular sports there, as he had done at Eton, he was by no means a milksop. One incident reported of his Eton days shows that in that early period he had the courage which distinguished his later life. It was the custom of the Eton boys, says Mr Gladstone's biographer Mr. George W. E. Russell, to have some kind of sport at the annual fair, which bore a resemblance to bear-baiting, or bull-fighting. The animals tortured were some wretched horses, whose cause young Gladstone championed, declaring that their treatment by the boys was barbarous. When they sneered at his effeminate shrinking from the sport, the lad stepped boldly out and declared himself "ready to write his reply in good round hand on the face of any boy who would enter the lists." Any one who has attended a large school can realize how much heroism was required to thus oppose a custom sanctioned by long usage and affording gratification to the savagery which seems to be inherent in the nature of the majority of half-developed lads.

A SCENE IN THE PARK AT HAWARDEN, A TROPHY OF MR. GLADSTONE'S AXE.

Mr. Gladstone's speeches at the Oxford Union give abundant proof that at that time he believed, with the most thoroughgoing Tories, that the "high function of government was the birthright of the few, and that the great masses of the people had nothing to do with the laws, except to obey them." Speaking of this time fifty years afterwards, Mr. Gladstone said: "I must admit that I did not learn when at Oxford that which I have learned since, to set a due value on the imperishable and inestimable principles of human liberty." Reverence for existing institutions, a profound belief in the privileges of aristocratic birth, a disinclination to make any changes in time-honored systems and a distrust of the common people were shown in Mr. Gladstone's utterances of those days. He reversed the usual order of things in his life: for while we look for liberal views and a progressive spirit in a young man and are not surprised when an old man clings to the past and is reluctant to make radical changes, Mr. Gladstone's liberalism and his boldest ideas came with his later years. Lord Macaulay wrote of Mr. Gladstone, as he was then, that he was "a young man of unblemished character and of distinguished talents, the rising hope of those stern and unbending Tories who follow reluctantly and mutinously, a leader whose experience and eloquence are indispensable to them, but whose cautions temper and moderate opinions they abhor." We can imagine how bitter must have been the disappointment of men who reluctantly following Sir Robert Peel, turned to Gladstone as their "rising hope." Probably no man has incurred in equal degree the detestation which the Tories manifested to Gladstone in his old age. But at Oxford his speeches naturally inspired them with hope. He steadfastly opposed admitting to the franchise any man who did not own houses and lands, and eloquently defended all the exclusive privileges of the aristocrats. It must have gladdened the hearts of the men who felt the ground slipping from under their feet and saw the approach of the solid phalanx of the masses, sternly demanding a share in the government, to hear the bulwarks of class exclusiveness maintained by this fiery young orator, with such learning and eloquence.

Mr. Gladstone's introduction to public life was singularly in contrast with his career. He became a member of the House of Commons by virtue of a system which he afterwards labored indefatigably to abolish. This was the system known in Great Britain as "the pocket borough." It not infrequently happened in the early years of the century that a large majority of the people who were entitled to vote in a given town, for the member who should represent that town in Parliament, were tenants of some wealthy nobleman who had a seat in the House of Lords. This nobleman expected his tenants to vote for any man whom he chose, and they usually did so, lest their landlord should punish them by turning them out of their farms or houses. There were a large number of small towns in which the chief land-owner could have had his footman elected to Parliament if he wished. The voters were few in number and they were so completely in the power of their landlord, that the election was a farce. In 1832 a bill was passed diminishing the number of these boroughs, and giving the power of voting to men who previously had not possessed it. But there were still many left in which, in spite of the change, the majority of the voters were under the power of their landlord. One such borough was Newark in Nottinghamshire, the voters in which were nearly all tenants of the Duke of Newcastle. The Duke had steadfastly resisted the reform of the system and fearing it would extend, looked around for some young man of promise who could be relied upon to fight the battle of his privilege. His eldest son, who had heard Mr. Gladstone's fiery speeches at Oxford, recommended him to his father, who promptly offered the young orator a seat in Parliament as member for Newark. Mr. Gladstone gladly accepted; the legality of an election was enacted, and in 1833, at the age of twenty-four, he entered the House which he was destined to adorn for a period of sixty years.

He had been in Parliament little more than a year, when Sir Robert Peel, the head of the Tory party, appointed him Lord of the Treasury. The office was an unimportant one, but it was given, according to custom, with the object of enlisting the young member's oratorical gifts on the side of the government. Mr. Gladstone's first tenure of office was brief. Sir Robert Peel being defeated by a vote of the House, resigned, and as is usual in England, his subordinates quitted office with him.

Relieved from the cares of office Mr. Gladstone continued to give close attention to his Parliamentary duties, but devoted his leisure to the production of a remarkable book, which at its appearance attracted general interest. It was entitled "The State in its Relations with the Church," and its object was to show that a government ought to have a conscience and ought to make the propagation of religious truth one of its most important functions. In his famous review of the book Lord Macaulay stated that there was no logical ground for a state performing such function, and that it was better for the state and for the people that it should not attempt to perform it. The book is important now, chiefly because it reveals the principles which guided Mr. Gladstone throughout his political career. He must have been convinced by evidence that a man might possess all the qualifications for secretary of state, or secretary of the treasury, who was totally unfit to guide the religious affairs of the nation, and therefore that the present condition was the ideal of government could not be realized, but it remained the ideal, and he would have rejoiced to see the government composed of men as eminent for piety as for statesmanship was an ideal very desirable to a young statesman in a period when drinking, gambling, horse-racing and other vicious pursuits occupied so much the time and attention of public men.

MR. AND MRS. GLADSTONE AND THEIR GRAND-DAUGHTER.

The political events of the following year were of precisely the kind to bring Mr. Gladstone into prominence. He was still identified with the Tory party, and was warmly attached by personal regard to its great leader, Sir Robert Peel. The Whigs were in power, but had made themselves unpopular by a feeble and changeful financial policy, which led to their defeat.

Sir Robert Peel was made Prime Minister, and appointed Mr. Gladstone Vice-President of the Board of Trade. It was in this office that he gave the first public proof of the brilliant financial genius which he possessed. He thoroughly remodeled the customs duties and abolished or greatly reduced the tariff on twelve hundred articles of commerce. He proceeded on the principle that the poor and the lower middle-classes were entitled to the first consideration in the changes that might be made in the tariff; their difficulties in supporting their families were, he said, great at the best, and it was the duty of the government whenever it was in power, to make those difficulties less burdensome by lightening the articles which they most used. His defence of this financial policy was masterly. Night after night he was in his place in the House of Commons arguing for every clause of the bill, showing such a mastery of the minutest details, and such wonderful skill in presenting them to the House, that he was hailed by all as the coming financial leader.

During more than twenty years Mr. Gladstone's was the hand which guided the British financial policy. Even when out of office, the dread of his criticism and the vast knowledge he could bring to bear on the subject, kept his rivals from straying from the principles he laid down. When his party was in power, no other financial minister was possible. More than once it happened that the head of the party disliked him, but was obliged to appoint him, because as one bluntly put it, "If I appoint any other man, Gladstone would tear him to pieces." His financial statements were masterpieces of lucidity and lucidity. With a scrap of paper little larger than his hand to guide him, he would speak for five hours, holding his hearers spellbound, making the figures of the tariff and of direct taxation live, and investing them with a charm which had never before characterized the discussion of finance. His memory was prodigious and his acquaintance with the subject not only in broad principles, but in detail, was the despair of every opponent. It would be tedious here to trace the course of parties and the changes which brought the Whig and Tory leaders alternately into power, but during the whole period the Premier who could command Mr. Gladstone's services in the important department of finance counted himself fortunate and found in him a source of strength and popularity.

It was in 1853 that Mr. Gladstone first assumed full charge of the national finances. His position at that time was at "the parting of the ways." He had not severed his connection with the Tory party, but he had uttered opinions extremely distasteful to the party and he was beginning to feel the ostracism which had embittered the closing years of the life of his great friend, Sir Robert Peel. The story is told that he was sitting reading one evening in the library of the Carlton Club, the headquarters of the Tories in London, when some young members came up from the dining room where they had been taking wine rather freely with their dinner. Seeing Mr. Gladstone quietly attentive to his book, they began to comment among themselves on his drift from Tory principles and the more hot-headed of the group proposed that they throw him through the window, into the yard of the adjoining Reform Club, the Whig headquarters, where, as they said, he properly belonged. Of course, no such violence was practised, but Mr. Gladstone soon became aware that he was out of place among his old associates. He had already voluntarily resigned his representation of Newark, as he could no longer honestly do the work which he had been willing to do when the Duke of Newcastle gave him the seat. The University of Oxford had elected him one of its representatives, but it was already beginning to chafe at his liberal utterances. Finally, it rejected him at the polls. Lancashire, however, elected him, but eventually his growing liberalism proved too much for that constituency, and that seat, too, he lost. Greenwich honored itself by providing him with a seat as its representative in Parliament for a time. In 1879, in his seventieth year, and after all his brilliant services it became necessary for him to seek a new political home. He found it in Scotland, where after a series of orations of matchless eloquence, he was elected by a large majority. It has seldom happened in British history that a statesman so distinguished has had so frequently to move from one constituency to another, but never before had there been a career in which there had been such cause. Mr. Gladstone had followed the light and had declared his convictions plainly, regardless of the effect his utterances might have on his political fortunes.

Mr. Gladstone first became Premier in 1868. Long before that, he had been the real head of the Liberal party, but he had served under Lord Aberdeen, under Lord Palmerston and under Earl Russell. The highest prize in the gift of his country was legitimately won, and to the joy of the men of progress, in and out of Parliament, Mr. Gladstone was supreme head of the government. The course he took was a surprise to his early friends. Ardent churchman as he had been and remained to the day of his death, he set himself to the task of disestablishing the English church in Ireland. It was the church of a small minority, and Mr. Gladstone's study of its operations convinced him that it was not serving the purposes for which it was established. He proposed to devote its revenues to the cause of public education. The fight was long and bitter, but in the end he won the victory. He also passed a bill for the relief of Irish tenants, which was extended and elaborated subsequently, and proved a source of great benefit to this long suffering class. His last great effort, to which he consecrated the closing years of his career, was a project to give self-government to the Irish people. The principle which had guided him in all his legislation was the motive in this effort—that of doing right and justice at any cost. But he could never convince the men in his own party, who had faithfully followed him in his reforms that this project was safe. They believed that it would involve dismemberment of the empire, and they refused to support him. Twice he introduced his measure, but on both occasions was defeated. The second defeat was in 1892, when Mr. Gladstone was in his eighty-third year, and though his spirit was still undaunted, he must have felt that bodily infirmities forbade further struggle. Two years later he made his last speech in the House, and quitted forever the scene of his brilliant triumphs.

Four years have passed since that day. They were years of peaceful retirement, but not of inactivity. From his home at Hawarden Castle there came at intervals in the Reviews, or in letters intended for publication, bugle-blasts, which proved how keen was the interest the veteran took in the events of the day. But he evidently realized that his part must be only that of a spectator. His friends, who visited him, found him happy among his books, kindly, genial and alert as ever. For the first time in his long life, his family had him entirely to themselves, and the experience must have been inexpressibly delightful to them. His married life had been singularly happy. Mrs. Gladstone, whom he married in 1839, proved a most devoted wife, loving, tender, and ardently reverencing her husband. All the care he would suffer any one to take of him, she gave, and he repaid her with a warm and hearty affection. She was a daughter of Sir Stephen Glynne, from whom she inherited the beautiful estate of Hawarden, with its fine old castle and its modern palatial residence. Thither it was Mr. Gladstone's delight to retire in the intervals of public labor and to enjoy in its woods the tree-felling, which was almost the only active amusement he cared for. They had eight children, seven of whom survive. Two of the sons are in Parliament. The third is rector of Hawarden, and he was always assisted by his father whenever the latter was at home. Many have been the pilgrimages by the workingmen of Lancashire to that church, the labors of which were amply repaid by hearing the lessons read by the statesman, to whom they reverently gave the name of the "Grand Old Man." On his return from church, it was Mr. Gladstone's habit to bury himself for an hour or two in his library, where, over the mantel, there is an inscription, to which he pointed one day when a visitor asked him the secret of being so young at eighty years of age. The visitor looked up and read: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose heart is stayed on thee."

HAWARDEN CASTLE, THE COUNTRY HOME OF THE LATE MR. GLADSTONE, WHERE HE DIED, MAY 19.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Sprinkled and Cleansed.

A Sermon by Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Leviticus 14: 5-7.

"And the priest shall command that one of the birds be killed in an earthen vessel, over running water. As for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar-wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them and the living bird in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water; and he shall sprinkle upon him that is to be cleansed from the leprosy seven times, and shall pronounce him clean, and shall let the living bird loose into the open field."

THE old Testament, to very many people, is a great slaughter-house strewn with the blood, and bones, and horns, and hoofs of butchered animals. It offends their sight; it disgusts their taste; it actually nauseates the stomach. But to the intelligent Christian the Old Testament is a magnificent corridor through which Jesus advances. As he appears at the other end of the corridor, we can only see the outlines of his character; coming nearer, we can descry the features. But when, at last, he steps upon the platform of the New Testament, amid the torches of evangelists and apostles, the orchestras of heaven announce him with a blast of minstrelsy that wakes up Bethlehem at midnight.

There were a great many cages of birds brought down to Jerusalem for sacrifice—sparrows, and pigeons, and turtle-doves. I can hear them now, whistling, caroling, and singing all around about the Temple. When a leper was to be cured of his leprosy, in order to his cleansing two of these birds were taken; one of them was slain over an earthen vessel of running water—that is, clear, fresh water, and then the bird was killed. Another bird was then taken, tied to a hyssop-branch, and plunged by the priest into the blood of the first bird; and then, with this hyssop-branch, bird-tipped, the priest would sprinkle the leper seven times, then untie the bird from the hyssop-branch, and it would go soaring into the heavens.

Now open your eyes wide, my dear brethren and sisters, and see that that first bird meant Jesus, and that the second bird means your own soul.

There is nothing more suggestive than a caged bird. In the down of its breast you can see the glow of southern climes; in the sparkle of its eye you can see the flash of distant seas; in its voice you can hear the song it learned in the wildwood. It is a child of the sky in captivity. Now the dead bird of my text, captured from the air, suggests the Lord Jesus, who came down from the realms of light and glory. He once stood in the sunlight of heaven. He was the favorite of the land. He was the King's Son.

But one day there came word to the palace that an insignificant island was in rebellion, and was cutting itself to pieces with anarchy. I hear an angel say, "Let it perish. The King's realm is vast enough without the island. The tributes to the King are large enough without that. We can spare it." "Not so," said the prince, the King's Son; and I see him push out one day, under the protest of a great company. He starts straight for the rebellious island. He lands amid the execrations of the inhabitants, that grow in violence until the malice of earth has smitten him, and the spirits of the lost world put their black wings over his dying head. No wonder it was a bird that was taken and slain over an earthen vessel of running water. It was a child of the skies. It typified him who came down from heaven in agony and blood to save our souls. Blessed be his name forever!

I notice also, in my text, that the bird that was slain was a clean bird. The text demanded that it should be. The raven was never sacrificed, nor the cormorant, nor the vulture. It must be a clean bird, says the text, and it suggests the pure Jesus—the holy Jesus. The sceptical tailors have tried for eighteen hundred years to find out one hole in his seamless garment, but they have not found it. The most ingenious and eloquent infidel of this day in the last line of his book, all of which denounces Christ says, "All ages must proclaim that among the sons of men there is none greater than Jesus." So let this bird of the text be clean—its feet fragrant with the dew that it pressed, its beak carrying sprig of thyme and frankincense, its feathers washed in showers. O thou spotless Son of God, impress us with thy innocence!

> "Thou lovely source of true delight,
> Whom I, unseen, adore,
> Unveil thy beauties to my sight,
> That I may love thee more."

I remark, also, in regard to this first bird, mentioned in the text, that it was a defenseless bird. When the eagle is assaulted, with its iron beak it strikes like a lightning bolt against its adversary. But this was a dove or a sparrow—perfectly harmless, perfectly defenseless—type of him who said, "I have trod the wine-press alone, and there was none to help." None to help! Was there one, in all that crowd, manly and generous enough to stand up for him? Were the miscreants at the cross any more interfered with in their work of spiking him fast than the carpenter in his shop driving a nail through a pine board? The women cried, but there was no balm in their tears. None to help! none to help! O my Lord Jesus, none to help!

As, after a severe storm in the morning, you go out, and find birds dead on the ground, so this dead bird of the text makes me think of that awful storm that swept the earth on Crucifixion day, when the wrath of God, and the malice of man, and the fury of devils wrestled beneath the three crosses. As we sang just now,

> "Well might the sun in darkness hide,
> And shut his glories in,
> When Christ, the mighty Maker, died
> For man, the creature's sin."

But I come now to speak of this second bird of the text. We must not let that fly away until we have examined it. The priest took the second bird, tied it to the hyssop-branch, and then plunged it in the blood of the first bird. Ah! that is my soul, plunged for cleansing in the Saviour's blood. There is not enough water in the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans to wash away our smallest sin. Sin is such an outrage on God's universe that nothing but blood can atone for it. You know the life is in the blood, and as the life had been forfeited, nothing could buy it back but blood. What was it that was sprinkled on the door posts when the destroying angel went through the land? Blood. What was it that went streaming from the altar of ancient sacrifice? Blood. What was it that the priest carried into the holy of holies, making intercession for the people? Blood. What was it that Jesus sweat in the garden of Gethsemane? Great drops of blood. What does the wine in the sacramental cup signify? Blood. What makes the robes of the righteous in heaven so fair? They are washed in the blood of the Lamb. What is it that cleanses all our pollution? The blood of Jesus Christ, that cleanseth from all sin.

I hear somebody saying, "I do not like such a sanguinary religion as that." Do you think it is very wise for the patient to tell the doctor, "I don't like the medicine you have given me"? If he wants to be cured, he had better take the medicine. My Lord God has offered us a balm, and it is very foolish for us to say, "I don't like that balm." We had better take it, and be saved. But you do not oppose the shedding of blood in other directions and for other ends. If a hundred thousand men go out to battle for their country, and have to lay down their lives for free institutions, is there anything ignoble about that? No, you say; "glorious sacrifice rather." And is there anything ignoble in the idea that the Lord Jesus Christ, by the shedding of his blood, delivered not only one land, but all lands and all ages, from bondage, introducing men by millions and millions into the liberty of the sons of God? Is there anything ignoble about that?

As this second bird of the text was plunged in the blood of the first bird, so we must be washed in the blood of Christ, or go polluted forever.

> "Let the water and the blood,
> From thy side a healing flood,
> Be of sin the double cure,
> Save from wrath, and make me pure."

I notice now that as soon as this second bird was dipped in the blood of the first bird, the priest unloosened it and it was free—free of wing and free of foot. It could whet its beak on any tree-branch it chose. It could peck the grapes of any vineyard it chose. It was free: a type of our souls after we have washed in the blood of the Lamb. We can go where we will. We can do what we will. You say, "Had you not better qualify that?" No; for I remember that in conversion the will is changed, and the man will not will that which is wrong. A state of pardon is a state of emancipation. The hammer of God's grace knocks the hopples from the feet, knocks the handcuffs from the wrist, opens the door into a landscape all ashimmer with fountains and abloom with gardens. It is freedom.

If a man has become a Christian, he is no more afraid of Sinai. The thunders of Sinai do not frighten him. You have, on some August day, seen two thundershowers meet. One cloud from this mountain, and another cloud from that mountain, coming nearer and nearer together, and responding to each other, crash to crash, thunder to thunder, boom! boom! And then the clouds break and the torrents pour, and they are emptied perhaps into the very same stream that comes down so red at your feet, that it seems as if all the carnage of the storm-battle has been emptied into it. So in this Bible I see two storms gather, one above Sinai, the other above Calvary, and they respond one to the other—flash to flash, thunder to thunder, boom! boom! Sinai thunders, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die;" Calvary responds, "Save them from going down to the pit, for I have found a ransom." Sinai says, "Woe! woe!" Calvary answers, "Mercy! mercy!" and then the clouds burst, and empty their treasures into one torrent, and it comes flowing to our feet, red with the carnage of our Lord—in which, if thy soul be plunged, like the bird in the text, it shall go forth free—free! Oh, I wish all people to understand this: that when a man becomes a Christian he does not become a slave, but that he becomes a free man; that he has larger liberty after he becomes a child of God than before he became a child of God. General Fisk said that he once stood at a slave-block where an old Christian minister was being sold. The auctioneer said of him, "What bid do I hear for this man? He is a very good kind of a man; he is a minister." Somebody said "twenty dollars" (he was very old and not worth much); somebody else "twenty-five"—"thirty"—"thirty-five"—"forty." The aged Christian minister began to tremble. He had expected to be able to buy his own freedom, and he had just seventy dollars, and expected with the seventy dollars to get free. As the bids ran up the old man trembled more and more. "Forty"—"forty-five"—"fifty"—"fifty-five"—"sixty"—"sixty-five." The old man cried out "seventy." He was afraid they would outbid him. The men around were transfixed. Nobody dared bid; and the auctioneer struck him down to himself—done!

But by reason of sin we are poorer than that African. We cannot buy our own deliverance. The voices of death are bidding for us, and they bid us in, and they bid us down. But the Lord Jesus Christ comes and says, "I will buy that man; I bid for him my Bethlehem manger; I bid for him my hunger on the mountain; I bid for him my aching head; I bid for him my fainting heart; I bid for him all my wounds." A voice from the throne of God says, "It is enough! Jesus has bought him." Bought with a price. The purchase complete. It is done.

> "The great transaction's done;
> I am my Lord's, and he is mine.
> He drew me, and I followed on,
> Charmed to confess the voice divine."

Why, is not a man free when he gets rid of his sins? The sins of the tongue gone; the sins of action gone; the sins of the mind gone. All the transgressions of thirty, forty, fifty, seventy years gone—no more in the soul than the malaria that floated in the atmosphere a thousand years ago; for when my Lord Jesus pardons a man he pardons him, and there is no half-way work about it.

Here I see a beggar going along the turnpike road. He is worn out with s- ease. He is stiff in the joints. He is ulc- d all over. He has rheum in his eyes. e is sick and wasted. He is in rags. E- y time he puts down his swollen feet e cries "Oh! the pain!" He sees a f- tain by the roadside under a tree, an- e crawls up to that fountain and says I must wash. Here I may cool my ul- s. Here I may get rested." He stoops d- n, and scoops up in the palm of his h- ls enough water to slake his thirst; and it is all gone. Then he stoops down, d begins to wash his eyes; and the th- n is all gone. Then he puts in his swe- n feet, and the swelling is gone. Then, l- ing no longer to be only half cure- e plunges in, and his whole body is lave- n the stream, and he gets upon the l- g well. Meantime the owner of the mar- n up yonder comes down, walking thr- h the ravine with his only son, and he s the bundle of rags, and asks, "W- e rags are these?" A voice from the l- n tain says, "Those are my rags." T- n says the master to his son, "Go up t- e house, and get the best new suit you n find, and bring it down." And he br- s down the clothes, and the beggar is clo- d in them, and he looks around and s- "I was filthy, but now I am clean. I- s ragged, but now I am robed. I was b- but now I see. Where sin abou- grace doth much more abound. The has been dipped, now let it fly away.

The next thing I notice about this when it was loosened (and this is the idea), is, that it flew away. Which did it go? When you let a bird f- from your grasp, which way does it Up. What are wings for? To fly Is there anything in the suggestion o- direction taken by that bird to ind- which way we ought to go?

Letters from Devoted Missionaries in Distant Fields—Gospel Progress in Africa, China, India, Ceylon and Elsewhere.

OUR readers who are warmly interested in the progress of the Gospel, both at home and abroad, will read with appreciation the budget of fresh and entertaining missionary correspondence presented below. These letters are from American missionaries in the field, and are written to friends in this country, by whom they have been granted to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with the privilege of publication in whole or in part:

Missionary's Exciting Adventure.

We have had a very busy and prosperous year. Our children speak English better and have made a marked advance in reading and writing, forty of them ranging in ages from four years up.

It is a busy time and all hands are picking coffee, of which we have a good crop this year. Three thousand of 4,500 trees are bearing, and the others are fast coming on. In a few years more this mission farm, if properly cared for, will yield enough to make a good investment of coffee that will do much toward the support of the station. Beside tending the coffee, the mission farms this year have produced sixteen hundred weight of rice, fifty bushels of sweet potatoes, twenty bushels of beans and other vegetables, and are now in order to raise more the coming year. All the work on the farms and about the mission is done by the children. A cart-road has been built to connect with the Liberian road leading to Cape Palmas. Cutting a road six miles through an African jungle is no little work.

WEST AFRICANS LISTENING TO MUSICIANS IN A MARKET-PLACE.

An old chief related to me a very pretty legend—their belief of the fall of man. In substance he said: "After God had created the earth, he planted two fruit trees, one the tree of Life, and the other the Tree of Live Long. When man was created, he was told to eat only of the Tree of Life, that he might live forever and never see death; but, after a time seeing how nice the Tree of Live Long looked, he took of it and did eat. This vexed God, and he pulled the Tree of Life up by the roots and took it back to heaven. Then man never had the fruit of the other tree to eat, so he has lived long, and then had to die."

The people asked to see how a white man would fight if hard pressed, and how fast he could shoot. There were ten loads in my repeating rifle (used for game only), which I fired in about as many seconds, and when I had finished I looked around and out of about 500 people only my mission boys and girls were to be seen. They pleaded "don't fire it again, we never will fight war with the white man; one or two white men could take our town." Then they assured me "white man's gun was all same like woman," for they decided it never would stop talking.

Baptism in India.

The work is opening up here in the villages that encourages my heart. We have worked for years; many have attentively listened and kindly regarded us. But only an occasional turning to the Lord. But since February last thirty-nine villagers have come out and have been baptized. Each day this week I am going out with Nunsaya, my ordained man, to see the converts, strengthen them and preach to others. I am greatly encouraged. In one village a lot of the children are gathered, and we are teaching them. When you remember not one man and woman can read, you can get an idea of the teaching task on us. At Jagdolpur, the other end of the field, some twenty are waiting baptism as soon as I can get there. I have four good helpers there, none ordained, and five here. I am no advocate of educating the heathen, but I feel that we must uplift and educate the children of our converts. C. B. WOOD.

Gems Won from Heathenism.

Fazenda's finger was bitten off by her unloving husband. She has been out gathering in such as she could, and has a little flock of six children, all of whom she is feeding and clothing as best she can. We have now a little church of sixteen members and a probationers' class of nearly thirty. We expect to double our numbers very soon. Tizore, Mabumbi and others were all extracted from the dense mass of Tonga population about Inhambane Bay. Tizore is a glory to any body of Christians, and if none other had ever been saved, I suspect that from himself alone there would arise in the course of his lifetime a church of 100 members. He is already a "foreign" missionary, for he is working among the Batswa, who do not use his own language in any wise. There are, without doubt, other and many, just as valuable diamonds as Tizore, still under the dense layers of heathenism close about the Bay of Inhambane. This entire Tonga population can be reached by water, and we need a boat for this purpose.

A Floating Dispensary in China.

Schwan, (meaning four streams) is one of the best drained provinces in China. From Chung King, the second largest city in the province, nearly all the large cities of the province can be reached by water. This being the case, we had long wished for a house boat or floating dispensary which could be used in medical itinerating with less expense than ordinary traveling. In December of 1895, our hopes that some day we might have money enough with which to build such a boat were realized, and we found that we had seventy-five taels on hand, which might be used for such purposes. The contract was accordingly let, and the boat was finished. The boat is native gun boat style, about eight feet wide, by forty feet long. The centre is occupied by a house seven feet high, six feet wide by eight long, which furnishes sleeping and living room comfortably for two persons. In front under deck is the Chinese kitchen; behind is an inclosed room for native help, and still farther back is a toilet room. The boat is furnished with a sail, but it is seldom used, except when going through gorges when it can be employed to advantage. Since it was put into commission it has traveled about 9,000 Li or about 3,000 miles in the service of the mission. Of this distance about one-half has been traversed in dispensing medicine. As far as I know this is the only boat engaged in dispensing medicine in China.

Missionary Perils in Africa.

To-day I went down to the S. A. B. place to see the agent, Mr. Stevens, on business. Arrived at the river, I saw in a canoe coming across the Lulua, the Bena Lulua chieftain, Dumba, whose nephew and heir-apparent, Baumu, my cook, had been killed by the Beva Luidi. Positively the meeting thrilled me. When he landed he came up to me and said "oh my boy, my boy Baumu!" There was the most real and genuine concern and feeling shown; there were tears in his eyes, and his hands shook, and I could see he was really deeply moved; and yet some idiots say the "African has no love!" He had given me Baumu, the bravest, boldest, truest lad that ever trod African soil; and he had followed me to the death. Baumu's mother was also there. The way they behaved about the boy was wonderful. He had been steering the rear boat when we were going down the Kassai. There were some bad natives (Bachilele) living on the banks. They had been previously repeatedly attacked by the State, and were bitter enemies of the white man and of all his people. It is the custom of the State to send its native troops alone against an offending town; hence the feeling is specially bitter against these native "followers." The Bachilele mistook the rear boat for followers of the State and attacked them, killing all but one, who escaped. It all happened in less than an hours' time, and when the front boat was not two miles away, but entirely ignorant of any attack then, so treacherous are these savages. The man who escaped dived and got to the other bank. Baumu was said to have kept the boat going to the end, and they killed him last of all. Four times this year I have been in imminent danger of death—from poisoned arrow, overturned canoe, murderous knife, and falling into the game-trap spiked with sharp stakes. From the wound obtained from the last I am now slowly recovering. God, though trying us in the furnace, and teaching us our dependence on him, is still our friend.

The Beggar's Fate in China.

Most people have heard of the Beggar's Guild in China. There is a head beggar who sends the subordinates in various directions during the daytime, and pockets the proceeds at night. Beggars outside the regular guilds have had a hard time of it this winter. We have been instrumental in exposing one of the many abuses perpetrated on these poor people. Sums of money are given by the government each winter for the purpose of helping the starving poor. It comes through official hands till it reaches the "soup kitchen." To the hands of each official particles of "sycee" adhere in the most wonderful manner, and the remainder reaches the cook. He proceeds to prepare millet and rice for the hungry crowd. He continues in the following manner: The grain must first boil; then add alum and lime in considerable quantities. This concoction given to a man, he will be able to dispose of one bowlful and be satisfied, whereas if he had rice without lime and alum, he could easily dispose of twice as much. The effect of eating such food can be imagined. The persons soon become bloated and unfit for work, and often find relief in death. Our mission doctors have traced the matter out and the culprits have been exposed. Many will be ready to exclaim, "What a horrible state of affairs." Yes it is, but life is of little value here, and will continue to be so till the value of the soul is better understood. To this end the servants of Christ are exerting themselves day by day.

After fifteen years of observation, I firmly believe that China will be benefited most through the teaching received by the young in Christian schools. Will not some one help me to train Chinese boys who shall go forth to their own people, taking Christian principles and by the power of example to teach them of the Saviour of the world?

Converts in India.

Bishop Foss, who has recently returned from an extensive tour in India, speaks in glowing terms of missionary progress in that land. Concerning the Methodist missions, he says: "We now have about 78,000 converts, of whom about 29,000 have been baptized within two years. We are maintaining 1,259 schools, with about 32,000 pupils. There are 226 foreign missionaries in the service; including ministers, their wives, and missionary teachers and native laborers, the whole staff of paid workers is 3,537."

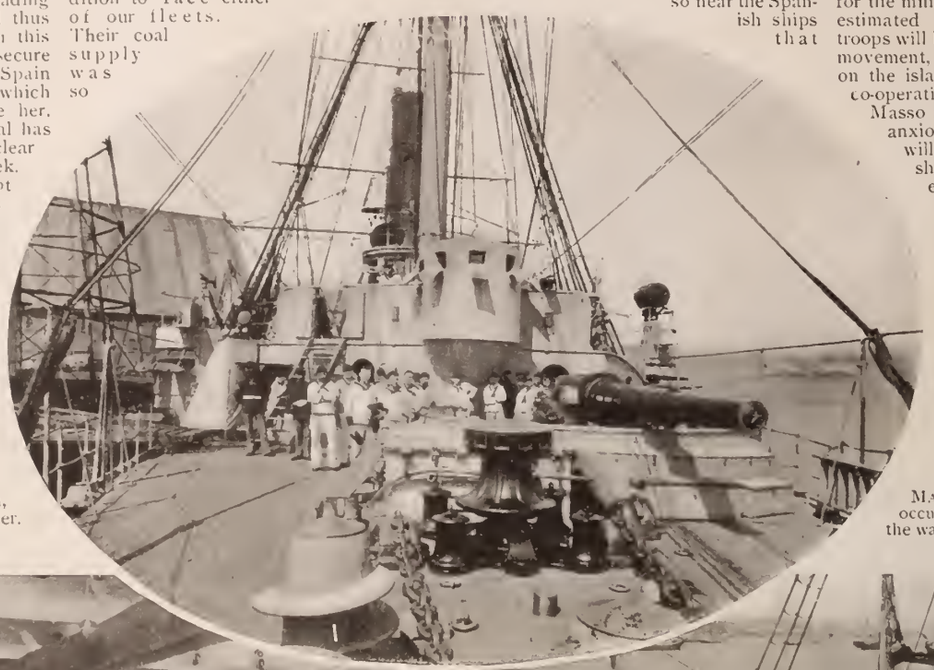
SPAIN'S FLEET STILL EVADES OUR PURSUING SQUADRONS.

A Hot Chase in Cuban Waters—Cervera Ordered to "Avoid a Battle"—Plans to Force the Enemy to Fight—Spain's Hopes of Intervention Her Third Squadron Preparing —Our Invasion of Cuba—Safety of the Battleship "Oregon"—Notes of the War.

SPAIN'S plan of naval campaign, since the arrival of the Cape Verde fleet in West India waters, has been the simple yet effective one of avoiding any encounter with the American squadrons. Admiral Cervera's orders from Madrid are declared to have been to decline a battle with our warships, and to utilize the superior speed of his cruisers in leading our squadrons "a stern chase," and thus prolong the war. Madrid hopes in this way to gain time and ultimately to secure European intervention, thus saving Spain from the overwhelming disaster, which must otherwise inevitably overtake her.

How cleverly the Spanish Admiral has followed these instructions is made clear by the events of the past week. With two American fleets in hot chase, and with swift American liners as our scouts, constantly on his track, Cervera has still been able to keep clear of his pursuers. Such a chase however, cannot last much longer, and any moment may bring intelligence of a great naval battle at sea—either in the Caribbean or in Cuban waters—with one or both of our fleets arrayed against the Spaniards. It is not difficult to foresee the result of such an engagement. So vastly superior are our fleets in strength to that of Spain, that experts unhesitatingly declare either squadron could crush the ships of Cervera, without any assistance from the other.



Spain's naval strategy, since the war opened, has been that of skilful misrepresentation concerning the movements of her fleet. Even when Admiral Cervera's squadron was nearing the West Indies, Madrid cablegrams asserted that it was returning to Cadiz. It was clearly a part of the Spanish plan of campaign to have the ships make a sudden appearance in West Indian waters and produce the effect of a brilliant surprise. Then a dash would follow, probably unhindered, with the view of forcing the Havana blockade or attacking our coast cities. Sampson and Schley, with their slower fleets, could never overtake the swift Spaniards, and Cervera could strike at our most vulnerable points, inflict great damage and retire before the enemy could reach the scene of action.

Two factors, however, wholly beyond Cervera's control, made this bold project impracticable: our swift scouts, covering an extensive ocean radius, kept us well apprised of his approach, and, besides, two of his ironclads had "gone lame," some of their machinery having broken down during the long run across the Atlantic. When the Cape Verde squadron, after touching at Martinique, went to Curacao, the important element of a surprise was out of the question. The ships were by no means in condition to face either of our fleets. Their coal supply was so much reduced that the torpedo boat Terror and the hospital ship Alicante had to be left at Fort de France, Martinique, without fuel to proceed, and other torpedo boats were about empty. The stock of provisions had run so low, it is said, that for five days before sighting the port of Willemstad, the crews had subsisted solely upon beans. With the small supply of coal and food obtained at the Dutch port, the hide-and-seek cruise could not be much longer followed out; so the Spanish Admiral decided that his best course was to head for the nearest available Cuban port, Santiago, which he made safely.

On reaching Santiago, the Cape Verde fleet was welcomed with the greatest enthusiasm. Its stock of coal and supplies was quickly replenished, and hurried repairs were made to the machinery of two of the ironclads. Admiral Cervera evidently appreciated the danger of being "bottled up" ingloriously in a harbor which, though well defended, could be easily blockaded. While there, being in cable touch with Havana, he no doubt learned of the movements of our fleets, and it was not a surprise, therefore, to find the announcement by cable next morning, that he was about to sail from Santiago, if indeed he had not already left that port. Conjectures and rumors as to the destination of the Spanish vessels were conflicting, simultaneous dispatches asserting that they would return to Martinique to coal outside of that port from an English ship, the Twickenham, and again, that Cervera's next appearance would be at Porto Rico. Our Naval Strategy Board now permits no news to leak out concerning the movements of our fleets, but it is known that both Admiral Sampson and Commodore Schley, with their squadrons, are so near the Spanish ships that they may be able to force them to a battle, however unwilling, within the next few days.

Spain is busily equipping a third fleet, to include the Princess de Asturias (7,000 tons, 20 knots), Cardinal Cisneros (5,000 tons, 20 knots), Lepanto (5,000 tons, 20 knots), and the Numancia and Vitoria, with the gunboats Maria de Molina, Marques de la Victoria and Don Alvaro de Bazan. This squadron will shortly leave Cadiz, and although it has been stated that its destination is the Philippines, our government has reason to believe it to be intended for Cuban waters. It is possible also that the Cadiz fleet of Admiral Camara, viz., the Pelayo, Alfonso XIII. and Carlos V. may also come west to reinforce Cervera, unless the latter is disposed of by our American squadron.

Among the important events of the week were the safe arrival of the battleship Oregon and the departure of the contingent of reinforcements for Rear-Admiral Dewey at Manila. The cruiser Charleston and the powerful coast defence ironclad Monterey, will be added to our Manila fleet, bringing it up to a standard of strength more than equal to any fleet Spain can send to the Philippines.

ADMIRAL CERVERA.

Arrangements are practically complete for the military invasion of Cuba. It is estimated that over 70,000 American troops will be employed in this aggressive movement, and the Cuban revolutionists on the island are ready to give effective co-operation. General Gomez, President Masso and other Cuban leaders, are anxious that General Shafter, who will lead the army of invasion, should be the first military Governor of Cuba. President McKinley has issued a stirring call to Cubans, urging them to a supreme effort in the final struggle. Military experts, however, believe that the war before the American army will not prove as formidable as many apprehend, and that the reduction of the coast defences by our powerful guns is assured after which the land campaign will be prosecuted with the utmost vigor.

NOTES OF THE WAR.

MAJOR-GENERAL MERRITT'S army of occupation for the Philippines, now on the way, will be 18,000 strong.

1. Manning the 8-inch Rifle on the U. S. S. "Atlanta." 2. The Mess on the U. S. Cruiser "Newark." 3. The "Ship's Company" on the U. S. Cruiser "Baltimore."

OUR new cruiser Newark has been placed in commission.

OUR auxiliary cruiser Harvard has escaped from St. Pierre, Martinique, where she was threatened by the Spanish destroyer, Terror.

THE battleship Oregon's voyage was a great feat in seamanship. Her run of over 14,000 miles, without the slightest trouble to her machinery, stands without a parallel.

BUSINESS is suspended in Manila and the banks are closed. The Spanish residents are threatened with attack by a large force of insurgents. Dewey expects an early surrender.

RECENT arrivals from Havana, on the British steamship Strathdee say that the orphanage founded by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in Havana is still continuing its good work, notwithstanding the war. There are 400 children there. The Spaniards have not appropriated the supplies as was reported, and there is still food and money enough to carry on the work for four months. The premises are carefully guarded by Spanish soldiers.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

C. N. M., Mentone, Ala. 1. Have the Turks evacuated Thessaly? 2. Have the Powers found a Governor for Crete yet? 3. How numerous were the Moors when driven from Spain, where did they go, and were they Christians or Moslems?

1. The evacuation has commenced. 2. Prince George of Greece is proposed. 3. The number who were forced to emigrate is estimated at about one million. Some sixty thousand remained and accepted Christianity. They were called "Moriscoes," and are still known by that name. A remnant of their descendants still live in the valley of Alpajorras and retain their peculiar manners and customs.

Subscriber, Decatur, Ala. What are the causes for the decline of Spain as a nation apart from that of a low moral standard?

The beginning of Spain's downfall may be traced to her sudden acquisition of almost boundless wealth through her Western conquests, resulting in national pride, extravagance, arrogance, and tyrannical methods of government. Riches poured into the royal treasury, and wildest schemes of conquest were projected and carried out. Home industries and the substantial welfare of the nation were forgotten. The poor were allowed to grow up in dense ignorance, and the aristocracy and the churches dominated everything. Effeminacy, bigotry, and intolerance followed. With the rise to power of other nations, Spain, no longer progressive, has gradually declined, and it is to-day a wrecked and bankrupt nation.

Anxious, Schenectady, N. Y. Is a person justified in sitting at the Lord's table when he has a quarrel with a member of the same church, if he is quite willing to be reconciled, but the other person is not?

We should need to know more of the circumstances before giving an opinion. Perhaps the person who is willing to be reconciled has deeply wronged the other person and has not made proper reparation. On the other hand, if he is the wronged person and if he harbors no feeling of resentment, he is justified in sitting at the Lord's table, even though the quarrel has not been adjusted. If he has done all in his power to win his brother, and has no malignity toward him in his heart, there is no reason why he should absent himself

M. A., Five Points, Wis. Does the reference of Paul in Galatians 1:19 to James, the Lord's brother, mean that Christ had a brother? I have heard it stated that he had neither brother nor sister?

The people of Nazareth, where the family lived, appear to have thought that he had both brothers and sisters (see Matthew 13:55). It may be that Joseph had been married before he married Mary and that these were the children of his first wife; but there is no evidence of the fact. The Roman Catholics were reluctant to admit that Mary had any children beside Jesus, and have suggested various explanations of these references to his brethren, but there seems no valid reason for supposing that they were other than his brothers. The tradition is that James did not believe on him until after the resurrection. He was afterwards Bishop of Jerusalem, and is believed to have been the author of the Epistle to James.

C. D. S., Allston, Mass. How many battleships has the U. S. Government now?

Our leading battleships are the Indiana, Iowa, Massachusetts, Oregon, Texas, Kearsarge, Kentucky, Alabama, Illinois, Wisconsin

David D., Guilford, Ct. Please give style and size of the watch you now use. I see it stated that the most valuable clock in the world is one made for the use of Louis XIV. of France, now owned by a member of the Rothschild family who bought it for $50,000. I have one that is made of brass and it runs with one weight, strikes one for each hour, keeps good time and has not had twenty-five cents laid out on it in over one hundred years. We don't know how old it is.

It is said that generous clocks existed in the 12th century, although there is no satisfying description of any one until the 14th century, when it appears that a horological, or clock, was sent by the Sultan of Egypt, in 1232, to Emperor Frederic II. It resembled a celestial globe in which the sun, moon and planets moved, being impelled by weights and wheels, so that they pointed out the hour, day and night with certainty.

E. H. M., Cochranville, Pa. Where is General Weyler at this time, and how is he engaged?

In Spain, actively engaged in fomenting political agitation against the government. It is said he has ambitious views of a military dictatorship.

Oda E. K., Rural Dale, W. Va. 1. What is the largest battleship and the next largest in the U. S. navy? 2. How many Spanish soldiers in Cuba now? 3. Do you think that revenge is ever justifiable?

1. The two largest battleships in the U. S. navy are the Kearsarge and Kentucky, which are sister warships. The next largest is the Iowa. 2. There are various estimates. Gen. Blanco claims to have 150,000 troops, besides volunteers. Insurgent leaders say there are less than 125,000 Spanish soldiers in Cuba, of whom over 50,000 are in hospitals. 3. Not in the sense of personal retaliation. (See Deut. 32:35; Ps. 94:1; Rom. 12:19). There is, however, a human vengeance which is justifiable, as where the law is defied or broken, and life and property imperiled. Society is justified in taking necessary measures for its protection, and in so dealing with criminals, singly or collectively, that they will be unable to repeat their offences.

Henry A. M., Jay, N. Y. Was the Monitor, which defeated the Merrimac, ever raised to the surface after being sunk off the coast of Cape Hatteras? And if so, is it now commissioned in the present war between Spain and the United States?

The Monitor sank, carrying down with her sixteen of her crew of sixty five, and was never raised. Her name was afterward adopted as that of a type, and all vessels constructed on the same plan are now known as monitors.

W. B. B., Ormond, Fla. What became of the twelve tribes?

The Jews you meet everywhere, are descended from either Judah or Benjamin. No one knows what became of the descendants of the other ten tribes. An effort has been made to identify the Anglo-Saxon race with them, but there is no absolute proof. If they were willing to intermarry with Gentiles they would soon be absorbed.

Inquirer, Shrewsbury, Pa. Are trifling inaccuracies of statement regarded by God as lies? Ought a public or private confession to be made for unintentional misstatements when no wrong was done or intended?

Great care should be exercised by Christians to avoid any misstatement or inaccuracy. The habit of exaggeration is insidious, and liable to grow. Read James 3 to get an idea of the care that ought to be taken to avoid careless talking. Great mischief may be done by a wrong statement, even when there was no intention of saying what was not true. God, doubtless, takes account of the intention and does not regard inaccuracies as wilful falsehoods. If a wrong has been done, or mischief caused, apology should be made and the misstatement corrected, but the most important thing is to overcome the habit of careless speech.

O. B. Q., Washington, D. C. Do you think it is a sin to form acquaintances through an advertisement in the personal column of a journal or through a matrimonial agency?

It is a very imprudent thing to do. We do not know that there is any sin in it, but there would probably be a great deal of sorrow and suffering. The kind of people who make acquaintances in that way are usually people whose character prevents their making them in any other. They are snares for the unwary, and those who fall into them have cause for bitter regret.

Class of Bible Students, Rumsey, Cal. What are the privileges referred to in Hebrews 11:39, 40, as being enjoyed by Old Testament saints through the faith of modern believers?

The statement is by no means clear, and many suggestions have been made as to its meaning. The writer evidently intimates that in some way the Old Testament saints benefited by Christ's completed work. They had suffered, they had obtained a good report, but there was something to which they had not attained. Their faith had been the faith of expectation; they believed the promise, but the promise was not fulfilled until Christ came. Then a new and living way was opened to them. With us, the faith is in a work accomplished; that is the "better thing provided for us," and the writer of the epistle implies that it also perfected those who had lived and died believing, before Christ came. But he does not say what it was that they lacked, whether it was a closer communion with God or some other attainment.

A MISSIONARY FREE DISPENSARY ON THE CONGO RIVER.

Medical skill greatly enhances the influence of the missionary, and provides him with an "open door," which to one who has no medical training, might remain shut indefinitely. In the Congo region, as elsewhere in Africa, medical missionaries are everywhere welcomed. They are cordially received by the local potentates, and crowds of afflicted among the "common people" wait upon them daily at their dispensaries. Our photograph shows the doctor binding up the injured hand of a native, while others sit around watching the operation with deep interest.

C. R. G., Lock Haven, Pa. In your "Lesson Points" you say that the posture of the disciples at the Last Supper was that of reclining. Why is it that all the paintings of it represent them sitting as we do at meals?

Simply because the painters based their conception of it on the habits of their own time. More is known of the habits of the Orient in the time of Christ than was known when those pictures were painted.

M. T., Hallettsville, Tex. 1. What are the differences between Campbellites and Baptists? 2. Is it right to admit Christians to communion regardless of denomination?

1. The only important difference we know of is that the Disciples reject all human creeds, and insist on the New Testament being the only creed necessary to salvation. 2. It seems to us that any person who loves Christ and wishes to commemorate his death should be welcome to his table. If he wishes to become a member of the church and enter into fellowship, then inquiry as to denomination is necessary.

Reader, Wytheville, Va. To what extent must the obedient daughter, who has attained maturity, submit her will to the will of her parents? Do the Apostolic injunctions of Ephesians 6:1-3 require her to submit in a matter of conjugal relations which must affect her whole future life?

The special features of individual cases differ so widely that it is difficult to formulate principles which would be of general application. The daughter may get a light on the problem by trying to realize how she would like a daughter of her own to act, if she should have one in years to come. Even as to obedience, much depends on the character of the parents' wishes. If the daughter wishes to marry and the parents objected, we would remind her that the eyes of the parents may be more acute in perceiving defects of character than her own, which love may have blinded. If she disregards their wishes in such a case, she will probably bitterly repent doing so. On the other hand, if the parents wish her to marry a man whom she does not love, she is justified in acting in opposition to the wish of her parents, but such cases are rare, and as a general rule, it is safe and wise for the daughter to be guided by their advice.

The temple sacrifice is abolished, but many of the ancient forms and ceremonies, such as the festivals and fasts are religiously observed by the orthodox Hebrews of to-day. 5. Yes. The Orthodox Jews believe the Messianic prophecies are still unfulfilled.

Minnie F. J., Elm Grove, Ky. Geography says the soil in Spain is generally fertile. I have heard that it is poor. Which is correct?

The soil of the more central part of Spain is of a tolerably fertile character, being generally alluvial, mixed with sand and gypsum. The coast lands and those of the South and Estrumaduran valleys, are more rich and productive, and better adapted to agricultural and tree growing, than those first mentioned, although watered by many rivers, the latter are for the most part, artificially irrigated. In some places the soil is worn out and very poor—the result, doubtless, of bad treatment.

Subscriber, Phila. Is it beneficial or injurious to be hypnotized? Can anyone cultivate or develop personal magnetism? If so, what course would you recommend on the subject to pursue or study?

It depends entirely upon the patient and his condition. Physicians and scientists are greatly at sea as to the value of what is known as animal magnetism in healing, and at the present time it is so much in the hands of charlatans, that it is far from commanding confidence. Text books are worthless. The hypnotic power might be made a saving agency, either for good or evil.

O. H. B., Tannton, Mass. In the time of Nelson or of the Spanish galleons, did warships carry 6,000 men as a crew?

No warship ever built could carry such a crew, neither could any troop-ship accommodate so many. Nelson's ships had crews of from 400 to 800 or 900 men—the latter a maximum. At the battle of Aboukir the Orient, the French admiral's flagship had a crew of 1,000 men. The Spanish Armada consisted of 129 large ships, with 19,295 soldiers, 8,400 sailors, and a large number of slaves, an average of probably 300 souls to each vessel. The English fleet which opposed the Armada consisted of 180 ships of all sizes with about 18,000 sailors.

Deserters Welcomed.

An intimation has been issued by the Navy Department to the effect that deserters, who return to their ships, will be treated with leniency, and under certain circumstances may hope to be restored to duty. The Navy Department has learned that not hundreds, but thousands of men are to be found around the United States, most of them at work at their trades, who during the past fifteen years or so have deserted from the United States Navy, and the majority of whom are no doubt longing to get back into the sea service, but fear detection and confinement in naval prisons if they show up aboard the receiving ships for enlistment. This is the class of men—a very great number of them excellent men, too,—that the department stands willing to forgive and to treat on the books as "stragglers" if they make their appearance in this emergency and apply for re-enlistment. It appears that the majority of them are men who never intended to desert, but having gone ashore on leave, over-stayed their time, and then fearing punishment if they went back, did not return. Just now, men are needed badly in the navy who have had some training. New recruits in the army are not worth much for the first few months, but in the navy they are worse than useless. One man who has been a year or two in the service is worth a score of them. It was therefore decided, in view of the urgent need there now is of expert men, to remove any obstacle there might be to the return of deserters. The most formidable obstacle was the fear of punishment, and now that it has been made known that they will be welcomed, it is expected that thousands will return. What a blessing it is that the same assurance is given to all who have deserted from the Lord's service if they will only repent and return!

> I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely: for mine anger is turned away (Hosea 14:4).

A Shocking Bargain.

The surgeons at Bellevue Hospital, New York, have had a very persistent applicant for money to deal with lately. He is a tailor in the city, and has been earning a fair income, but of late has been falling into dissipated ways. He called at the hospital to find out how much the doctors would give for a dead body for dissecting purposes. Not getting a satisfactory answer, he called again, and was questioned about his right to supply a corpse. He then stated that it was his own body he wanted to dispose of. He wanted fifty dollars for it, and would sign an agreement guaranteeing the doctors the right to have his body when he died if they would pay him the fifty dollars when the agreement was signed. The doctors pointed out to him that he might live twenty or thirty years, and therefore the proposed bargain would be unfair to them. The tailor acknowledged the justice of the contention and changed his offer. If he received fifty dollars down, he would go away and spend it, and at the end of two months he would return, and the doctors might kill him in some painless way and keep the body. As he was persistent and became a nuisance by his perpetual pleading, the doctors locked him up in the insane pavilion, where he now is. Doubtless that is the proper place for him. We readily believe that a man who proposes to sell his body is insane. It is much to be wished that when a man is tempted to sell his soul for present gratification he, too, would realize that it is an insane act, and would recoil from it.

> For what is a man profited if he should gain the whole world and lose his own soul? Or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? (Matt. 16:26).

An Eccentric Land-Owner.

An aged woman was found dead in her chair a few days ago in a dilapidated shanty in New York. At the inquest on the remains an extraordinary story was told by a lawyer who knew the woman. He said that thirty years ago the woman's brother acquired the property on which the shanty stands. It consists of three city lots, fronting on the Boulevard. He got them very cheap under foreclosure, but he believed he had been cheated, as at that time the land was regarded as almost worthless. He had the wooden shanty put up and went to live in it, taking with him his sister to cook and keep house for him. It was a wretched home, only six feet by twelve, but the two persons were not accustomed to luxury, and they made themselves comfortable in it. Five years ago the man died, and his sister inherited as next heir. She took no steps to secure her title to the land, having heard her brother declare that it was not worth anything. She did a little work occasionally, and her wretched appearance caused charitable people to take pity on her and give her little sums which eked out her earnings. Several dealers in real estate tried to buy the lots from her, but she was morose and would not listen to them. So long as she could get enough to eat by working and begging she was content, and could not be made to understand the value of the property. Some weeks ago she fell sick and could not go out to work or beg. She had lived a solitary life so long and had been so accustomed to answer roughly any one who went to her door that her illness was not discovered. When, at last, her absence from her usual haunts was noticed and her door was broken open, she was dead. She had died of starvation and neglect. The lawyer who told her story said that he could easily have found a purchaser for the lots who would have paid $100,000 for them. We naturally wonder at the stupidity which would lead any one to live in squalor and die of starvation when wealth was offered to them. Yet how many there are who refuse the eternal riches which are placed within their reach.

> This is the condemnation that light is come into the world and men loved darkness rather than light (John 3:19).

ong the reports from Camp Black in Ne York State is one of the unexpected wan which a surgeon was secured for n of the regiments. It appears that wh the call for volunteers was issued, a ph cian in Brooklyn offered his services as gimental surgeon. He was informed tha he regiment to which he wished to e ne attached did not require another sur on, as the regular commissioned med- ca officer could attend to all the cases. BRIEF NOTES.

The attention of our readers is called to the offer on page 465 of special terms for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Libraries, numbers one and two. The remaining sets of these valuable works must be immediately cleared out to make room for our fall premiums, and we therefore offer them at this great sacrifice. Every one who has examined these libraries know that with either set he can place in the hands of each of ten friends a very acceptable and useful present.

Christodora House, the Young Women's Settlement in New York, is removing to its new quarters at 147 Tompkins Square. The cost of the new building was $23,000, which has been raised without any appeals to the public for help.

The Rev. Principal Fairbairn, of the University of Oxford, has accepted the invitation to preach the sermon in connection with the International Council of Congregationalists, which is to open at Boston, Mass., on September 20, 1899.

Mr. Edward Bellamy, the author of "Looking Backward," died of consumption on May 22. No book of modern times has had so large a circulation as his famous work. Mr. Bellamy was forty-eight years old. He was the son of a Baptist minister.

An authority who knows a great deal about English sociology, declares that Sunday Schools have done more for England than all its policemen together, and that if these schools were to cease their work, it would be necessary to multiply the police force tenfold.

The emigration of American negroes to Liberia during the past five years aggregates 1,500 persons. It is not known how many of them have sent home begging for funds wherewith to return; but probably a large proportion. All reports from the colony show that it is unwise for any one to go there without sufficient funds for two years support.

The new Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly is Dr. Wallace Radcliffe, of Washington, D. C.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey has gone to Chickamauga and Tampa to sing to the boys who have volunteered for service.

The Baptist Young People's Union will hold its eighth annual convention at Buffalo, N.Y., July 14-17. Preparations are being made to accommodate 15,000 delegates and visitors.

The New York Observer, the Presbyterian journal so long edited by the late Dr. S. Irenæus Prime, celebrated last week the seventy-fifth anniversary of its foundation. Its editors received hearty congratulations from contemporaries and eminent pastors.

Mr. D. L. Moody preached on Sunday, May 22, at Hanson Place Baptist Church, Brooklyn, during the absence of the pastor, Dr. A. C. Dixon, at the camp at Tampa, Fla. In the afternoon Mr. Moody held a meeting at Dr. Gregg's church to present the claims of the army on the churches.

Mr. John Wanamaker, in raising a flag over Bethany Church, Philadelphia, prayed: "We pray thee to bless our land and nation. We mourn that it is a necessity that blood must be shed. Be near, O God, to all who suffer. Let it be a short war, but, O God, let the right win, and win speedily."

Rev. Geo. C. Needham is setting out for an extensive tour in Japan. He has received a cordial invitation from a large number of missionaries in that land who suggest that he should hold conventions similar to those at Northfield, for Bible study and the presentation of the doctrine of Christ's second coming.

Rev. George N. Thomsson, formerly Baptist missionary to India, will remain in this country for the present, owing to the necessity resting upon the Missionary Union to retrench in the work. He will devote himself to lecturing, and would be glad to receive invitations from churches, Young People's Societies, etc., to describe missionary life in India. He has a fund of deeply interesting stories and incidents which bring the work vividly before the hearer. His address is 452 Fifteenth street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

At the ninety-fourth annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society recently held, it was stated that the Society had 5,600 auxiliaries, associates and branches in England, and 1,860 abroad. The circulation of Bibles, Testaments, and portions of Scripture in the past year had reached the record total of over 4,387,000 copies, an increase of more than 600,000 copies in the previous year, and 181,120 beyond the largest total ever announced at any previous anniversary. The issues from the Bible House in London for the year ending March 31, 1898, were 2,073,467. From its foundation in 1804 the Society had issued over 155,500,000 copies in more than 340 different languages.

The will of the late George Muller has been sent to probate. The entire personal property is sworn under eight hundred dollars, of which five hundred represents the value of his books. As he received and expended over six million dollars for the support of the orphans, and it was known that large sums had been given him for his personal use, there is some surprise that he left only three hundred dollars. It now appears that the anonymous donor, whose gifts to the orphanage were recorded in the yearly reports, and whose identity was a mystery, was none other than Mr. Muller himself, who in this way turned into the orphanage treasury the money given to him for his own use.

THE FAMILY AND HOME CIRCLE

A Western Flower Festival.

A Pretty Custom Borrowed from the Old World—Streets Gay with Garlanded Processions—May Play of Children.

ONE of the most beautiful Old World customs transplanted to the new, is that of the flower festival. In Nice, and some other cities, it is called the Battle of Flowers, and everybody pelts everybody else with flowers—Queen Victoria herself, during her recent visit to Nice, not escaping this attention. As nobody is ever hurt in such contests, we could wish such bloodless warfare were the only kind in the world. If Christ's teachings were universally accepted, it would be. No one would do anything that could cause war. The only strife between individuals and between nations would be to see which could say the kindest and most beautiful things. Would it not be pretty to have festivals of good works, and to be "pelting" each other with kind deeds.

Los Angeles papers tell us that "the most important gala event on the Pacific coast" is that city's May-time Flower Festival. During the four days covered by the celebration, the city, in its decoration of red, yellow and green (the festival colors) is very gay indeed. There are gorgeous street parades of Indians, Chinese, Mexican, and—until this year—Spanish divisions, illustrating in some way California history. A feature of the street parade which always interests the children, is the dragon, that masterpiece of Oriental mechanism, with jeweled scales, terrible eyes, and long, wiggling tail, which the Chinese contingent always bring to the parade. This day parade is followed by a night procession of floats, also illustrative, as a rule, of California history. Another night is devoted to the water carnival (an idea borrowed from Venice), when wonderful barges sail across the park lake, amid a blaze of fire-works. One day is given over to the May-drills and play of the children. But the gem of the festival is Floral Day, when coaches, carriages, dog-carts—every conceivable vehicle—each one garlanded with some particular flower, move through the streets in a procession, whose variety, fragrance, and beauty is overwhelming evidence of the floral wealth of Southern California.

A Queer Marriage Custom.

A curious marriage custom is reported of the Markiso tribe, in lower Borneo, where the natives mingle crude ideas of civilized custom with savage superstition. A recently taken photograph shows a Markiso bride in a large, round hat, socks—bright red we are told—a short tunic belted at the waist and somewhat resembling a military coat, and gewgaws without number. By her side stands a peculiar looking object, presenting more the appearance of an eagle than anything else, and this, we are told, is the groom, covered with many yards of dry grasses, hung on him to transform to prince this resemblance, and completing every part at him but his feet. The ceremony in which the women of the tribe bestow her upon the groom is quite intelligible to the civilized onlooker.

Children and Nature Studies.

People who take intelligent interest in child-culture, are waking up to the fact that little folks ought to have a closer acquaintance with the wonderful things of nature than city opportunities and common school education provides. Mrs. Schuyler Van Rennsselaer has lately brought this matter before the New York Board of Education, urging that our city children are ignorant of the commonest American flowers, and suggested a simple method of supplying material for object lessons. It is said that, if persons who go to the country this summer will collect "nature material," such as acorns, bird's nests, lichens, buttercups, pebbles, shells—anything from "out-of-doors," it can be used to give city children knowledge that they never have dreamed of. The Alumnal Natural Science Committee, Normal College, Sixty-eighth street and Park avenue, will receive these collections.

Swazi Husbands and Wives.

A very curious custom exists in Swaziland, Southeast Africa. It is known among themselves as "ukuhlonipa," and by it women are prohibited from calling the names of their husbands, or of their husband's relatives in social intercourse with friends. Perhaps its object is the protection of the wife, who might, in careless gossip, use some expression that would, if repeated to her husband or his relatives, react upon herself. As in all pagan and polygamous countries, women are at a great social disadvantage. Since 1894, Swaziland has been under the rule of "Oom Paul," as President Kruger is familiarly known, and probably improvements will result. It is said that Swazi women overcome the difficulty of "ukuhlonipa," by calling their husbands and husbands' relatives by names of their own invention which, for the most part, consist of a series of curious clicks.

American Boys' League.

"The American Boys' League," a new association with national headquarters at Denver, Col., undertakes a great work among neglected, homeless and wandering boys.

This organization aims to combine the good features of the Chautauqua circles, with those of the young people's societies and philanthropic institutions. Boys become members by signing the pledge, in which they promise that they will keep themselves free from tobacco, intoxicating drinks, profanity, gambling, impure acts, thoughts or words. "I will strive to secure a better education; to save a part of my earnings, to keep free from debt, to preserve my health, to be manly and honorable, to maintain our country's honor, to uplift the lowly and to teach others these principles." Their motto is "Self-Help." It is the intention of this league to build a great publishing house at Denver, to issue a low price grade series of lessons and to crowd out with this and other good literature the trashy reading which is so common. Provision is made for religious instruction through church channels.

Woodpeckers and Telegraph Poles.

The following story is told on Telegraph-Superintendent Joseph Donner and Texas woodpeckers:

In Western Texas, west of Spofford Junction and for many miles it was almost impossible to make a telegraph pole last more than six months, owing to the many woodpeckers in that section. Mr. Donner set up hollow iron poles, painted to resemble ordinary rough red cedar at intervals of five miles, covering the territory affected by the woodpeckers. In the top of each post was a small "buzzer," similar to those used in lieu of call-bells, and these he connected with the telegraph wires in such a way that they kept up a constant buzzing. The woodpeckers imagined there were insects in the poles, and began such a vigorous pecking at the metal that their bills were disabled. Perhaps these woodpeckers told their friends, for since this experiment Mr. Donner's wooden poles have not suffered so much.

Queen Emma's Eccentric Mother.

Dr. Charles F. Guillou, now resident in New York City, but who spent many years in consular service at Honolulu, Hawaii, while there serving the royal family in a professional capacity, tells the following story, illustrative of the reign of vanity and tyranny, even in savage lands. Mrs. Rooke, Queen Emma's mother by adoption, was ill, and the doctor, who called each morning, found her one day stretched full length on a bier, robed in white satin, garlanded with flowers, her hands folded, her eyes closed, tall candles, like those used by Roman Catholics for the dead, burning around her. A servant was holding a mirror, so she could see herself. She wanted to know how she would look when dead, and, in spite of great feebleness and the attendant danger, had had herself shrouded and laid out. Kamehameha V., hearing of this, sent an authoritative message to the effect that to be buried all in white was the royal prerogative, and that she must choose some other color. When Mrs. Rooke died, she was accordingly buried by her own direction in red garments, with red decorations and red flowers.

Soul Gardening.

Sow kindly thoughts, and gentle words will grow,
From gentle words come loving deeds, we know,
And loving deeds make kindly thoughts, and so
If daily thoughts be pure and kind as prayer,
Our seed-time and our harvest shall be fair.

EARLY AT CHURCH.

SLOW yielding to my lightest touch,
The great door swung apart;
It closed again, I was within—
I and my throbbing heart.

For one swift glance to right to left,
Told me I was alone,
The world's unrest was shut outside
Those massive walls of stone.

From softly tinted oriels
The bright light filtered through
Flecking the oak with purple hue,
And carmine, gold and blue.

A dreary stillness filled the place,
And saints in robes of white
Seemed flitting, hovering all around,
Singing "Thou art my light."

My griefs and cares were all forgot,
"Peace, perfect peace," was mine,
And on my raptured, waiting soul,
Heaven's glory seemed to shine.

Promise Buds.

ELLEN N. WOODS, in her book of practical suggestions Superintendents of Junior Christian Endeavor Societies, furnishes helpful ideas to mothers and big sisters who have to provide entertainment for little people, and who sometimes after the oft-repeated plea for "just another story," that their resources are exhausted.

Material: As many bunches of apple, cherry or pear blossoms, just in bud, as you have Juniors, and the same number of slips of green paper about six inches long and one inch wide.

Write on each slip of paper a promise, then fold it by laying the plaits about a quarter of an inch deep. Tie one end of this with thread to the bunch of buds. Here is one of these prepared for the Junior. Talk about buds, and how they make beautiful flowers with God's bright sunlight to strengthen and paint them all colors. Then talk about how the blossoms perfect so they will be fruitful and bring more beauty and happiness in the world. Liken the Juniors to promise buds, that, if they will let the sunlight of God's love shine in upon their hearts, will blossom out and do much good in the world, making all about them happier and better, that the songs that spring to their lips from their happy hearts are the sweet songs of the birds that come caroling from among the blossoms on the trees, and their smiles are like the reflected sunlight that plays and flits among the blossoms, making us think of gladness and joy. Then comes the little prayer-service—sentence prayers from the childish hearts, asking God to bless them buds of promise. After the prayers, distribute the buds, telling their promises among the Juniors, and ask them to put the buds in water, and let the buds open. Then ask them to learn the promise on their cluster, and answer with it at the next meeting.

Fears of Chinese Children.

The Bulletin, of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Fuchau, China, published at Foochow, reproduces in a late issue a most interesting sermon, delivered before an Oriental congregation by Rev. U Seu E, a native preacher. Among other things, he said:

Let us consider what the coming of Christ has done for us. Thirty years ago, none assembled here to-day had ever heard of Him. I myself was then a worshipper of idols. If were all of you who are of mature age, the fear of evil spirits was constantly before us. The children suffered most. I never passed a heathen temple or saw an idol procession without my heart beating fast with fear. The children must be in the house before dark, for evil spirits would harm them. How we used to go dying homeward through the paddy fields, verily believing the evil one was pursuing us. But when I was in my teens, a strangely dressed being came out to our village. We knew not whether he was man or devil. He spoke our language, and my uncle listened to his words as he told us about this child. We accepted this religion and cast away idols, no longer fearing them. Then my uncle told me that an idol was nothing, and advised me to become a Christian, and thus Jesus Christ delivered me, as he has delivered you, from the fear of evil spirits. Is not this good tidings? In the field, where I used to watch the cows was a deep pit. Into that pit I have seen several new-born baby girls thrown. A great fear possessed me, and I drove my cows as far away from that pit as possible. For thirty years I have not heard of a girl being thrown in that pit. Ever since we heard about Jesus it has been different.

JESUS CRUCIFIED.

S. Lesson for June 12. Matt. 27 : 35-50.
Golden Text, I. Cor. 15 : 3.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

CHRIST died for our sins according to the Scriptures" (I. Cor. 15 : 3), was part of the Gospel which Paul preached. But the crucifixion of our beloved Lord upon the cross was only the consummation of a life of true crucifixion of the flesh. He came down from heaven not to do his own will, not to please himself (Rom. 15 : 3), but to crucify his own will and to do the will of him that sent him (John 6 : 38). He took the same human nature which we have, and which he pleases itself, exalts itself, defends itself, pities itself, is conscious of itself, loves itself; and all through his life he laid down his life in all these particulars. He pleased not himself; he did not honor himself. "If I honor myself, my honor is nothing: it is my Father that honoreth me" (John 8 : 54). He did not defend himself, but was dumb before his accusers. He did not pity himself, but "endured the cross despising the shame" (Heb. 12 : 2). He was not self-conscious, but ever looked to his Father's presence, not to his own.

Thus, in his continual emptying of himself, he made room continually for the Father to dwell in him (John 14 : 10). He glorified his Father in a human body, and so made it possible that other human beings might also lead a life crucified with him and indwelt by him, resembling him, conformed to his life on earth. For the joy that was before him, the joy of making it possible for us to be not only forgiven and cleansed by his precious blood, but also crucified to our own life by his life in us, he endured the cross, despising the shame. And when he drew near the hour of his crucifixion, he was not overwhelmed with fear. That which others dread, to him was glory. He prayed: "Father, the hour is come: glorify thy Son, that thy Son may also glorify thee, even as thou gavest him authority over all flesh, that whatsoever thou hast given him, to them he should give eternal life" (John 17 : 2).

"He shall see the travail of his soul and shall be satisfied" (Isa. 53 : 11). He shall come into the joy set before him when he shall come again to take unto himself those whom the Father has given to him, and whom he has conformed to his image, whose life and spirit has been like his own because he lives in them his own life and manifests himself to the world in them. "He shall see his seed . . . . and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand." But all these are crucified in spirit as he was, the world is crucified to them and they unto the world (Gal. 6 : 14). "They are not of the world," as he was not of the world (John 17 : 14); the world knoweth them not, because it knew him not (1 John 3 : 1). They have learned to deny themselves as he did, to take up their cross as he took up his, and so to follow him. The rule of their lives has been the same as his, not what pleases them but what pleases him.

The strength of the Lord Jesus, almost exhausted in Gethsemane under the awful burden of the sin of man, but revived by the angel which ministered unto him, was now not equal to bear his cross, and a man of Cyrene was compelled to bear it after him. But the iron which entered his soul none but himself could bear. Outside the gate of that Jerusalem which he loved and which he had wept over, that city which knew not the day of her visitation, they led him to death who had in his hands the life of all who lived. Oh, how truly they knew not what they did. Unwilling to forego any of the suffering which he undertook to bear, led as a lamb to the slaughter, he would not accept the vinegar mingled with the gall which was intended to alleviate the agonies of crucifixion. All along it was his principle, "The cup which my Father hath given me, shall I not drink it?"

"And they crucified him," unresisting still! And then they parted his garments among them, casting lots. It was all the soldiers saw they could gain from the execution of this supposed malefactor! How little they knew what was gained for a lost world of sinners by that death of Jesus! Some accusation must be found to justify the deed. What could they place upon the cross that the public might be aware of the offence which was committed by him who hung there? All they had to say was, "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews." The chief priests would have changed it and said, "He said he was the king of the Jews," but Pontius Pilate would not allow this. And God would not allow it either. It has come down to this day; it shall go down to the day when the Jews shall look on him whom they have pierced, that it was the very King of the Jews, the very Messiah, anointed of God to be a Prince as well as a Saviour whom they, by the hands of lawless men, crucified and slew.

As though to heap insult upon insult, two thieves were crucified with him, and placed on either side. Still no remonstrance from the patient Lamb of God. There he hung, a spectacle indeed for men and angels; yes, and devils. The enemy who had the power of death (Heb. 2 : 14), may have thought he had succeeded at last to stop the mouth and to defeat the ministry of Jesus; but the death of the Prince of Life in whom was life, was the sowing of a corn of wheat for much fruit of that very life which for the time yielded to death: he shall see his seed.

THE HILL IDENTIFIED AS CALVARY, NEAR THE DAMASCUS GATE OF JERUSALEM.

The tide of popular feeling which had hailed him as the son of David, the "King which cometh in the name of the Lord," only a few days before, was now, through the power of the chief priests and elders, turned bitterly against him. "They that passed by railed on him, wagging their heads and saying, 'Thou that destroyest the temple and buildest it in three days, save thyself. If thou art the Son of God, come down from the cross.' In like manner, the chief priests mocking him, with the scribes and elders said, 'He saved others, himself he cannot save. He is the King of Israel; let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe on him.'" (R.V.). Chief priests, scribes, elders, lending themselves to the low, vulgar spirit of the crowd which insulted the writhing forms on the three crosses! Where was the dignity of these, the teachers of the people?

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

FOUR objects of special interest in this sad, solemn scene demand consideration. There is the Divine sufferer, resolutely bearing the infliction of torture, which, to a nature so delicate and sensitive as his, must have been indescribably acute. Having in himself the miraculous power to escape the suffering, which he had often exerted for the benefit of others, he chose not to use it on his own behalf, but died as an ordinary man in those circumstances would have died, drinking the bitter cup of human agony to the very dregs. Second, there are the thieves, one on each side so strangely contrasted in their disposition. Third, there is the little group of friends, which included Christ's mother, Mary Magdalene, the Beloved Disciple and others whose names are not given. Fourth, there is the crowd which comprised Roman soldiers, indifferent to the suffering and gambling over the poor perquisites of clothing, and the Jewish priests and rulers gloating over the triumph of their vindictive and malignant manœuvres. Never in the history of the world did any scene hold in it such actors as these four, or present such subjects for reverent and sorrowful thought. Over it all fell the pall of darkness, which is typical of the shadow which still hides from us depths of the infinite meaning of the tragedy.

Save Thyself. The enemies of Christ thought that this was an unanswerable taunt. They judged him by themselves. They knew that if they had been in his place they would have used any power they might have possessed, to deliver themselves from a fate so painful and so shameful. As Christ did not use such power they argued that he did not possess it. But there is a compulsion which a noble nature can feel which, to it, is more obligatory than any force. In one of our prisons some years ago there was a young man confined. Few could have felt as keenly as he did the disgrace, the ineffaceable shame, the poignant agony of his position. Yet he might have delivered himself from it all if he had told all the facts that he knew. He was innocent of the crime, and he knew the real criminal. He had only to make the disclosure and the prison doors would have been opened to him. But then the real criminal would have been arrested and punished and that criminal was his own father, an aged invalid who would have died under the hardships of prison life. The thought of what his own deliverance would cost that old man, sealed his lips and kept them sealed. Filial regard was the compulsion in his case. Christ too was under compulsion. The thought in his heart was that by his suffering the whole world might be saved. He could have delivered himself, but only at the cost of the world's salvation and that fact held him on the cross to the end.

Two thieves crucified with him. What companions they gave him in his last agony! Clean of heart and of life, he might have shrunk from such degrading association, but that was never Christ's way. Neither the contact of leprosy, nor the pollution of sin, ever caused him to hold back from a man. One thief was joining in the ribald taunt and one was pleading for mercy, and, to this latter, even in his own agony, Christ spoke words of pardon and comfort. A Pharisaic Christian was one day speaking very bitterly of a neighbor who had made a defalcation. He denounced him in such harsh and cruel terms that one of his hearers felt it incumbent to administer reproof. "Tell me," he said, "have you ever been in a position when you could have made a large gain by a dishonest act?" The answer was: "Certainly. Such opportunities come to every man, but I did not avail myself of it." One more question said his friend: "Did you feel any inclination to do the dishonest thing?" "Yes," said the boaster, "but I did not yield to it, I sternly repressed it." "That was well, and I honor you for it, but does it not show that there was dishonesty in your heart? Now when a man has dishonesty in his heart, he ought to be charitable to those who yield, since in the sight of God the wish pollutes him almost as much as the act would do."

Some of them that stood there. How his mother must have suffered as she watched him and what agony John and Mary Magdalene and others, who tenderly loved him, must have endured as they witnessed his agony. Perhaps some of us have wished that we had been alive then that we might have gone to Calvary to cheer the dying Christ with our sympathy in the last sad hours. We feel sure that we should have been there if we had had the opportunity. Perhaps we should, but if we should, the spirit that would have taken us there will not be unused now. There is plenty of sorrow and suffering in the world and no lack of opportunities for showing sympathy. In one of the New York hospitals a man lay dying of a loathsome disease. A lady of wealth, highly esteemed in society, sat at his bedside. His suffering drew tears from her eyes and she spoke to him kindly and gently. When the paroxysm of pain was over, she resumed her effort to lead the sufferer to Christ. "Why do you come here?" he asked. "Seems to me if I had your money and your chance of enjoying myself, you would not find me in a hospital." The lady looked sadly at him and said: "Oh yes, you would come, if you had learned to love Christ and were trying to be like him. You would be sorry for people in trouble and would want to help them. It is done for him, it is all we can do for him now."

OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS DESCRIBE THE RELIGIOUS WORK AMONG THE BOYS IN BLUE.

Key West Arabs—Sad Apprehensions Concerning the Reconcentrados—Tampa's Fleet of Transports—Gen. Howard's Mission—Hardships of Military Life—Sweltering in the Southern Sun—Soldiers' Rations.

MOST encouraging news of the success attending the preaching of the Gospel to the patriotic men who are in the camps at Chickamauga and Tampa has been received. From Tampa, Dr. A. C. Dixon writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD: "The work among the soldiers moves on with increasing interest and power. We have now opened three regular places for preaching, and there are at least three other camps which have scarcely been touched. Urge Mr. Moody to send at once the best preachers that can be found.

"Gen. Shafter has expressed himself as in sympathy with our work and the officers have treated us courteously. The soldiers listen with an earnestness and receive Christ with a readiness such as I have not seen anywhere else. They are glad to get books and papers, but when the New Testaments arrived they rushed for them with an eagerness that was surprising and most gratifying.

"May God bless you in your efforts to raise money and put workers in the field. Such an opportunity for reaching men with the Gospel may not come again in this generation. A. C. DIXON."

Mr. Moody made an earnest appeal in Brooklyn, on Sunday, May 22, for carrying this work forward, and spoke of his own experience of the value of such efforts. "Some people," he said "criticise my way of preaching. They say to me, 'Moody, you want a man to be saved right away. Why don't you give him time to think it over?' Well, I got that habit during the civil war. When I found myself among thousands of men who were going into battle in twenty-four hours, many of them never to return, I knew there was only one chance for those men, and I told them to take it. And I've done it ever since."

Mr. Moody said he had seen 500 soldiers at one time seeking salvation, and he never had better results than from soldiers. "When a man knew he was going to face death in battle the salvation of the soul became a serious matter to him."

The response was generous, but more money is needed. The evangelists on the field cannot reach a quarter of the men gathered there. More evangelists are ready to go, if the funds to pay the necessary expenses were on hand. This will be promptly supplied if Christian people realize how great is the opportunity and how urgent is the need for preaching the Gospel to the brave boys in camp. We cannot save them from death, but we may help to give them the faith that is the earnest of eternal life. All contributions sent to this office will be acknowledged in these columns.

The Situation at Key West.

(From Our Special Correspondent.)

KEY WEST, Fla.

"Poor Spain, she will lose all her vessels," said the captain of the Spanish prize steamer Pedro, when told yesterday of Dewey's victory at Manila. The captain of the Pedro said he did not believe in war; that all differences between nations should be settled by arbitration, and that the war between Spain and the United States was the outcome of gross folly and misconduct on the part of men high in authority who had abused the confidence of the Spanish people. He begged that the government of the United States would make some provision for transporting the crews of captured vessels to neutral territory, where they could obtain Spanish protection and means to get to their homes.

Many of the captive sailors in the harbor are Canary Islanders, and although the accepted teaching in our schools is that the Canary Islands are thoroughly Spanish, those here do not seem at all devoted to Spain.

Black and White Congregations.

Among the visitors to the S. S. Texas have been the Rev. Charles W. Frazer, pastor of the Congregational church here, and the Rev. Mr. Blake, pastor of the Wesleyan Methodist Church. The Rev. Mr. Frazer is from Iowa, and is a typical Western man. The old Mr. Blake is from the Bahamas, and is a typical colonial Englishman. The two, although so different in origin and characteristics, evidently have the true spirit of Christian brotherhood, and frequently exchange pulpits. Mr. Frazer's congregation is white, Mr. Blake's is mostly black, or to be more precise, colored—the darker shades here being of great variety. To explain this it may be necessary to add that Wesleyan Methodists, like English people generally, have little or no color prejudice. In the Southern Methodist churches here, however, Southern ideas prevail. The reverend gentlemen spoke very favorably of their experience in Key West. The clergy here never have to strike for unpaid salary. Whatsoever the stipend may be it is readily forthcoming, and in advance if the pastor has need of it. It is hardly necessary to say that this is a good religious sign. People who do not drive their pastors to teas and oyster soup and religious roulette to pay the grocer and baker are quite likely to be sincere in their own religious professions. So far as the grown-up population is concerned, therefore, religion is in a healthy condition. The great anxiety is on account of the children. They swarm in the streets; they throng the doorsteps; they hover about the wharves, and indifferent alike to sharks and oars, they plunge and gambol in the water. Here the Ardle of the street is not driven home at night, as in the North, by cold rain or biting frost. It is summer all the year round. He hardly needs any clothes; fruit is cheap and plentiful, so is fish, and who can resist the appeal of those eloquent eyes for a penny? Certainly no one who has boys of his own. This is the future citizenship that needs and calls for training, both religious and secular, and it was gratifying to learn from the Rev. Mr. Frazer that the community is becoming alive to the importance of this question.

The "Reconcentrados."

As day after day passes, the prospect of our finding many of the reconcentrados alive grows more disheartening. No news is received in any authoritative way from Havana, but now and then some one arrives, by way of a captured vessel, or otherwise, who is able to tell something about the condition of affairs. Prisoners on the captured vessels who have families in Havana are quite sure they are starving—and they are not reconcentrados. The refugees here, who have relatives in the larger cities of Cuba are equally despondent as to their fate. The military, it is said, have seized everything in the line of food within their reach, and there is not enough even for the troops. The middle class, and some even who live in aristocratic homes, are feeling the pinch of hunger, and if the blockade is much longer continued the most fearful scenes may be anticipated.

There is a good deal of Oriental fatalism about the Spaniard. If he is rash and cruel, he is patient and silent in suffering, and the horrors of the situation in Havana and Matanzas and other places may only be known when those strongholds fall into our hands. It is the opinion of refugees here that the abandonment of the interior cities and towns by the Spanish troops, and their concentration at the seaports will tend to alleviate conditions in the interior, and intensify the sufferings of the reconcentrados in the strongholds still retained, especially as by far the greater number of the reconcentrados in Havana, Matanzas and other centres are believed to be beyond the reach of any relief, save that of charity. They are utterly unable to work for themselves, even if the opportunity were given them, and their strength must first be restored before they can be expected to labor. Even with restored vitality they would still need the tools to labor with.

GEN. O. O. HOWARD.

Two Energetic Christian Workers in the Military Camps.

All accounts from trustworthy sources indicate that the task of driving the Spaniards out of Cuba will not be difficult; that the mercantile and property owning class, loyal as a rule to Spain, under other circumstances, will not sustain Captain-General Blanco in a hopeless conflict, and that they will bring pressure on the Spanish commander to prevent the terrible destruction which would be wrought by a bombardment, just as the sturdy Dutch burghers of New Amsterdam, loyal as they were to Holland, compelled fiery Peter Stuyvesant to surrender, when the English sailed into their harbor, and threatened to open fire on the town.

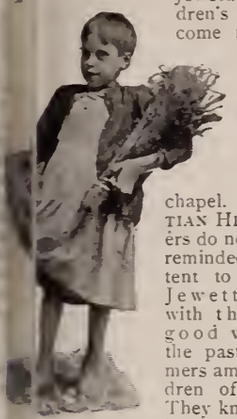
HE WAS "THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND."

The ate Rev. Dr. Jewett, the Generous Owner or Mont-Lawn and His Many Good Deeds—A Kind Patron who will Long be Remembered.



TIS summer Mont-Lawn will miss a well beloved and honored guest. Dr. Jewett, the children's friend, will come no more to watch with pleased eyes their happy play, or to talk of Jesus to them in the pretty chapel. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers do not need to be reminded of the extent to which Dr. Jewett co-operated with them in the good work during the past four summers among the children of the poor. They know that the humane proprietor of Lawn gave the use of that property ear to this journal for our children eir caretakers. Dr. Jewett took a per- nterest in the work of our Children's visiting it frequently, and express- feigned pleasure as its usefulness sed. ing the Civil War, he tried to enlist, as refused on account of physical lity, a throat trouble, which gave much distress. He nevertheless found work to do for his country, as the soldiers, in camp and hospital, on David's Island and various points along the Sound have cause to remember. In spite of physical weakness, he continually sought opportunities for doing good. He was interested in many charities, and his kind deeds remain a memorial in many hearts, more enduring than any monument of marble or bronze could be.

Dr. Jewett was wonderfully successful in his ministerial work, especially among the children and the aged. His pastorates were always productive of many accessions to the church which was so fortunate as to have him. And among these accessions, the proportion of elderly people was significant. In New Brunswick, N. J., this was particularly the case, where a number of aged and prominent citizens became church members through his influence. About eight years ago he went to Nyack-on-the-Hudson, where he purchased the beautiful residence of Mont-Lawn. He took much interest in improving the place, altering the chapel, and making many changes which enhanced its loveliness. The last years of his life were divided between Mont-Lawn, Washington, D. C., and New York City.

When, in 1894, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, with the hearty co-operation of its readers, determined to bring the blessing of a summer outing into the lives of the little children of New York's crowded tenement districts, this excellent work appealed so strongly to Dr. Jewett that he generously placed Mont-Lawn at our disposal for the free use of our little guests and their caretakers. Mont-Lawn consists of many acres of wooded hillsides and flowery meadows; the buildings are on a noble height, which overlooks the Hudson. Grassy fields, blossomy hedges, wild-flowers, bird songs, the music of babbrooks, the wealth of orchards, which the little hands were privileged to gather, thus became a part of childish lives which had never known such delights before, or which had perhaps never drawn a breath of untainted air. The home, the lodge, the pretty chapel were all at the children's service. Their pleasure and profit were Dr. Jewett's reward; his interest was unremitting, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S good work in bringing the children into the country for a breath of fresh air was a daily topic of conversation with him. Once some one urged that the trampling down of the grass by the children on the lawns and terraces would injure his property. Dr. Jewett replied: "The smile on the face of one of these poor little children from the city, is worth more to me than $500." He frequently attended service in the chapel, and often talked to the children there. When reminded that this exertion was not best for him in his state of health, he replied: "I feel it my duty to be up and doing. God has wonderfully preserved my life, and I trust for greater usefulness. Duty points the way, and over that way stands Providence, who has ever been a true and faithful friend to me in the past, and, I believe, will not now forsake me."

On April 29, he went to his reward, passing away so gently that the words, he "fell asleep in Jesus," are peculiarly fitting. The world he left was better because he had lived in it. At the funeral, which took place May 3, at his city residence, 22 East Fifty-fourth street, three of his old college mates, Rev. Dr. Russell Booth, who conducted the services, Rev. Dr. Richard Vail, and Charles H. Stoddard, of the New York Observer, were present. Dr. Jewett had expressed the wish that these services should be extremely simple, and his wish was respected; but at the close of the service Dr. Vail's heart impelling him, he rose and pronounced a touching eulogy on his dead friend, speaking in earnest tones of his whole-souled, genial nature and kindly heart, and of the wonderful hold he had possessed on college men, many of whom had been led to Christ through his influence. He spoke of the patience with which Dr. Jewett had borne the sorrows which had visited him, his ill health, the loss of his wife and of his children—all but one of whom had been taken away. Referring to his last affliction, the loss of his daughter, Sarah Jewett, with whom he had spent many of his declining years, to whom his soul was closely knit, and in whose memory he erected a bell in the chapel at Mont-Lawn, Dr. Vail quoted the words in which Dr. Jewett had sought comfort, and which were found in the daughter's room: "God never does, or suffers to be done, aught but what thou thyself wouldst do, couldst thou but see the end as well as He."

It may truly be said of Dr. Jewett that he had a heart that always responded to the cry of the poor and needy and the suffering of the afflicted. His spirituality, simplicity and Christian character will be a blessed and helpful memory to all who knew him, and a precious legacy to his son, Major R. Dickinson Jewett, as well as to his many friends in their bereavement.

THE LATE REV. A. D. LAWRENCE JEWETT, D.D.
(Owner of Mont-Lawn and a Kind Patron of our Children's Home.)

Preparations are going forward rapidly for the opening of Mont-Lawn, and within a few weeks it will be ready for the reception of our little guests, many of whose hearts are already stirring with anticipation. As it is the very poorest class of tenement children who are helped it frequently happens that many of the little folks who come to us are in rags and tatters. Kind friends of the Home in past years have aided in clothing these needy waifs; and during the present season, we have no doubt but that many of our readers will again take pleasure in supplying from their own abundant stock such garments as are suited to children for summer wear. All gifts of clothing in good condition for children between the ages of six and twelve will be welcome, and should be sent, charges paid, to the Matron of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S Children's Home, Nyack, N. Y. Matron Collins makes a special plea for clothing for the boys.

The following contributions in aid of our work at Mont-Lawn have been received:

Previously acknowledged	$89 25
Fair given by Laura Cleverdon, N. Y. C.	4 50
Mrs. T. V. N. Talmage, China	15 00
A. F. Richmond, Mass	1 00
Total	$109 75

All contributions of money for our Children's Home should be sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York.

Our readers will be pleased to learn that Major Jewett has generously consented to continue the privilege granted by his father, the late Rev. Dr. Jewett, and will accord the use of the property for our Children's Home during the coming summer. To those little ones this will be welcome news, and will win for the owner of the estate the heartiest gratitude of the children of the poor whom his late father so loved to help.

THE FLAG OF CUBA.

Dr. Guzman Writes Describing the Standard of the Cuban Liberators.

DR. RODOLFO GUZMAN, whose efficient services in connection with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S relief work among the Cuban reconcentrados will be remembered by our readers, has written for the information of many inquirers, this brief description of the Cuban national flag:

THE CUBAN FLAG.

"There are few in America to-day who are not acquainted with the Cuban flag, which may now be seen waving gratefully and hopefully in many places in this land of liberty. Our tri-colored flag, for which so many Cubans have perished! A red triangle, in whose centre lies a white star and three blue stripes on a white field, form our simple flag. The equilateral triangle conveys the idea of republican justice; the color—red—the blood shed by patriots for liberty, and the star is the symbol of independence. The stripes in blue signify the three parts in which the island is divided. Occident or West, Central, and Orient or East.

It is not known, to a certainty, who was the initiator who combined the colors of our beautiful flag, which we hope will very soon float valiantly over the demolished forts of the tyrants of Cuba. It is said that the Cuban novelist, Cirilo Villaverde, took part in the formation of the Cuban flag about the year 1848, at the time Garceral Narciso Lopez intended invading Cuba, and the latter did, though only for a short time, plant the flag on Cuban soil. Those who planned the formation of the Cuban flag, in my opinion were inspired by the glory and splendor of the flag of the United States of America, so great and mighty in her triumph above other nations, bearing in mind force, value, civilization, progress, generosity and democracy! The American flag, guardian of a gallant and noble nation, which, as an eloquent Cuban orator said: 'A nation who have never unsheathed their swords, but to shatter chains.'

"Students in the art of heraldry have pointed out to us a grevious mistake in the fact of the star being placed on a red field, the blue being the correct color for the triangle. However, on this occasion, heraldic rule cannot be observed. The flag of Cuba Libre, is already consecrated by the sacrifice of many patriots, and the pure white star on the red field symbolizes for Cubans, the independence of our nation, and the blood shed by our martyrs. To-day in view of all, the flags of Washington and Cespedes float in unison, as if in alliance. The former a symbol of power and strength proudly exhibiting the constellation she possesses; the latter, with one only star, heroic and humble, hoping to make it shine with renewed vigor, by the will of a nation which has determined to have Spain evacuate America forever."

Earnest Work for Cuba.

Many interesting letters reach us, telling of the earnest work that has been done by our friends in behalf of Cuba. We give below one of the latest received:

"A musical was given at the residence of Edward R. Du Cret, 390 Quincy street, Brooklyn, through the efforts of several little girls, for the benefit of the suffering Cubans, and a fund of $13 was realized, and forwarded by the treasurer, Mrs. George Walcott, 374 Quincy street. The performers were Mamie Cheney, Lulu and Bessie Du Cret, George Turner, Willie Henshaw, Annie Sheffield, Madeline Schumacher, Myrtle Briggs, Blanche Selleck, Mabel Brown, Anna Wolcott, Miss Lizzie Lynch, and others. The little folks deserve great praise for their efforts, which were quite successful.

FRIENDS IN COUNCIL

A Question of Etiquette—How to Get Rid of "The Blues"—The Loss of Children—A Word as to Wedding-Rings—An Arbutus Spray—Concerning Corsets.

MY FRIEND V. C. inquires whether it is right to address a physician or a dentist as "doctor" without adding his surname. If you are going to be strictly formal you will, of course, always say Dr. Smith, or Dr. Brown, but it is not required by custom or propriety that half a dozen times in the course of an hour you should thus use the entire name. Well-bred persons are guided by common sense in their conversation as in all other things. It is no longer customary to say, "yes, sir," and "yes, madam." One says, "yes, Mr. Carleton"; "no, Mrs. Emerson." You would, probably, in addressing your physician, as a rule, say, "yes, Dr. Brown," or "no Dr. Smith," as the case might be. By all means thank the friend who writes inviting you to visit her. Never economize politeness in any circumstances. The impulse of a kind and appreciative nature is to express gratitude for any courtesy shown, and no socially trained person omits to thank a friend for a pleasant invitation or for an agreeable visit, or upon any other occasion when politeness is in order. There is no rule about knocking at the door of an office. If the office is a private one, it is usual to knock; but if it be a large public office, through which people are constantly coming and going, the more sensible way is simply to open the door and walk in. In this connection I wish to answer the other friend who inquires whether men remove their hats in an elevator where there are ladies. I regret to say that men do not always remember this mark of good breeding; but gentlemen never fail to remove their hats where there are ladies. It is not only in token of courtesy to the women present, but an acknowledgment of deference to all women and to womanhood, which leads a man to lift his hat or take it off and hold it in his hand when under a roof where there are women. I do not feel at liberty myself to reprove men who come into my presence wearing their hats, because they are grown up and should know what to do; but I do consider it a duty to the rising generation to train all boys and half grown lads in the right way, and therefore I never suffer an office boy or messenger to present anything to me unless he holds his hat in his hand. Small boys should be taught to take off their hats when meeting friends, saying "good morning," etc. The ease and grace, and the automatic courtesy with which a man removes his hat, or otherwise, shows without further witness what sort of mother and what sort of home bringing up he has had.

HELEN C. Indeed, I do sympathize with you in your suffering from persistent fits of the blues. Whatever anybody may tell you, this is no light affliction. Years ago I used to think that people could always conquer depression by resolutely bringing the force of their wills to bear upon it. I have learned better. One has not always the strength or courage to throw off the weight of melancholy which comes pressing in upon the soul, partly because there is a great deal of sorrow in the world, partly because ones' health is not quite up to the old standard and partly, too, because we are sometimes very tired. Still, dear friend, nobody has a right to give up to depression without a struggle. All around us is our Father's love. We live in his beautiful world; he is going to carry us through all sorts of trials and vicissitudes. He knows when our hearts ache, and, what is still more comforting, he always cares. There is no trial or temptation which can come to us in which he is not able to defend and to save. I heard a sweet little story the other day about a little girl in New York, who is a cash girl in a certain large store. At her little club at the College Settlement she had taken for a motto for the week these words: "Our God is able," and whenever during the week anything occurred to trouble her, either in the shop or at home, she just said to herself, "Our God is able," and he proved himself able in all her little troubles, as he will in all your great ones. When you feel oppressed and troubled, ask yourself whether you are really casting all your care upon the Lord, or whether you are trying to carry it all yourself. Some of us go to God, kneel down and tell him all our cares, and then we rise from our knees and proceed to carry them in strength, which is weakness. Then, too, be quite sure that your health and strength are as good as possible; that you have no indigestion; that you are getting enough sleep, and that in whatever way you can you are keeping the claims of the body attended to. This is really a duty on your part, and the body, if up to the right standard, will help the soul more than you can imagine.

ACROSS the sea I send my fullest sympathy to you, dear lonely mother, from whose arms God has taken your little baby girl. Indeed, I do know how quiet the house feels and how you long for the little voice and the pattering of the small feet across the kitchen floor. It was enough to break your heart to have that sweet little life go out, and to see the last sigh flutter from those baby lips, and yet even in this desolation I can only say to you that your child is with the angels and that it is well with her. You cannot feel just now how much she is saved of the sorrows of earth, but you can say, I am sure, that it is well with your child to be safe in the arms of Jesus. You will never cease to miss her, but I think as the days go on, you will come to a real sense of the heaven to which she has gone and you will feel that you have a treasure there and that your little one is waiting to receive you when the day comes that you, too, are called to go home. What you say about adopting a little one touches me very deeply. I have often thought that it is a most tender and sweet suggestion which leads bereaved parents to take into their home an orphan child in place of one whom God has taken. Think well before you decide finally on the step, but should you resolve to do this, I think you will have God's blessing upon it. Remember that a child derives very much from its parents, and so be careful that your choice is well-born, that is, that its parents, though poor, were not criminals nor of that class. And yet, when I tell you this, I am reproached, for I have in mind the answer I once heard a woman make when she had taken into her home the most desolate little waif ever left at a foundling asylum's door, and proposed to bring it up as her own, giving it an old and honored name. "This is God's child," she said, "and he shall have a chance, the best chance in the world that I, acting for my Father in Heaven, can possibly give him."

I AM always having questions from lovers. All the world loves a lover, and if I may judge by my correspondence, notwithstanding wars and rumors of wars in the earth, young men still offer maidens the homage of their hearts' devotion, and maidens reciprocate the sentiment of their attendant swains. Strephon asks if it is customary to present Phyllis with a betrothal ring; if so, what kind of a ring. It all depends, dear Strephon, on the state of your purse. One may be engaged without a ring as firmly as with it, though an engaged girl usually likes to wear the pretty badge of distinction which shows her friends that she is no longer free, but has betrothed herself to the man of her choice. Still, I have known a woman to wait twenty-five years before she had a wedding-ring. The couple being too poor at their marriage to afford one, and the wedding ring is much more important than the betrothal ring. A ring is a symbol of constancy, and in its roundness reminds one of eternity—having neither beginning nor end. True love is eternal, and this the ring symbolizes. Any kind of ring except an opal, which some persons deem unfortunate as to omen, may be given by a man to his fiancee. Diamonds are usually preferred to stones of less value.

THAT was a beautiful legend of the trailing arbutus, dear Mrs. Jennie W., and I thank you for sending it to me. I always did think the arbutus had something in common with the very spirit of spring, and with those red men who once roamed our forests in freedom and peace before the white men gave them fire-water and taught them the vices of civilization. Blessings on the dear trailing arbutus, with its clean scent of the forests, and its sea-shells petals, and dainty maidenly smile.

M. C. N. I disapprove of corsets for young girls. There are waists which do not compress the breathing apparatus and which may have buttons and elastics so attached to them as to completely relieve the child from the strain of her skirts. You may either buy a sensible waist for her or make one yourself. I cannot recommend a particular kind. For grown women, a well fitting corset which is never tightly laced is not in my opinion objectionable, but girls do not need and should not wear corsets. They are healthier and happier and prettier, too, without them.

Farmers Break the Buggy Monopoly.

It is claimed that for years buggy manufacturers have secured exorbitant prices for their goods, but recently, through the combined assistance of the farmers of Iowa, Illinois and other States, SEARS, ROEBUCK & Co., of Chicago, have got the price of open buggies down to $16.50; Top Buggies, $22.75; Top Surries, $43.75 and upwards, and they are shipping them in immense numbers direct to farmers in every State. They send an immense Buggy Catalogue free, postpaid, to any one who asks for it. This certainly is a big victory for the farmer, but a severe blow to the carriage manufacturers and dealers.

WORDS FROM AFRICA.

Missionaries in the "Dark Conti- ppreciate "The Christian Herald."

NY of our readers are already familiar with the work of Dr. Robert H. Nassau, the veteran missionary at Libreville, Gabon, West Africa. Dr. Nassau's letters appeared in these columns from time to time and are always replete with spiritual interest. In a letter just received, he says:

"I am always comforted by THE CHRISTIAN for its wise and clear-cut decisions against the dance, the theatre, and forms of desecration—allowed by some clergymen and many ruling elders, and thousands of other Christians. I was not allowed these things in my childhood, and have had no longing for them since. . . . Things which bear abundant fruits, certainly belong to the realm of communications."

Many and most commendable enterprises have been engaging! Your aid to the starved Armenians—to the starving thousands in India—and your Fresh Air Fund for the little ones of your city! Difficult as the choice of the imperative necessity before one of them. I believe that those in India touched me most. The cry of a child reaches me. I know that wealth sometimes in the hands would be benevolence, but I would have had God given me wealth, I would have an intense enjoyment in spending every year in giving to those children the only salvation that could come to them in this life, a final glimpse of the better life, that is so abundantly spread about us who are blessed with better surroundings.

"I have a kind of sequel to the narrative of Ilu, which you printed in your issue of Dec. 1893, of a certain native young woman inquirer, and my instruction of her in the catechism, to mention a few more words about her. The next year after that visit I moved the river to her polygamist husband's trading-house, he changed his mind and came back here to Libreville. So she was near to church, school and prayer-meeting. She used well her privileges; and [illegible] thus, she soon learned to read, thus mastering her catechism better than when she had learned it by rote from another's tongue. And I had the pleasure of baptizing her in church membership. She promptly took her place in the woman's prayer-meeting that meets weekly from village to village, taking her turn when the meeting was held, and, once in three months, to her turn, so in the yearly rotation of officers of the W. F. M. Society, she has been an officer conducting the meeting. Her tribe is [illegible] to live seventy miles south on the Bay of Nazareth Bay, one of the mouths of the Gabon River. Her own mother had sent word that she would "tear the Christian [illegible]." So my last word to her as she left was "Keep that Christian within you!" And my first inquiry, on her return a few days ago, "How about that Christian?" "Alive still," she said. And I think it is.

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

PERSEVERANCE.

IT was a bitterly cold night about the year 1840. Around the cracked, unpolished kitchen stove of one of Boston's humblest homes was huddled a man, his wife and family.

The surroundings were of the plainest possible. Of furniture there was scarcely a piece that would bring anything at a pawn-shop, but of evidence of squalor and want there was abundance. Part of the two remaining chairs had just been broken up to keep the fire from dying out, and as the flames crackled with renewed life, the man picked up from the floor a dark-looking substance and gazed at it with a longing that was pathetic. He held it up and studied it with many a sigh, that cut the heart of his faithful wife and his loyal children. In changing this substance from one hand to the other, it dropped upon the hot stove. There was a sudden filling of the room with a pungent, offensive odor before the man, with a startled cry, could snatch the now half-scorched substance from the stove. But there was a marked change on the man's face as he examined the burned spots. He felt the substance with a new and intense interest. Was he near the end of years of labor, suffering and disappointment? Thanks to the cold outside, it did not take long to decide. The burned substance was hung outside the door. In an hour the cold had not affected it. In two hours it still retained the properties most desired. In the morning no change had taken place. A great discovery was complete. Charles Goodyear had found the process of making vulcanized rubber. Success that is worth having always comes hard. It requires devotion, fidelity to purpose, perseverance to the end. A mushroom will grow in a night, but it takes half a thousand years to grow an oak tree. Great achievements are largely and commonly the prizes won by great perseverance.

A Volcanic Heart.

Professor Friedlander, a German scientist, who has been making a study of the islands of the Pacific for some time, has just returned from Hawaii, where he spent several weeks in the vicinity of the crater of Kilauea. From his observations there he predicts that a great volcanic eruption on Hawaii is close at hand.

These eruptions are exceedingly dangerous and destructive. Without warning, usually, a stream of lava breaks through the side of the mountain and flows down upon the fertile valleys, carrying death and destruction with it. Hundreds of settlers on coffee plantations around the base of the mountain are fearful of an eruption in the near future that will wipe out many plantations and homes. A volcano is a treacherous neighbor. It sometimes sleeps, but it is likely to wake at any time with death in its hand. A sinful heart is like that; it may be covered over as some volcanoes are, with vineyards and orchards and flowers, of cultured and civilized manners, but so long as the fires of sin burn deep in the thoughts and imaginations of the heart, there is likely to be an eruption at any time that will lay waste the fair and beautiful life. The fires of sin may be drowned out forever by the forgiving and transforming mercy of Jesus.

Where the Responsibility Rests.

A very interesting story has been retold lately about Abraham Lincoln. Congressman Dixon, of Rhode Island, had been sent to represent a meeting of the Governors of the Northern States, to confer with Lincoln and urge upon him a more vigorous policy in the conduct of the war; Mr. Lincoln listened to all that Mr. Dixon had to say and then replied: "Dixon, you are a good fellow, and I have always had a high opinion of you. It is needless for me to add that what comes from those who sent you here is authoritative. Still, in justice to myself, you must remember that Abraham Lincoln is not the President of the United States. Anything that the President of the United States does, right or wrong, will be the act of Abraham Lincoln, and Abraham Lincoln will by the people be held responsible for the President's action. But I have a proposition to make to you. Go home and think the matter over. Come to me tomorrow morning at nine o'clock and I will promise to do anything that you, by then, have determined upon as the right and proper thing to do. Good night." Mr. Dixon left the White House feeling very large and important. He set himself to work to decide the policy of the President of the United States. Many suggestions occurred to him, but one after another was dismissed as for some reason out of the question. He worked at it all night but was just as undecided in the morning as to the policy he was to impose upon the President. He did not go to the White House that morning. Indeed, three weeks went by before he saw the President. Then it was at a reception at Secretary Seward's, and Mr. Dixon tried to get by in the crowd without attracting special attention. But the long arm of the President shot out, grabbed Dixon and dragged him one side. "By the way, Dixon," said Mr. Lincoln, "I believe I had an appointment with you one morning about three weeks ago." Mr. Dixon said he did recall something of the sort. "Where have you been all these weeks?" asked the President. "Here in Washington," said Mr. Dixon; "but to tell the truth, Mr. President, I have decided never to keep that appointment." "I thought you would not when I made it for you," was Mr. Lincoln's comment. No man can escape the responsibility of his own conduct. Every individual soul is as responsible to God for what he does as is the President of the United States. A man must stand or fall on his own choice, and his own conduct. He cannot excuse himself by shifting the responsibility upon somebody else.

Fighting Against Rescue.

In New York City, recently, a woman was preparing a table for tea shortly before eight o'clock in the dining-room of her home.

She went to a cupboard in a passageway between the dining-room and the kitchen and opened the door. A sheet of flame burst from the closet and caught her gown. The young woman's mother heard her screams and ran from the kitchen, seeking to wrap something about her to smother the flames, but the poor girl was so maddened by pain that she rushed through the hallway into the street. There many tried to save her, but in her frenzy she fought them away until she was burned so badly that her life could not be saved. Alas! there are many, both men and women, whose passions and appetites are on fire with evil, who instead of welcoming those who try to smother the devouring flames, fight against the rescuers who are seeking to deliver them. There is no frenzy more terrible than the frenzy of sin.

Correct Brain Cells.

There come times in ones life when it well repays to take a personal inventory to see what is necessary to make life more of a success. It is frequently found that some physical disability stands in the way and robs us of the exercise of our powers. This is particularly true of the brain, whose delicate mechanism is easily affected by certain habits of food or drink. Coffee for instance is a peculiar narcotic drug, and directly affects heart, stomach, and brain in a detrimental manner, as any skilled physician will attest.

The delicate brain cells upon which we depend for skillful thinking and planning, cannot proceed properly with their work if interfered with and improperly nourished. Postum Food Coffee furnishes the food elements needed to rebuild the grey matter in brain and nerve cells. If it is properly boiled full 15 minutes after boiling commences it is delicious. Persons who decline to leave off the use of coffee entirely will find much benefit arise from using half Postum in their coffee, and are generally won over to Postum entirely, when the result in bodily and mental vigor is observed.

The market is flooded with imitations composed of worthless things, and a per centage of cheap coffee to give taste. Care should be observed in regard to what goes into the human stomach.

PARABLE OF THE POTTER.

An Instructive Image of the Molding and Marring of Life. Jer. 18: 1-6.

Among the many views of the divine character presented in the Bible, this of Jeremiah deserves serious attention. It represents God all-powerful to do as he will with nations and individuals, yet having his purpose in consequence of human conduct. So far from compelling men do his will, he leaves them free to do as they choose, but punishes or rewards them as they deserve. He is prepared to mold them into vessels of honor and beauty: he has the power to fashion them as the potter fashions the clay for lowly and useful purposes. He even begins his work, but in his manipulation the clay proves unsuited to the purpose which he previously designed it and it is marred, or spoiled, in his hands. Then he will make of it something entirely different from his primary design. On the other hand, if the clay of which he was fashioned to make some ignoble use, proves pliable he will change his purpose and mold it to a higher use. The imagery is wonderfully significant. To the Jew to whom it was first presented, proud of being God's chosen nation, it was a humbling one. He must not presume on his favored standing, for if he proves unworthy of God's favor he is able to cast him aside and make of him something to be despised. The clay cannot shape itself: it is being shaped, but it can determine the form it will take, by resistance or by yielding to the potter's hand. Human nature is not a thing so insensate as clay, but an intelligent, responsible material, which is capable of understanding the fact that it is undergoing a process which it may promote or mar. The process may be trouble exceedingly hard to bear, it may be discipline, but whatever it may be, the end is worthy the process. If human nature is wise, it yields itself cheerfully to the process and endures the kneading and the pressing and strain for the sake of the result. With perfect confidence in the wisdom and skill of the Potter it is content to endure until it may be perfected. Even in the agonies it will make no complaint, knowing that it is nearing the close of its trial. It is not on the other hand, it resists, and complains and complains it misses the glory of the finished work. The process is necessary to the result.

A Christian Heiress.

Philosophers who say Jay Gould evaded the law of reciprocity by giving back nothing to the world from which he took so much, Miss Helen Gould, says a recent writer. Her annual income amounts to $1,000,000—or nearly $3,000 a day. The largest part is given away to the poor and struggling. She conducts her charitable enterprises as the Goulds did their business, conservatively and in person, and not through lawyers or agents. The Fresh Air Farm and Cripples' Home, which she established at Woody Crest, near her own Lyndhurst, is an example to all benevolent societies. There, during the spring and summer, she feeds, clothes, shelters and helps educate hundreds of children. Her assistants are her chosen friends, young women who are not society belles, but workers. She prefers plain, durable gowns because they are plain. She is not a patron of fashionable tailors on Fifth avenue milliners. Those who make her gowns and her hats are her friends. Though Miss Gould works hard from morning till night, she yet needs several secretaries. These, too, are her friends. Thus, in various ways she gives employment to a regiment of teachers, typewriters, seamstresses, milliners and nurses.

She is now about twenty-seven. In her Jay Gould caught a glimpse of what it really meant to live. None knew and loved Jay Gould as did the daughter who drove him to the station every morning, who, when she could, hid the newspapers from him, who would have shielded him from the world's contumely. Since his death the daughter has built to his memory a gray stone church with beautiful windows, in a green field near her late father's birthplace in Rockland County. And when she is weary she goes there and kneels and bows her head. She helped very materially to build the University of New York, by the way, and it was in the woman's law class of that democratic university that she obtained her knowledge of things legal. Long before her father's death she knew she would one day inherit great wealth, and prepared herself to control it.

How Soldiers Fare.

Certain European countries, says a foreign writer, treat their soldiers better than others do, and give them many more comforts. In the matter of beds the French soldier is said to be the best off. Each man has a little camp bedstead, a straw mattress and a woolen one on the top of that. Then he has sheets, a blanket, and a warm rug besides, for the winter. The English Tommy Atkins fares next best. His bed is hard, for he has a thin mattress, but he is allowed plenty of warm coverings. In Spain he has no bed at all, only a rough mattress on the ground, but he is given a bolster, blankets and sheets. In Austria and Germany he has only a hard straw mattress to lie on, with one or two rugs, and no sheets or pillows. Until just lately the Russian soldier never undressed at all, but had to sleep in his clothes on a rough couch; now, however, the Government is beginning to see about giving him a proper bed.

Tartarlithine in Rheumatism.

DR. M. L. SMAIL, OLCOTT, VT., writes: "Your Tartarlithine has proved a wonderful weapon for rheumatism. I have used a very great quantity of it in the last three or four months and I have never seen anything like it. I had one case who had tried all of the alkaline lithiates, and everything else. He has had rheumatism all his life, and nothing completely stopped all the manifestations of the disease like Tartarlithine, which did completely, with one bottle.

I have another old man, who travels much on the road peddling, who has been lame with rheumatism for five years, and one bottle cured all lameness, and he says he has not felt as well in five years as now. These are only the two worst cases of many that I have tried it on."

To Readers.—The New Cure for Kidney and Bladder Diseases, Rheumatism, etc.

It is stated in the last issue the new botanical discovery Alkavis, is proving a wonderful curative in all diseases caused by Uric acid in the blood, or disorder action of the Kidneys and urinary organs. The New York World publishes the remarkable case of Rev. A. C. Darling, minister of the gospel at North Constantia, New York, cured by Alkavis, when, he says himself, he had lost faith in man and medicine, and was preparing himself for certain death. Similar testimony to this wonderful new remedy comes from others, including many ladies suffering from disorders peculiar to womanhood. The Church Kidney Cure Co., of No. 418 Fourth Avenue, New York, who so far are its only supporters, are so anxious to prove its value that for the sake of introduction they will send a free treatment of Alkavis prepaid by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who is a Sufferer from any form of Kidney or Bladder disorder, Bright's Disease, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Gravel, Pain in Back, Uræmia Complaints, or other affliction due to impropeaction of the Kidneys or Urinary Organs. We ase all Sufferers to send their names and address the company, and receive the Alkavis free. To prie its wonderful curative powers, it is sent to you e rely free

FELLOWSHIP WITH GOD.

How the Co-Operation of Humanity is Necessary to the Attainment of God's Purposes. I John 1:5-7, 7-12.

At first sight there seems a presumption, almost an irreverence, in the creature claiming fellowship with the Creator. The distance between them is so vast, the nature of the Infinite so inconceivable that the idea of fellowship is apparently excluded. Yet there are analogies which may help us to an understanding of the Apostle's meaning. From the human standpoint there is a vast distance between the Emperor of all the Russias and the officer of a police station in far away Siberia. The feeling of such an officer on being ushered into the imperial presence would be one of intense humility; he would be almost paralyzed with awe. Yet there is a fellowship between the two men. Both are engaged in the common work of governing the Russian people. The officer, in his little sphere, and the Czar, in his stupendous realm, are both engaged in the same work, and so there is fellowship. In the home there is fellowship when the little boy has the loving trust in his father's wisdom and love that he should have. The boy knows that his father wants him to grow up a good and useful man. He ought to have the same desire and can co-operate with his father, using the facilities his father puts at his disposal. The end can never be attained without the efforts of both, and they must work in harmony together, each in his own way, for the common object. There must be fellowship. The father may be a great philosopher, with profound learning and mighty intellect, while the child is studying the alphabet, but the child in his way is in fellowship with the father, having the same purpose, and each is doing toward it that which the other could not do. So there may be fellowship between the creature and the Creator, for God is seeking the perfecting of the man and cannot attain it unless the man will co-operate with him. The Apostle sets vividly before us the grandeur of such fellowship and the benefits we may derive from it.

CHRISTIAN COURAGE.

How the Martyrs and the Heroes of History have Shown the Courage that Christ Imparts. Mark 10:32-34; Acts 21:10-14.

There are many kinds of courage and no character is complete or worthy of respect without one or more of those kinds. The strength of fibre would be absent without courage. The coward is despised by all and with good reason. There is the brute courage which faces danger on the battle-field and fears no foe. It may be possessed by natures otherwise despicable and it may be combined with a brutality which excites our horror. Then there is the moral courage which is far higher in the human character. The courage of the man who will go into a cholera hospital or visit a sufferer from plague—or boldly dare to do right in the face of loss and contumely and scorn—the courage of a man who will dare to oppose the strong feeling of the community and takes his stand for truth and justice against iniquity in high places. Then highest of all there is the spiritual courage which has been tried and tested in every walk of life. The boy who will kneel down to pray in a bed-room full of scoffing companions; the man in the factory who protests against swearing, and will not go with his fellow-workers to the saloon; the soldier in the camp who declares himself on the Lord's side; the wife whom her brutal husband cannot compel to the desecration of the Lord's Day; the girl who will tear out of her heart the love which seems part of her inmost life rather than unite herself with a man who proves a blasphemer—all these types of character command our admiration. Human nature loves the heroic in any field. And it is worthy of notice that Christianity develops the heroic. The martyrs have borne witness to the fact in the dungeon and in the fire. Even in recent times, we have read with admiration of the Christian officers in the India mutiny who refused to purchase their lives by denying Christ and of Armenian women who declared their love for Jesus, knowing that the Turkish scimitar would instantly shed their blood. History is full of instances of the courage which Christ gives to those who put their trust in him.

INDIA'S ZENANA MISSIONS.

Rev. A. R. Cavalier, who has recently returned from a tour in India, says that Christian work is making rapid progress, especially in the Zenana missions. After visiting other towns, Lucknow was reached, and the hospital was found crowded with famine patients, while all the missionaries in town and village were full of work. There were twenty-seven baptisms at one morning service; while at another time 130 were baptized. Mr. Cavalier says he has come home with a far higher idea of the work, and its depth and vitality, than ever he had entertained before.

Do You Suffer from Asthma?

If you do, you will be interested in knowing that the Kola Plant, a new botanic discovery, found on the Congo River, West Africa, is pronounced an absolute cure for Asthma. Most nervous cures are wrought by the new plant when all remedies fail. Rev. C. Ellsworth Stoop, Pastor of the Congregational Church, Newell, Iowa, writes that the Kola Plant cured him of severe Asthma of twenty years standing. Alfred C. Lewis, Editor of the Farmers Monitor, of Washington, D. C., testifies that it cured him when he could not lie down at night without fear of choking, and many others give similar testimony. It is truly a most wonderful discovery. To prove to you beyond doubt its wonderful curative power, The Kola Importing Co., No. 1123 Broadway, New York, will send a large case of the Kola Compound free by mail to every reader of The Christian Herald who suffers from any form of Asthma. They only ask in return that when cured yourself you will tell your neighbors about it. This is very fair, and you should surely try it, as it costs you nothing.

Do you have headache, dizziness, drowsiness, loss of appetite, and other symptoms of biliousness, or are you troubled with humors of the blood? In either case Hood's Sarsaparilla will cure you.

"WHAT MAN HAS DONE MAN CAN DO."

ABRAHAM LINCOLN at twenty-two simply knew how to read, write and cipher.

ANDREW JOHNSON, President of the United States, NEVER ATTENDED SCHOOL. His wife was his only teacher. She taught him how to read.

HIRAM SIBLEY, formerly President of the Western Union Telegraph Co., left his father's farm at fifteen to learn a trade. After having given away millions of dollars during his life-time, he died worth many millions more a few years ago.

PETER COOPER, whose name will ever be cherished in the hearts of the many thousands of young men and young women who have been graduated, free of expense, from the night school of Cooper Institute, himself never had more than one year's schooling.

Now if these men, under such unfavorable circumstances, succeeded in achieving fame and fortune by dint of industrious application to study and work, why need any of the tens of thousands of young people who have in them the making of great men and great women, despair of reaching the height of their ambition with such an opportunity as this, placing within their easy reach everything necessary for a liberal education?

GENERAL LEE'S BOOK.

THE WHOLE TRUTH BY THE ONE MAN WHO CAN TELL IT ALL. FITZHUGH LEE'S STORY OF CUBA'S MARTYRDOM OF MISRULE.

A BOOK of exceptional interest is about to be issued. Fitzhugh Lee will give to the world the entire, the true, and the terrible story of Spanish misrule and treachery in Cuba. This work will be a volume of 500 pages, printed on superior paper, beautifully illustrated with over 100 full page plates, from photographs, many of them collected by General Lee himself, of actual scenes in Cuba. Fitzhugh Lee's story will stir the heart and convince the mind of the world, for it gives the whole truth for the first time.

In Cuba, General Lee was more than a brave and far-seeing diplomat. He was also the student and historian of events. His every observation was recorded, his every experience written down when fresh in his mind. He took every advantage of his unequalled opportunity to know the TRUTH that he might give it to the world in an intelligent and interesting way. His memoranda, manuscripts and illustrations being ready, he has been able TO FINISH QUICKLY AND WHEN MOST NEEDED his magnificent undertaking—a true, complete and enduring story of the rise and rescue of Cuba. The author spares nothing that stands in the way of TRUTH in giving his "inside" information, including many important facts that have heretofore been withheld from the people on account of diplomatic relations with Spain.

In accordance with General Lee's desire, the publishers are distributing the first edition only, at a price absolutely within the reach of every one, no matter how limited their means may be. A postal card sent to the publishers, J. A. Hill & Co., No. 91 Fifth Avenue, will secure full information regarding the work, and the favorable terms on which it can just now be secured.

Agents should write to the above address.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Many of our readers have already taken advantage of our offer, by which they are enabled to send "The Christian Herald" regularly to friends or relatives in the Army or Navy. The proper acknowledgments are made in another column of this issue. Any readers wishing to subscribe for the paper to be sent to father, son, brother or other relative or friend in the United States military or naval service can do so by sending to this office 25 cents for a three months' subscription, or $1 for a year. This SPECIAL RATE is made at the request of many readers, and is intended EXCLUSIVELY for the benefit of our "Boys in Blue" on shipboard, in camp or at the front. Addresses will be changed as often as desired.

Widower, Brooklyn, N. Y. Is it right for me to marry my late wife's sister? I understand that such marriages are illegal in Europe.

We believe that such marriages are justifiable. The objection to them is based chiefly on Leviticus 18: 18, but it is evident to readers not biassed by ecclesiastical traditions that the prohibition applied to a man who proposed to marry his wife's sister while his wife was alive. If he married a second wife during the lifetime of his first, he must choose one other than her sister. A deceased wife's sister is more often than not the one woman who would be most likely to be kind to the children of the first wife.

Truth-Seeker, Parkersburg, Ia., and others. What reasons are there for the belief that our era does not date from the birth of Christ but from B.C. 5?

An obvious error on the part of Dionysius Exiguus, whose calculations formed the basis of reckoning. The fact that it can be proved that Herod, who slaughtered the infant children at the birth of Christ, died in B. C. 4, is indisputable evidence that Christ must have been born previous to that year.

Mother, Montpelier, Vt. I have heard it stated by one pastor that one of the earlier Christian authors gave the name and family of the little child, whom the Saviour took upon his knee, when the mothers came to ask him to bless their little ones. Is it true?

The details of these incidents in the life of Jesus have been preserved to us by tradition. It is said that the little child of whom the Saviour remarked, "of such is the kingdom of heaven," afterwards became known to the Christian church as Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch. He was one of the great company of martyrs who gave their lives for the faith in the time of Trojan, being torn to pieces by lions in the amphitheatre at Rome.

F. V. D. Garretson, North Pownal, Vt. We have sent the flower of this part of the land to the war. While a portion had been in the National Guard and knew a little something of military tactics, the great majority are raw recruits, and have only had two or three weeks' drill. These were largely enlisted (many of them only boys) under much enthusiasm, with the understanding they were to drill a few weeks in some New England camp, and then guard the forts on the New England coast. But already they are at Chickamauga, with the prospect of being rushed onto Cuba. Now, to send them there at this season of the year seems like murder, pure and simple. There must be a better way of ministering to the starving and oppressed Cubans than slaughtering thousands of our best and noblest young men.

We are confident that our correspondent, as well as the class he represents, is unduly apprehensive. While it is true that a very large part of our army will necessarily consist of raw recruits, it is also true that the policy of our military leaders is regulated with a view to the greatest care for the troops, knowing their inexperience. Gen. Miles has declared that the commander who recklessly and needlessly exposes the life and the health of the men under his charge is criminal. Our advance to Cuba will not be led by raw recruits, but by the regular army, supported by ten thousand immunes, and also co-operating with the insurgents, the hardiest and best drilled of our new troops to follow. There need be no fear that the recruits will have to bear the burden of the work.

Querist, Richmond, Va. If the Septuagint was the Bible used by Christ and his Apostles, why should it not be the Bible in use now? When it differs from the Hebrew should not its acceptance by our Lord give it the preference?

It is always better to use an original than a translation, especially such a translation as the Septuagint, which contains obvious errors. Our revisers took careful note of the renderings of the Septuagint, and obtained all the light from it they could. The ancient Hebrew had fallen into disuse in the time of our Lord, and the Greek was better understood. Christ would naturally quote from the book in common use, but we do not imagine he ever gave his endorsement to the translation. We still quote from the Authorized Version, though the Revised is better, but that is only because the Authorized Version is the one most in use.

J. S. L., Owatonna, Minn. 1. Into what water did the River Jordan flow before the destruction of Sodom? 2. What was the object of the wicked kings of Judah in letting their sons pass through the fire? 3. Was the handwriting on the wall in Babylon in any known language or could it only be read by men inspired?

1. Doubtless into the Dead Sea, as it does to-day. 2. It was a heathen form of worship to Molech, Milcom or Chemosh, which the Israelites had borrowed or adapted from the Moabites and Amnonites. Human sacrifices were made in high places to Molech. The chief interpreters Jarchi, Kimchi and Maimonides wrote that in the worship of Molech, the children were not burned, but were made to pass before two burning pyres as a purificatory rite. It is quite clear, however, that in many cases lives were actually sacrificed (see Psalm 106: 37, 38; Jer. 7: 31). It was assumed that by this rite the victims were purged from dross of the body and attained union with the deity. 3. The words, as they are found in Daniel, are pure Chaldee, and if they appeared in the Chaldean characters on the wall, might have been read by any person present who understood the alphabet of the Babylonian language. Authorities differ as to the language in which the famous Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin appeared. Dr. Hales suggests that it may have been in primitive Hebrew; Josephus implies that it was in Greek. Another explanation is that while the observers may have been familiar with the language, its meaning or signification may have been hidden from them, until explained by the prophet.

F. G. A., New York City. What is the meaning of the word reconcentrado? Of what nationality are these people?

The reconcentrados are native Cuban peasants of the agricultural districts, who were driven from their small farms and from the plantations under the edict issued by Gen. Weyler and concentrated by tens of thousands in the fortified cities of Cuba. Their farms were devastated and their property destroyed. Weyler's purpose was to prevent these peasants, who were non-combatants, from giving aid and assistance to the insurgents.

M. A., Cassville, Penna. Is attendance at public schools compulsory in every State in the Union?

Control of public education belongs to the individual State. The government aids the common schools in every way, but the function of the United States Commissioner of Education are merely those of information and suggestion, not direction. By writing to the Secretary of the State Board of Education in your State you can learn accurately the facts in the case.

BRIGHTON, Ill.—Since the war has begun between the United States and Spain, all the tramps are leaving the large cities and coming to the small towns, where they steal everything they can. We went away the other evening and were gone one and one-half hours, and when we returned, a tramp had been all through the house and taken my best suit and my good shoes. If we had not returned when we did, he would have taken more. We are nothing but poor farmers, but we would like to ask you if you would be so kind as to use your influence for us farmers. If President McKinley wants more men, he ought to draft every tramp. The country is full of them.

J. H. BOHN, WM. EBBLER,
WM. SCHMIDT.

What our good friends suggest is hardly practicable. No doubt many of the idle men have already enlisted, but to ask the government to draft all who, either by choice or misfortune, are idle, would not be entertained for a moment. A proper representation to your State or county officials would probably have the effect of bringing about measures that would result in greater security to property.

F. H. R., Central City, Colo. 1. Who are the sons of God mentioned in Job 1: 6, 7, and how came Satan among them? 2. Can you give any explanation of the twentieth chapter of Revelation? 3. What nations next to England have the largest number of ships?

1. The general belief of scholars at the present time is that the book of Job was written by a man who aimed to disprove the common idea of suffering. It was inferred, in that early age, that if any man met with misfortunes, he was a wicked man, and if his reputation was good, then he was a secret sinner or hypocrite. According to this view, the author simply suggests a new and more charitable explanation of a good man's suffering, using the example of Job in illustration. If this explanation is correct, the scene in heaven you refer to must be taken as a vision or parable. To understand it as literal history, is to encounter difficulties which we have never seen satisfactorily explained. 2. It is usually understood as describing the beginning of the Millennium; the end of that period and the final judgment. 3. France comes next to Great Britain with 672 ships; then Russia with 465, and then Germany and Italy, each of which have about 340 ships.

Subscriber, Alexandria, Mo. Is there any harm done by playing croquet on Sunday evening as a pastime?

Questions of this kind turn largely on the character of the questioner. If he is a Christian, we should strongly urge him to examine himself. The question shows that he is drifting very far away from God. So little of our time can be reserved for the important matters of the soul and for service in Christ's cause, that an earnest Christian would find Sunday all too short for the purpose and would never think of giving any portion of the day to amusement. The question is not so much as to the direct harm the croquet might do, as to the indication the idea gives of spiritual deterioration. If he is not a Christian, the trouble goes far back of Sunday observ[ance]. There is need of such a seeking of Chr[ist] as will give a very different occupation to the [day].

Inquirer, Portland, Ore. I have seen it stated that Admiral Dewey is a Roman Catholic. Is it true?

No, he is a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church. His pastor, Rev. A. N. L[ittle], is rector of Christ Church, Montpelier, Vt. [He] emphatically contradicts the story of his conversion to Roman Catholicism, and says on the authority of a member of his family that he is "a loyal communicant of the Protestant Episcopal Church." Rear-Admiral Sampson is a Presbyterian.

Inquirer, Newark, N. J. By whom was Jesus called "the Shepherd and Bishop of our souls"?

By Peter (See I. Peter 2: 25).

Subscriber, Norristown, Pa. Can you or some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD give me the name of the author of the following lines:

"The Greeks a harp will love to hear,
The Latin is a trumpet clear,
Spanish, like an organ, swells;
Italian rings her silver bells,
France, with many a frolic mien,
Tunes her sprightly violin;
Loud the German rolls his drum,
When Russia's clashing cymbals come;
But Britain's sons may well rejoice,
For English is the human voice."

If you can answer this soon, you will greatly oblige.

Reader, Carmel, Ia. Does not God know whether we will serve, that he bids us choose whom we will serve, that we have a natural tendency to choose the evil?

The fact, even if it could be proved, which it is not clear, does not excuse us. One [great] purpose of Christ's incarnation was to [bring] power within our reach which will help us not only to choose the right, but to follow it. Of ourselves we fail again and again even after choosing; but his power is freely given all who feel their own weakness and seek his help.

A. T. C., Schaghticoke, N. Y. Must we enter the kingdom at conversion or not until we die?

There are several senses in which the word is used. It may be taken in general terms as the kingdom which is set up in the heart (as Christ told the Pharisees, Luke 17: 21, "The kingdom of God is within you") and the kingdom which is set up in the world (Daniel 2: 44) and the kingdom Christ will establish at his second coming (II. Timothy 4: 1), and there is the kingdom in heaven where God reigns. In the first of these senses, which seems to be the one you mean, we enter at conversion.

Through the Yellowstone Awheel.

An Exciting Ride in America's Wonderland—A Lost Dinner—Glens and Gorges Alive with Game—The Grandeur of the Falls.

By REV. WILLIAM J. PECK.

YELLOWSTONE PARK certainly should be a favorite of old Neptune, for it is the wonderful fairy-region that would have delighted the ancient gods of Greece. Water revels in rivers, rills, mountain torrents and placid lakes. It plays in the fountains, flashes in trouty streams sways hither and thither in towering falls, dashes in bewitching cascades. Water, beautiful water, is everywhere, but especially in evi-

Ne the upper Yellowstone Falls, I s ning along in good humor with ar nd. It was a beautiful autumnal ay , my side roared the waters, ready r t r huge plunge. I looked to the ther de and saw six fair and beautiful eyes, not two rods away in the trees, just by the roadside. They belonged to three sleek and graceful deer. I alighted quietly, but they had heard me, and they leaped away a rod and turned in curiosity and looked at me and my wheel. They were a buck and two does—too beautiful to shoot.

At the Falls—A Wet Dinner.

The river had changed from a broad, quiet stream, as wide in places as the Hudson, to a narrower one of roar and rapids, hemmed in between rocky mountain-like walls. Then came the fine rollicking rapids where the waters seem to say: "If we are to go over, we'll have a good time racing each other through the canyon." Then they roll over a lip of granite rock and tumble down, as, over the upper falls, they drop a hundred feet. They break in white foam and congregated jets of water, chasing each other down, as though for a wager, in rocket-like shapes. That was finer than one could dream: but something finer is going on in less than a mile ahead. Now, as you ride along, you can hear the roar of the lower Falls of Yellowstone. We hasten by the Cascade Falls, and with our wheel, follow the foothpath that makes a descent of several hundred feet to the brink of the falls. It is a thousand feet to the Canyon Hotel in altitude, and it seems farther at dinner time. But I had my dinner with me, and I found a rock at the edge of the falls, and looked at them and listened to their voices, while I made ready to eat. The dinner was good, though limited, and I was about to spread out my frugal repast on the rock when, alas! the partly opened bundle slipped from my hand and rolled into the waters, just dancing to go over the falls. I caught some of it, but dared not follow the remainder. The rest of that dinner fell with the beautiful falls 360 perpendicular feet, amid bewitching white foam, and no doubt made a dinner for the fishes at its base. The rest of my dinner was wet—very wet—and there was not enough of it; and I must be pardoned if I looked with disappointed and envious eyes at the falls that swallowed the bulk of my meal.

SYLVAN LAKE, SOUTH DAKOTA.

The falls are grand and indescribable. Not so wide as Niagara, for these are only seventy-four feet where they coil up to make the final plunge. Nor so big are they as the Yosemite, which fall 2,600 feet, coming down as from the very floor of heaven.

Nevertheless the Falls of the Yellowstone have a greatness and grandeur, a sweetness and power all their own. Seen by moonlight from far-away Inspiration Point they chime like the white-winged angels among the water nymphs. I look down now upon them, from my perch on the mountain side. I root myself in the cleft of the rock, and brace my feet, for I see that the falls have chiseled out a yawning chasm, wild, rugged, awful. If I should drop, or roll a stone over this edge, it would fall over a thousand feet into the chasm of the Yellowstone.

A Glance at the Falls.

The falls have dug through these miles of colored rock like an industrious miner, and never will stop till the lake has been reached seventeen miles above. "The Mason of the Mountain," has left on each side pinnacles of sculptured rock. You feel a thrill of admiration for the shining mass of silvery water, whose drops have chiseled away these billions of tons of rock. That yawning chasm is the most awe-inspiring thing on earth. You look down and are filled with a feeling of danger. Inspiration Point is suspended on a slight pillar, and you clutch a jutting rock as you survey those perpendicular sides beneath you and see the eagle building his nest a thousand feet below, or cleaving the air in its deepening gloom. The canyon vies with the falls in winning admiration. There is a wealth of coloring to astonish a Rembrandt. Some walls are dazzling white, others blood-red. The browns, lavenders, maroons, and yellows, lemon, orange, and pinks seem to have been spread out with the opulence of a divine artist. The sides are two immense stony blackboards on which permanent sunsets, sunrises, and rainbows may have been painted. The walls, to an imaginative mind, exhibit all kinds of architectural plans, in arch, castles, pillar, domes, minarets, flying butress and gothic cathedral. You there can see in outline, ruined cities, as vast as Thebes and Babylon. The Tower of Babel was a pigmy beside the dome on which you stand.

Hanging in mid-air, suspended over the gorge in the vision of the far-reaching canyon, one feels how strong God is and how helpless man. I found myself saying, over and over: "What is man that thou art mindful of him, and the son of man that thou visitest him?"

Mr. Agassiz tells of the effect on Von Buch of natural phenomena, during a trip to Geneva and Mont Blanc. As they faced the deep gorge through which the Rhone issues from the interior of the Alps, others stood chatting and laughing. Von Buch, the lover of nature, who had a poet's instincts, lifted his cap, bowed reverently before the mountains and stood as a worshipper. Such is the attitude of the soul absorbed in contemplation of the Yellowstone and its falls; and their music is a continual incentive to worship the great Creator.

SPEARFISH FALLS, SOUTH DAKOTA.

Agriculture in Public Schools.

"How Can We Relate the Schools to the Agricultural Interests of the Community? Can Scientific Farming Be Made a Part of the Common School Branches?" is the title of a striking paper read on May 20, by Hon. Lawton B. Evans, a prominent Southern educator, before the Georgia State Association of County School Commissioners, in convention at Macon, Ga., for consideration of ways, means and methods of improving county schools. This paper, and the discussion which followed it, is a move in the right direction. If farming can be taught in the public schools, it is held, and rightly so, that they will become increasingly popular in rural districts, and that local taxation to improve them will meet with more favorable consideration. It is not to be disputed that the farmers' occupation is the one most absolutely necessary to the world's well being, and more attention should be given by educators to agricultural problems. We have, in bread riots, practical illustrations of the farmer's importance to the world—in spite of the fact that it is the grain speculator who causes the trouble. Famine will not be so frequent when educators and scientific men take the matter seriously in hand.

THE METROPOLITAN PULPIT

Gallows for Haman.

A Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D., on the Text: Esther 7: 10, ... { So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai.

HERE is an Oriental courtier, about the most offensive man in Hebrew history, Haman by name. He plotted for the destruction of the Israelitish nation, and I wonder not that in some of the Hebrew synagogues to this day when Haman's name is mentioned, the congregation clench their fists and stamp their feet and cry, "Let his name be blotted out!" Haman was Prime Minister in the magnificent court of Persia. Thoroughly appreciative of the honor conferred he expects everybody that he passes to be obsequious. Coming in one day at the gate of the palace, the servants drop their heads in honor of his office; but a Hebrew, named Mordecai, gazes upon the passing dignitary without bending his head or taking off his hat. He was a good man, and would not have been negligent of the ordinary courtesies of life, but he felt no respect either for Haman or the nation from which he had come. So he could not be hypocritical; and while others made Oriental salaam, getting clear down before this Prime Minister when he passed, Mordecai, the Hebrew, relaxed not a muscle of his neck, and kept his chin clear up. Because of that affront Haman gets a decree from Ahasuerus, the dastardly king, for the massacre of all the Israelites, and that, of course, will include Mordecai.

To make a long story short, through Queen Esther this whole plot was revealed to her husband, Ahasuerus. One night Ahasuerus, who was afflicted with insomnia, in his sleepless hours calls for his secretary to read him a few passages of Persian history, and so while away the night. In the book read that night to the king an account was given of a conspiracy, from which Mordecai, the Hebrew, had saved the king's life, and for which kindness Mordecai had never received any reward. Haman, who had been fixing up a nice gallows to hang Mordecai on, was walking outside the door of the king's sleeping-apartment and was called in. The king told him that he had just had read to him the account of some one who had saved his, the king's, life, and he asked what reward ought to be given to such a one. Self-conceited Haman, supposing that he himself was to get the honor, and not imagining for a moment that the deliverer of the king's life was Mordecai, says: "Why, your majesty ought to make a triumph for him, and put a crown on him and set him on a splendid horse, high-stepping and full-blooded, and then have one of your princes lead the horse through the streets, crying, 'Bow the knee, here comes a man who has saved the king's life!'" Then said Ahasuerus in severe tones to Haman: "I know all about your scoundrelism. Now you go out and make a triumph for Mordecai, the Hebrew, whom you hate. Put the best saddle on the finest horse, and you, the prince, hold the stirrup while Mordecai gets on, and then lead his horse through the street. Make haste!"

What a spectacle! A comedy and tragedy at one and the same time. There they go! Mordecai, who had been despised, now starred and robed, in the stirrups. Haman, the chancellor, afoot, holding the prancing, rearing, champing stallion. Mordecai bends his neck at last, but it is to look down at the degraded Prime Minister walking beneath him. Huzza for Mordecai! Alas for Haman! But what a pity to have the gallows, recently built, entirely wasted! It is fifty cubits high, and built with care. And Haman had erected it for Mordecai, by whose stirrups he now walks as groom. Stranger and more startling than any romance, there go up the steps of the scaffolding, side by side, the hangman and Haman the ex-chancellor. "So they hanged Haman on the gallows that he had prepared for Mordecai."

Although so many years have passed since cowardly Ahasuerus reigned, and the beautiful Esther answered to his whims, and Persia perished, yet from the life and death of Haman we may draw living lessons of warning and instruction. And, first, we come to the practical suggestion that, when the heart is wrong, things very insignificant will destroy our comfort. Who would have thought that a great Prime Minister, admired and applauded by millions of Persians, would have been so nettled and harassed by anything trivial? What more could the great dignitary have wanted than his chariots and attendants, and palaces and banquets? If affluence of circumstances can make a man contented and happy, surely Haman should have been contented and happy. No; Mordecai's refusal of a bow takes the glitter from the gold, and the richness from the purple, and the speed from the chariots. Thus shall it always be if the heart is not right. Circumstances the most trivial will disturb the spirit.

It is not the great calamities of life that create the most worriment. I have seen men, felled by repeated blows of misfortune, arising from the dust, never despondING. But the most of the disquiet which men suffer is from insignificant causes; as a lion attacked by some beast of prey turns easily around and slays him, yet runs roaring through the forests at the alighting on his brawny neck of a few insects. You meet some great loss in business with comparative composure; but you can think of petty trickeries inflicted upon you, which arouse all your capacity for wrath, and remain in your heart an unbearable annoyance. If you look back upon your life, you will find that the most of the vexations and disturbances of spirit, which you felt, were produced by circumstances that were not worthy of notice. If you want to be happy you must not care for trifles. Do not be too minute in your inspection of the treatment you receive from others. Who cares whether Mordecai bows when you pass, or stands erect and stiff as a cedar?

Again: I learn from the life of the man under our notice that worldly vanity and sin are very anxious to have piety bow before them. Haman was a fair emblem of entire worldliness, and Mordecai the representative of unflinching godliness. Such were the usages of society in ancient times that, had this Israelite bowed to the Prime Minister, it would have been an acknowledgment of respect for his character and nation. Mordecai would, therefore, have sinned against his religion had he made any obeisance or dropped his chin half an inch before Haman. When, therefore, proud Haman attempted to compel an homage which was not felt, he only did what the world ever since has tried to do, when it would force our holy religion in any way to yield to its dictates. Daniel, if he had been a man of religious compromises, would never have been thrown into the den of lions. He might have made some arrangements with King Darius whereby he could have retained part of his form of religion without making himself so completely obnoxious to the idolaters. Paul might have retained the favor of his rulers and escaped martyrdom if he had only been willing to mix up his Christian faith with a few errors. His unbending Christian character was taken as an insult.

Again: Learn the lesson that pride goeth before a fall. Was any man ever so far up as Haman, who tumbled so far down? Yes, on a smaller scale every day the world sees the same thing. Against their very advantages men trip into destruction. When God humbles proud men, it is usually at the moment of their greatest arrogancy. If there be a man in your community greatly puffed up with worldly success, you have but to stand a little while and you will see him come down. You say, I wonder that God allows that man to go on riding over others' heads and making great assumptions of power. There is no wonder about it. Haman has not yet got to the top. Pride is a commander, well plumed and caparisoned, but it leads forth a dark and frowning host. We have the best of authority for saying that "Pride goeth before destruction and a haughty spirit before a fall." The arrows from the Almighty's quiver are apt to strike a man when on the wing.

Again: This Oriental tale reminds us of the fact that wrongs we prepare for others return upon ourselves. The gallows that Haman built for Mordecai became the Prime Minister's strangulation. Robespierre, who sent so many to the guillotine, had his own head chopped off by the horrid instrument. The evil you practice on others will recoil upon your own pate. Slanders come home. Oppressions come home. Cruelties come home.

You will yet be a lackey walking beside the very charger on which you expected to ride others down. When Charles the First, who had destroyed Strafford, was about to be beheaded, he said, "I basely ratified an unjust sentence, and the similar injustice I am now to undergo is a sensible retribution for the punishment I inflicted on an innocent man." Lord Jeffries, after incarcerating many innocent and good people in London Tower, was himself imprisoned in the same place, where the shades of those whom he had maltreated seemed to haunt him, so that he kept crying to his attendants: "Keep them off, gentlemen, for God's sake, keep them off!" The chickens had come home to roost. The body of Bradshaw, the English judge, who had been ruthless and cruel in his decisions, was taken from his splendid tomb in Westminster Abbey, and at Tyburn hung on a gallows from morning until night in the presence of jeering multitudes. Haman's gallows came a little late, but it came. Opportunities fly in a straight line, and just touch us as they pass from eternity to eternity, but the wrongs we do others fly in a circle, and however the circle may widen out, they are sure to come back to the point from which they started. There are guns that kick!

Furthermore, let the story of Haman teach us how quickly turns the wheel of fortune. One day, excepting the king, Haman was the mightiest man in Persia; but the next day, a lackey. So we go up, and so we come down. You seldom find any man twenty years in the same circumstances. Of those who, in political life twenty years ago, were the most prominent, how few remain in conspicuity. Political parties make certain men do their hard work, and then, after using them as hacks, turn them out on the commons to die. Every four years there is a complete revolution, and about five thousand men who ought certainly to be the next President are shamefully disappointed; while some, who this day are obscure and poverty-stricken, will ride upon the shoulders of the people, and take their turn at admiration and the spoils of office. Oh, how quickly the wheel turns! Ballot-boxes are the steps on which men come down as often as they go up. Of those who were long ago successful in the accumulation of property, how few have not met with reverses! while many of those who then were straitened in circumstances now hold the bonds and the bank-keys of the nation. Of all fickle things in the world, fortune is the most fickle. Every day she changes her mind, and woe to the man who puts any confidence in what she promises or proposes! She cheers when you go up, and she laughs when you come down. Oh, trust not a moment your heart's affections to this changeful world! Anchor your soul in God. From Christ's companionship gather your satisfaction. Then, come sorrow or gladness, success or defeat, riches or poverty, honor or disgrace, health or sickness, life or death, time or eternity, all are yours, and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's.

Again: this Haman's history shows us that outward possessions and circumstances cannot make a man happy. While yet fully vested in authority and the chief adviser of the Persian monarch, and everything that equipage and pomp and splendor of residence could do were his, he is an object-lesson of wretchedness. There are to-day more aching sorrows under crowns of royalty than under the ragged caps of the houseless. Much of the world's affluence and gaiety is only misery in colors. Many a woman seated in the feet at her apple-stand is happier th[an] the great bankers. The mountains of w[ild] honor are covered with perpetual ow[ls].

Were I called to sketch misery [in] worst form, I would not go up to th[e] alley of the poor, but up the hi[gh] way over which prancing Bucephali stri[ke] sparks with their hoofs and be[ar] statuary and parks of stalking [ser]. Wretchedness is more bitter when [it] lowed from gemmed goblets than [from] earthen pitcher or pewter mug. [If] are young people here who are l[ooking] for this position and that circums[tance] thinking that worldly success will [give] peace of the soul, let them shatter t[he] lusion. It is not what we get, it is [what] we are. Daniel among the lions i[n] pier than King Darius on his t[hrone]. And when life is closing, brilli[ant] worldly surroundings will be no [help]. Death is blind, and sees no differe[nce] tween a king and his clown, betwe[en] Nazarene and the Athenian, betw[een] bookless hut and a national library. [The] frivolities of life cannot, with their laugh, echoing from heart to he[art], tirely drown the voice of a treme[ndous] conscience which says: "I am imm[ortal]. I am immortal. From all the heigh[ts] depths of my nature rings down rings up, and rings out the word 'i[m]tal.'" A good conscience, and ass[urance] of life eternal through the Lord Christ are the only securities.

The soul's happiness is too l[ittle] craft to sail up the stream of v[ain] pleasure. As ship-carpenters say, it [has] too much water. This earth is a b[ubble] and it will burst. This life is a [vapor] and it will soon pass away. Time! t[he] only a ripple, and it breaketh again [the] throne of judgment. Our days! [they] fly swifter than a shuttle, weaving a robe of triumph or a garment of [woe]. Begin your life with religion and [the] greatest trial you will be ready. [Your] day will be a triumph, and death [will] only a King's servant calling yo[u to] royal banquet.

Preaching Christ in the Camps.

The Christian Commission Workers Zealously Laboring for Souls at Tampa—The Largest Military Camp in Thirty-five Years—Bibles for Our Boys in Blue—A Work in which All May Help.

(From a Special Correspondent.)

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY, TAMPA, FLA.

NEVER was Tampa so wicked as now. Never was vice so rampant. Nearly every restaurant has been turned into a saloon, and every saloon is also a restaurant. Rum-shop advertisements in the Tampa newspapers are as large as those of the big dry-goods stores in the metropolitan newspapers. The town is what is known as "wide open." All this is only to be expected of any town near a large military encampment.

And at the same time, never was Tampa a good and virtuous and Christian as now. Never have so many and such crowded Gospel meetings been held. Never were so many and such famous evangelists to be heard here. Despite the vice and the drinking and the rowdyism, there are large audiences at the church meetings every evening, and many sincere conversions—soldiers surrendering to Christ before going to battle and to possible death. General Wade, commanding the army corps, is heartily endorsed the Christian movement started by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and the Y. M. C. A., and conducted on the field by General O. O. Howard, Major Whittle and Dr. Gilson. Said General Wade to me: "I am thoroughly in sympathy with this Christian work. It is much better for the boys to be in attendance at such services as those you are holding, than to be lounging about the streets. It does them good and, if your meetings are held in the evenings, does not interfere with duty or discipline." As already described in this paper, the Christian work is under the direction of Mr. Gilson Awaiting Mr. Moody's arrival, it is conducted nightly by the evangelists mentioned above.

Nine Square Miles of Camp.

Tampa is the largest camp scene of the Civil war. As the camps are spread over nine square miles of land, the discipline is magnificent, and getting out is expensive. We have 25,000 soldiers here. They attend the services held in different parts of the field, at ten thousands. General Howard has not yet preached to an audience numbering less than 10,000 men. At his first service, he had a lamp so that the light fell on his face.

"When I get down to Cuba," he said, "I want you boys to know me."

The General is really in closer touch with the soldiers than are the chaplains. He greets the boys in blue as a man and a brother, as comrade and brother. The soldiers love to join in the Gospel hymns. Immediately after the service, 3,000 voices join in some tune of "America," the result is simply thrilling. A regimental band always takes the place of church organ—a fact appreciated by the soldiers.

Bibles for the Soldiers.

Twenty-five hundred Bibles, Testaments and Gospels have been distributed among the camps by the American Bible Society. Four thousand books of the Christian Moody Colportage Library have already been given to the men. Three thousand copies of sacred songs in paper covers have also been handed to the soldiers to take to Cuba. And yet, notwithstanding this wholesale distribution of literature, the soldiers' great lament is that there is nothing to read. I have therefore suggested that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD send me 10,000 copies to give to the soldiers. They will be as welcome as the 5,000 distributed at Chickamauga. Certainly this is a grand opportunity for Christians at home to respond to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD'S call for the money and other necessary aid necessary to carry Christ to our soldiers before they go to the dread fields of Cuba.

Welcoming "The Christian Herald."

Do not entertain the idea that only the "regulars" need reading matter. The volunteers are just as eager, just as ready. Yesterday, I visited for the first time, the camps of the New York and Massachusetts regiments. They had evidently heard of the work of this journal at Chickamauga: for as I appeared on the edge of the field there went up a great shout: Here comes THE CHRISTIAN HERALD." And the boys rushed forward crying: "Give us the latest copy." I had not one, but I said: "Boys, next time."

That was only twenty-four hours ago; yet a hundred men have since called to me individually, as they passed me in different parts of my daily journey of nine weary miles: "Don't forget to bring us a CHRISTIAN HERALD."

It is a remarkable coincidence that on this same field of Tampa, Gen. Howard was converted, forty-one years ago. Here, in the First Methodist Church of Tampa, he began his Christian work. He relates this circumstance to the men nightly—with most excellent results. I have seen as many as sixty soldiers march up to the altar at one time—when the General called for Christ's volunteers.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has sent one thousand dollars to Mr. Moody to defray the expenses of the work, and will send other sums as they are supplied, and as the need arises. Every day adds to the proof that this is an opportunity for Christian service, so rare and so promising that it would be wicked to neglect it. The men in the camps welcome the preachers and the books and religious literature, and many of them, realizing the perils into which they are going, are disposed to give the subject of personal religion an attention which they would not give in ordinary circumstances. As the letter of our special correspondent, printed above, shows, there are temptations inseparable from camp-life surrounding them, which is another reason for making the services attractive and presenting the Gospel in a strong, vigorous, pointed way. The men need to be pointed to Christ, who gives them the power to resist temptation, who will be with them in danger, and will, even in the hour of death, should death come to them in the service of their country, be their Saviour, assuring them of eternal life. It is a glorious message, and the only one which suits their present circumstances. It is a privilege to send them such a message and to contribute the funds required for so Christlike a work.

It is gratifying to learn that the Young Men's Christian Association has announced its purpose of co-operating in the effort by placing at Mr. Moody's disposal the facilities it has already secured for preaching services. Mr. Moody is to have entire charge of its evangelistic operations, to select the preachers and to direct the Gospel campaign. No better man could have been chosen for this responsible duty, and his acceptance of it will inspire confidence everywhere. Everyone knows that the pure Gospel, unmixed with modern heresy, will be preached by the men whom Mr. Moody sends to the camps, and that from their lips the men will hear nothing but the life-giving message of Christ and him crucified. Dr. A. C. Dixon has now completed a month of service at Tampa, and his place there has now been taken by Dr. Wharton of Baltimore, Md., whose stalwart evangelical preaching is known to all the churches. Dr. Wharton has been one of Mr. Moody's most energetic, devoted and trusted helpers in his campaigns at the World's Fair, in New York, and in other cities, besides conducting revival services with marked success in many States. His preaching is direct, personal and singularly outspoken on the cardinal doctrines of the Gospel. He will prove a worthy successor to Dr. Dixon in the camp, and we earnestly hope that his preaching will be blessed to many souls.

Dr. Dixon's report of the work and of the men is most encouraging. Writing from Tampa, on Monday, May 23, he said: "Yesterday was a great day with us. I spoke four times, and at the three p. m. service we had a large congregation, filling all the seats in the Tabernacle and many were standing. Not less than 500 soldiers confessed their faith in Christ. At seven p. m. General Howard gave a farewell address to a large audience and spoke in the Tampa Bay Hotel, at nine p. m. He and Major Whittle left this morning for Mobile and Chickamauga. Every camp in the country should be occupied. Such opportunities for winning men to Christ may not come again in this generation."

Major Whittle's report is of the same tenor. Writing on the same day, he says: "We had a grand day yesterday with the soldiers. About twelve services in all were held, and many were blessed. All is quiet this morning. We leave in a few minutes for Mobile. We are sorry to go, as the opportunities here are great. We rely, however, on your having some one here this week. There are about 10,000 men at Mobile, and no one but local workers to preach to them. They have sent urgent word for us to come. We shall be the guests of General Coppinger while there. We shall leave Friday for Chickamauga. About 8,000 soldiers heard the Gospel yesterday. They like the books, and are all getting them."

Mr. Moody is especially anxious to have the fleet well supplied with good Christian literature. The soldiers and sailors on our ships cannot get the daily papers, and eagerly read the books and religious papers sent to them. The New Testaments and Gospel portions, which are handy for the pocket, are particularly welcome on every ship. The list of subscriptions published on this page shows that Christian people everywhere are realizing the value of this opportunity and are providing the funds to take advantage of it. The good work both in the army and navy must go on, and therefore we shall gladly receive all the help our readers may send for the purpose.

PROGRESS OF THE WAR.

THE "CORNERING" OF SPAIN'S FLEET FOLLOWED BY AN ASSAULT ON SANTIAGO.

Porto Rico will Next be Attacked, and the Main Invasion of Cuba to Follow Later—Spain's Domestic Troubles—Our Relief Work Among the Reconcentrados—Peace Talk Abroad.

AFTER many days of painful uncertainty, each day bringing some conflicting rumor, the nation drew a breath of relief when it was officially announced on Sunday, May 29, that Commodore Schley at last had the elusive Spanish fleet safely locked inside the harbor of Santiago de Cuba. It was learned that the first glimpse of this mysterious fleet had fallen to Capt. Sigsbee of the auxiliary cruiser, St. Paul, who saw two men-of-war of the Vizcaya class and two torpedo boats, lying in Santiago harbor and only a short distance from the entrance—the rest of the fleet being presumably farther within. Besides this, it is announced by the Navy Department that Commodore Schley has personally observed and identified the fleet of Admiral Cervera in the harbor. When it is remembered that, for weeks, this mysterious fleet had been absolutely invisible to Americans, and in all its wanderings, had not been sighted or even definitely located, by any vessel of the United States navy, it is not surprising that people should have been slow to believe it safely cornered at last. Cervera's seamanship had been such that Americans feared lest he should slip away from Schley after all. The commander of the Flying Squadron, however, is taking measures to prevent such an occurrence, and will blockade the narrow entrance to Santiago harbor by sinking several stone-laden hulks across the channel. Unless Admiral Cervera should himself undertake to run the gauntlet, Commodore Schley will not attack him, but will await the coming of a large force of American troops, when an assault will be made on Santiago and on the Spanish fleet by land and sea. Meanwhile Schley may reduce the forts at the entrance and clear the channel of mines and torpedoes.

HON. CHAS. A. SCHIEREN,
Treas. Cuban Central Relief Committee.

Immediately after receiving positive news of the cornering of the Spanish squadron, our government decided to begin the invasion of Cuba by landing a force of 15,000 regular troops—infantry and artillery—near Santiago, under command of Maj.-Gen. Shafter. This force will carry a number of siege guns, which can be used against either the forts or the Spanish fleet in the harbor. After Santiago has been reduced, Porto Rico will be attacked and a large force of troops landed. It is probable that the main invasion of Cuba may not take place until after the Santiago and Porto Rico campaigns. As these first movements will be carried out by regular troops and may occupy considerable time, it is expected that the volunteer regiments will have the opportunity to become fully efficient in field drill and discipline before being called into active service. At least 75,000 men will be needed for the invasion of Cuba, and while President McKinley and his Cabinet advisers are disposed to end the suffering in Cuba at the earliest possible moment, they believe that in order to do this work, our troops must be thoroughly drilled, equipped and organized, which is not the case at present.

Not at any time since the war began has there been such intense military activity, by sea and land, as has prevailed throughout the country during the past week. Shipyards, powder mills, projectile manufactories, clothing and shoe factories, ambulance and tent-makers, and a score or more of allied occupations are busy, day and night, hurrying forward to completion the huge orders that have been placed with them by the Government for war material and supplies. Nor is the commissariat department neglected, for every day sees trains speeding southward loaded with hundreds of tons of food for our soldiers at the various military camps. President McKinley has issued a second call for volunteers, and when the additional 75,000 recruits are enlisted our available army will then consist of over 250,000 men. Meanwhile the work of equipping and drilling the recruits is going forward rapidly at all the military camps. At the great Chickamauga camp the ground occupied by the troops covers a territory of nine square miles. At Tampa, Fla., the concentration of troops has proceeded steadily, and when the real invasion of Cuba begins, 50,000 efficient men, sound in health and well equipped, will be moved to the points of landing with remarkable rapidity. According to the present programme several regular army corps will lead the movement, both cavalry and infantry, well supplied by light artillery. It is expected that they will have the active co-operation of a considerable insurgent force under Gomez, but Gen. Miles will not depend greatly upon outside assistance.

S. Barrosta, a passenger who left Cienfuegos as late as May 20th, on a British steamer, represents the condition of affairs in Cuba as one of absolute famine and anarchy. Spaniards are killing Cubans who are known to have the slightest sympathy with the United States, and are abusing Cuban families without hindrance. While the troops in the cities have a limited food supply, the non-combatant Spaniards and the Cuban reconcentrados are now about equally destitute. Deaths from hunger and the diseases it engenders are so numerous that no records are kept. Yellow fever has broken out among the troops who are crowded in wretched quarters in the filthy seaports. Hundreds of the soldiers brought from Spain are dying of the fever daily. Senor Barrosta adds, that if the present situation lasts two months longer, Cuba will be a vast cemetery. People are fleeing from the island more from the dread of hunger and the prospect of famine than the fear of war.

To the many thousands of Christian men and women who are deeply interested in the relief work among the Cuban reconcentrados, it will be welcome news that notwithstanding the war, the good Samaritan work they inaugurated and carried on so grandly, has not been wholly effaced. Does War Pay?

SOME one has been estimating that the seven years' war of the American Revolution cost the country $20,000,000 annually in specie. But it made the grandest and freest republic the world ever saw. It set the standard and pace toward human freedom till the end of time. It gave the world one Washington, one Jefferson, one Franklin, one John Adams. These results are cheap at any cost. The war of 1812 cost us $72,000,000. The war with Mexico $25,000,000. The war we are now waging for the freedom of the Cubans costs us $100,000,000 a month. Every big gun of defence costs from $100,000 to $300,000 for the manufacture, every battleship destroyed is a loss of $2,000,000, and the aggregate value of ten of our warships is $28,800,000.

These are only material estimates. The loss of life, the waste of industries, the breaking up of happy homes, the engendering of wicked passions; these are to be added to the account. But, if there would have been no America without war, if we could have had no free ships without war, if we could have had no well-established national existence without war, who will say that, great as was the expenditure, we have paid for these things too great a price? And, as to this war, it is the war of the Good Samaritan, determined to minister to the men who went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and fell among thieves; though the thieves are in arms to resist the ministration.

Earthly Honors.

THE honors and emoluments of this world bring so many cares with them that they bring also torture and disquietude. By patriotic devotion, by honesty, by Christian principle, I would have every reader seek for the favor and the confidence of his fellowmen, but not to look upon some high position in society as though that were always sunshine. The mountains of earthly honor are like the mountains of Switzerland, covered with perpetual ice and snow. Having obtained the confidence and the love of your associates, be content with such things as you have. You brought nothing into this world, and it is very certain you can carry nothing out. Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils. There is an honor that is worth possessing, but it is an honor that comes from God.

A rrespondent of the New York Sun, riti from New Orleans, describes a gnif nt spectacle that he witnessed on s w to that city. There was a regi- ent Southern volunteers marching to mp As the correspondent had served rou the war and had a vivid recollec- n the intense feeling aroused in that ectio he watched anxiously to see what epon the crowd would give these uth n men in the United States uni- rm. e was surprised to see how lustily ney eered the men and the officers and he fl. The band played. "The Star- pang d Banner," and followed with Dix and the enthusiasm everywhere as bounded. But the great surprise as come. One company had been rder out so hurriedly that they had ot s ed their proper equipment. The orre ondent says he rubbed his eyes, hink g he must be dreaming. Every man the company was clad in the old Confe erate uniform. The men had egg or borrowed the suits somewhere, nd re marching with the men in blue nde he old flag in perfect satisfaction. It was a uniform they were wearing, anyway, and the man inside it was just as loyal and just as eager to meet the enemies of his country, as the man in blue. No company was so heartily cheered in the New Orleans streets that day as the men in gray. They will soon get the regulation uniform, but if in the meantime a battle had to be fought, there would be a perfect comradeship in spite of the difference of uniform. It is much to be wished that in the Lord's army the same spirit prevailed. It is always a misfortune for the common cause when Christians think more of the uniform than of the man and will not recognize as a brother anyone whose uniform differs from their own. The disposition to do this has always existed in spite of the Apostolic warning:

He is not a Jew which is one outwardly . . . . but he who is one inwardly, and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit (Rom. 2 : 27, 28).

Roentgen Rays in War.

Army surgeons who are going to the front will be interested in a report presented to a medical association a few days ago by Surgeon Beevor, who has been serving with the British army in the campaign against the tribes on the northwestern frontier of India. It is the first campaign in which the military hospitals have had the aid of the Roentgen Rays. Dr. Beevor eloquently acknowledged the benefit derived from them, and showed on a screen some of the more remarkable instances of the service they had rendered. Many important cases consisted of bullet wounds received by officers and men who were injured in the bones, joints, and internal organs. Their injuries but for the rays would have resulted in the amputation of limbs, and, in some cases, a search for the bullet involving probable loss of life. The pictures shown included wounds in the arm, leg, chest, back, and other parts. The most remarkable results, perhaps, were in a case of a bullet embedded in the backbone, and of an Indian soldier who was shot in the foot, pieces of the bullet finally lodging in the back of the heel. In all the instances enumerated the bullets were by the use of the rays successfully located and removed, the men subsequently rejoining their comrades at the front. It is not so easy to recover men wounded by sin. When the bullet is located, the patient is glad to have it extracted, but though sin is just as fatal to the soul as the bullet is to the body, the spiritual sufferer often clings to it and shrinks from the pain involved in eliminating it from his nature.

Though wickedness be sweet in his mouth, though he hide it under his tongue; though he spare it and will not let it go, it is the gall of asps within him (Job 20: 12-14).

Saved Against Their Will.

An official application was made recently to the New York Supreme Court for authority to avert the collapse of two buildings. The tenants would not allow the Commissioner of Buildings to enter, and there was no way to save them but to invoke the authority of the court. In one of the instances the building was being used as a millinery store, in which twenty girls were employed. The house next to it had been torn down and an excavation made for a new foundation. This caused the walls to bulge and all the floors sagged badly, and the plastering of the ceilings was falling continually. The girls were alarmed, but their employer insisted that there was no danger and threatened the Commissioner when he called. In the other house complained of, the danger was almost as great, and the Commissioner actually found two men in the cellar tearing away the foundations of a brick chimney which served as a buttress for a weak wall. If they had been allowed to finish their work, the wall would have fallen and the families on the various floors would have been in danger of losing their lives. But in both instances, the Commissioner's efforts were resisted and not until he obtained the Court's order could he enforce the vacation of the premises. It is marvelous that people should have to be driven out of a position of danger, but ministers and Christian workers know by experience that there is even greater indifference to spiritual peril which is infinitely more certain and more terrible.

Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be? (II. Peter 3 : 11).

Residence or Domicile.

An applicant for divorce in North Dakota has suffered a disappointment through the decision of the Supreme Court of that State. The divorce courts of that State have been busy for three years past owing to the fact that the law gave a person who could prove a residence of ninety days in the State the right to sue in its courts. The Legislature of South Dakota had extended the term there to six months, and Oklahoma required a year's residence, so that North Dakota offered exceptional advantages to litigants. Among the divorces granted under this law was one to a man whose business and home are in New York. Two years ago he qualified to sue by a residence at Jamestown, N. D., of ninety days, and secured a decree. But his wife has demanded a rehearing and applied to the Supreme Court. A decision has just been rendered in her favor, and the divorce is declared invalid. The reason assigned for the decision is that the husband stayed at a hotel with no belongings but the ordinary baggage of a transient traveler. The Court holds that such aresidence did not give him a domicile in the State, which is essential to confer the privileges of a litigant. The word domicile implies residence with intention to remain. If he had bought or built a house, and had removed his furniture, or otherwise proved his intention to become a permanent resident of the State, he would have had the right to sue after ninety days and the divorce would have been valid; but the Court would not consider a stay at a hotel as conferring domicile. The principle applies to spiritual matters. There are many who are willing to make a temporary reformation of life and to deny themselves for a time in the hope of gaining a title to heaven who do not wish Christ to reign permanently in their lives. They alone are accepted of him whose desire is that of the prophet:

O the hope of Israel, the Saviour thereof in trouble, why shouldest thou be as a stranger in the land and as a wayfaring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night? . . . We are called by thy name; leave us not (Jer. 14:9).

Rescued from Niagara.

A daring rescue took place at Niagara Falls a few days ago. It was nearing sunset, when a woman looking at the Falls caught sight of a man clinging to a wave-washed rock in the river off Luna Island. It was plain that he had come from up stream, but the wonder was how he had escaped being carried over the American Falls. An alarm was given, and a party headed by a guide named McCloy went to his rescue. After reaching Luna Island, a rope was tied around McCloy's body, and he waded out into the stream toward the imperilled man. His course led him across a narrow channel to a small island, and from there in a roundabout direction along a ledge to where the man was lodged. The current is swift, and the rocks slippery at that point, but with care he picked his way to the man. He tied the rope about him, and his companions on the island pulled with all their power. People on shore stood pale with fear lest the rope should break and McCloy and the man he was trying to rescue should both go over the falls. The rope held, however, and the two men were gradually drawn to safety and finally landed. It is so that men are saved from the rapids of sin. The servants of God must go out to them with the life-line, but the power which saves comes from the heavenly shore:

Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved . . . but how shall they believe on him of whom they have not heard and how shall they hear without a preacher (Rom. 10 : 13, 14).

A STREET IN THE STAMBOUL QUARTER OF CONSTANTINOPLE, THE SCENE OF THE RECENT FIRE.

A Strange Missile.

An old hunter in Taney County, Mo., is boasting of a remarkable feat accomplished by his twelve-year-old son. The boy was spending a day out in the woods and had with him an old-fashioned muzzle-loading gun. Toward evening he decided to return home, but before starting, thought he would load his gun, in case something might come in his way worth shooting. He found, however, to his vexation, after putting in the powder, that he had neither bullet nor shot left. He felt in his pocket for something to use instead, and found a white stone marble which boys call an "alley taw." It fitted the muzzle of his gun, so the boy dropped it in, and rammed it down on the wad covering the powder. He had not proceeded many yards before a deer crossed his path within range. He levelled his gun and fired. The deer dropped, and on going to look at it, he found that the marble had pierced its vitals. Thus, even a child's toy was turned into a deadly missile by the force behind it. So a word that seems weak and powerless, may become the means of eternal life, if it is directed by the power of the Holy Spirit:

Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit saith the Lord of hosts (Zech. 4 : 6).

OUR MURDERED MISSIONARIES.

The Rising in Sierra Leone, Africa, in which Five American Missionaries of the United Brethren were Killed.

SAD news from Africa, already given in our "Brief Notes" column, is now received in detail from Rotufunk, a station lying south of Freetown in Sierra Leone, not far from the Liberian frontier. In an outbreak there the natives set upon the American Mission and murdered the five missionaries, Rev. J. N. and Mrs. Cain, Miss Hatfield, M. D., Miss Archer and Mrs. Schenck. Portraits of four of these devoted martyrs which have been published by the London Graphic appear on this page.

THE LATE MISS HATFIELD, M. D. THE LATE MRS. SCHENCK. THE LATE REV. J. N. CAIN. THE LATE MRS. CAIN.

THE MURDERED SIERRA LEONE MISSIONARIES.

From reports made to the British government by the local consular agent, it appears that the government imposed a tax amounting to twenty-five cents a head on the people of the district to pay the cost of partially maintaining a force to protect the villages against slave-raiders. The project of organizing this force was naturally opposed by the miscreants who are making large fortunes by stealing men and women and selling them for slaves. They went to the native merchants from whom they bought their gunpowder and liquors and explained to them that the proposed force would put an end to their business and consequently there would be no more orders for supplies. This excited the merchants who promptly set about inciting the natives to resistance. They scared the natives by telling them that the government had taken possession of their huts, and that the tax was the rent they would in future have to pay for living in them. The people feeling themselves wronged, immediately rose in wrath, determined to refuse payment. Not content with assuming the defensive they resolved to drive the white men out of the country, and not being able to discriminate between the British and the Americans fell upon the station at Rotufunk and killed the inmates.

The distressing details of the massacre that followed are given by a native, who was with the American missionaries at the time, but escaped. He says: "We started to walk to Sierra Leone, but had only gone half a mile when we met war boys, who blocked the way. The Rev. Mr. Cain tried to frighten them by firing a revolver over their heads; but, seeing they were determined to do mischief, he cast his revolver away and said he would not have anybody's blood on his hands. The war boys then seized the party, with Misses Hatfield, Archer and Schenck, stripped them of their clothing, dragged them back to the Mission House, in front of which they cut down the Rev. Mr. Cain and hacked him to death, and then treated Miss Archer and Miss Schenck in the same way. Miss Hatfield, who was very ill, was thrown on a barbed-wire netting, and finally her throat was cut. Mrs. Cain escaped to the bush with a native girl, but the war boys went out seeking for them, and they were captured and killed."

Still more deplorable news is brought by some American missionaries of the same denomination who succeeded in making their escape and reached Liverpool in safety. They are Mr. and Mrs. Buttner, Mr. and Mrs. Minshall, Mr. Ward and Miss Mullen, who are on their way to this country. They give thrilling accounts of their escape. Mr. Buttner says that in addition to the white missionaries, a number of native teachers, some educated in the United States, were massacred including Mr. A. R. Wilberforce and his entire family, a brother-in-law of Mr. Wilberforce, Mr. Cole and Professor Clements, all of whom were stationed at Danville, and the entire Hughes family, who were stationed at Avery. In the opinion of Mr. Buttner, several hundred persons fell victims to the wrath of the natives. Miss Muller was in grave danger for three days, but a boat's crew from a British warship arrived in time to rescue her. The crew found the hut in which she was, surrounded with blood-besmeared natives.

The United Brethren in Christ, from whom these devoted missionary martyrs went, is an organization which arose about 1800 out of the labors of Rev. Philip Otterbein, who came from Nassau, Germany, in 1752. The members were chiefly Methodists. Lutherans and Mennonites, who united together with the object of gaining greater religious liberty and promoting the evangelization of the world. The latest statistics give the number of missionaries of the United Brethren now in foreign fields as fifty-five.

ENTRANCE TO A HINDU TEMPLE, SOUTHERN INDIA.

Our illustration shows the entrance to one of India's magnificent temples. No buildings of any age or in any part of the globe are more extensive and ornate than the shrines which Hindus raised, ages ago, to their many-armed deities, Brahma, Vishnu and Siva. The vast walls of these buildings often embrace the greater part of the town in which they are located. The elaborate carvings show the long and painstaking work of patient artificers who thus wasted their lives in the worship of false gods. These temples are often the repository of treasuries of precious metals and jewels. The best time to visit them is during the great annual Mela, or religious fair, at which time the courts are crowded with pilgrims.

Educating Heathen Children at Rangoon, Burmah.

Dr. Klopsch's check for $10 enclosed in his last letter, which came during my absence from Rangoon, has been applied to the education of a poor lad, named Ronald Stedston, a good boy, entirely dependent upon us. He has a fine voice and is the leading singer in our large and well-trained college choir, which adds much to the interest of our Sunday services. The number connected as pupils with the college is 414, and our chapel is crowded on Sunday. We have about 200 Burmans, 120 Karens, thirty Europeans and Eurasian pupils, and the rest are divided between seven or eight other races. We have about fifty poor boys who do some work in return for their schooling. We should take more boys of a class who are too poor to pay, but we have to keep expenses within our means. Last year I had to refuse many boys, sorely against my will. The object of the college is to give higher education under strong evangelical influences. It is the only college in the province where such influences prevail. The Government College takes no notice of religion, and is really non-Christian in its influence. J. N. CUSHING.

Won from their Idols.

Forty years ago I began my work in Africa, the cradle of heathenism. I have rescued victims from the poisonous bowl of sasswood, and have held up Christ as a sufficient Saviour to those around me. One boy, who entered this station as a student at its opening, a rank heathen, is to-day a Christian member of our church, a successful trader and a civil officer of the nation. John Parsons, once a heathen, is now a school-teacher, a member of our church, and farmer.

Domo, a Krooman, attended church, openly renounced his idols, professed religion, and demanded baptism. Domo is a very influential man among the Kroo tribe. He became interested in Christianity when he was very sick. Let me use his own language: "I was very sick. I thought I would die. I was helpless I trusted Jesus would save me." When he recovered he came to church and joined. I have taken two heathen boys, bright little fellows, Marque and Nebah.

THE RISEN LORD.

S. Lesson for June 19. Matt. 28:8-20.
Golden Text, Rev. 1:18.

BY MRS. M. BAXTER.

WHEN the Apostle John, the seer and the exile in Patmos, beheld in vision the glorified Son of man, and "fell at his feet as dead," the right hand of the Glorified, and his word, raised and quick- e he apostle. "He laid his right hand o ne, saying, Fear not: I am the first d he last, and the living One; and I w s dead and behold I am alive for ever- or and I have the keys of death and l ies" (Rev. 1:18, R.V.) When an a ned soul knows only a Saviour that s that was dead, and that one time d for his sins, he may behold and d stand the atonement indeed, but he e not see himself eternally united by e y same life to the risen living One. e ever liveth to make intercession for us (Hebrews 37:25.)

T ngs had reached the chief priests nd Pharisees of words spoken by the r which, although often repeated, had ev r been understood by the disciples. The enemies of Jesus began to fear that he who had raised Lazarus from the dead, if he had been dead four days, would be able to fulfil his prophecy of his own resurrection. Thus they were gathered together to Pilate, saying, "Sir, we remember that that deceiver said, After three days I will rise again. Command therefore that the sepulchre be made sure until the third day, lest haply his disciples come and steal him away, and say unto the people, He is risen from the dead: so the last error will be worse than the first (Matt. 27:62-64). This was only too bold; it was not the disciples they feared, it was the power of him who had proved himself to be conqueror of death in the raising of Lazarus. Pilate granted them a guard of soldiers, saying, "Ye have a guard, go your way; make it as sure as ye know" (Matt. 27:65, R.V.)

At the sepulchre was rifled, not by human hands; the guard were attacked, not by offensive disciples. The earth itself quaked with the first throbs of returning life the body of him who gave life to all men, and "the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled away the stone and sat upon it . . . And for fear of him [not of the disciples] the watchers did quake and became as dead men (Matt. 28:2-4.)

Also in the early morning, after Mary Magdalene, who first saw the risen Lord, (Mark 16:9; John 20:14-18), had returned to them, a little company of women came to visit the sepulchre. The angel seated on the stone said to the women, Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus which hath been crucified; he is not here, for he has risen as he said. Come see the place where the Lord lay." He is risen as he said. Every message from heaven regarding the resurrection of Christ honored and recalled his words. In Luke 24 we are told that when the women came to the sepulchre, bringing spices and ointments, they "entered into the tomb, but found not the body of the Lord Jesus. While they were perplexed thereat, behold two men stood by them in dazzling apparel. And as they were affrighted, and bowed down their faces to the earth, they said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen. Remember how he spake unto you when he was yet in Galilee, saying that the son of man must be delivered up into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again. And they remembered his words" (Luke 24:1-8, R.V.). Oh, how responsible are we for all that God has said to us in his Word! Had the disciples understood him, how could they have forsaken him? How could Peter have denied him? How certainly would they have looked for his resurrection! Instead of taking spices with them to embalm a dead body, they would have known that it was impossible that he should have been holden of death, and they would have stood in the strength of his own Word, "I am the Resurrection and the Life" (John 11:25), with immovable faith that he would rise again.

And the soldiers on that guard who had witnessed the earthquake and the rent tomb, but who had no eyes to see the risen Jesus, what of them? A Roman soldier who failed in his duty must die: they had been unable to keep the tomb; their lives were in danger. They came into the city and told the chief priests. Immediately they held a council with the elders, not to humble themselves before God, for their awful sin in crucifying him whose tomb had been broken open by divine power, and whose angel from heaven had so terrified the soldiers. They stood out to the very last, now manifestly and wilfully fighting against God. They had already so tampered with their own consciences that they had ceased to act. However much they may have deluded themselves beforehand in the belief that Jesus was an impostor, they had now no excuse for their sin of rejecting him. The testimony of their own hirelings was against them, and only wilful, persistent defiance of God could have allowed them to give large money unto the soldiers to bribe them to the lie that the disciples had stolen him away while they slept.

But the Lord was risen, and leaving Jerusalem the eleven disciples went into Galilee, "unto the mountain where Jesus had appointed them. And when they saw him they worshipped him, but some doubted." Thomas was one. "Except I see: except I feel," was the condition upon which he would believe (John 20:24-29). But the Lord calls blessed "they that have not seen and yet have believed." The whole of this dispensation is one of walking by faith and not by sight (II. Cor. 5:7): we are dead, and our life—our eternal life, proceeding from the risen and living One—is "hid with Christ in God."

"THE ANGEL SAID UNTO THE WOMEN COME SEE THE PLACE WHERE THE LORD LAY."

LESSON POINTS.

Suggestions and Illustrations for the Use of Sunday School Teachers.

SCEPTICS are fond of dwelling on the differences between the narratives of the events at and following the resurrection. It must be noted, however, that these differences are not contradictions. While it is difficult to make a clear and chronological harmony of the five narratives in the Evangelists and the first chapter of Acts, it is possible to form from them a fairly complete idea of what occurred. Evidently the resurrection was not expected by any of them. The women went to the tomb with their spices to finish the embalming of the body, which had been only temporarily done at the hurried burial on Friday night. Their consternation at finding the tomb open and empty, and the surprise of the disciples when they heard of it, show how little the statement of Christ, that he would rise from the dead, had impressed them. It was difficult to convince them that he had risen. Five times that day Christ was seen and spoken with. Yet even then Thomas and some others would not believe. A week afterwards he was again seen and Thomas was convinced. They were then instructed to go to Galilee, where Christ would meet them. This was probably in order that the disciples in the northern country, who were much more numerous than in Jerusalem, might see him, and all together might receive his benediction and be prepared to testify to his resurrection. Two appearances are recorded in Galilee, one of them being probably the one mentioned by Paul (I. Cor. 15:7). Then they returned to Jerusalem, where on Mount Olivet the final interview and the ascension took place. There were thus nine appearances in all, besides that to James, which Paul refers to.

With fear and great joy. They all felt that they were in the presence of divinity and must therefore have experienced awe, but their Lord was alive again and therefore they rejoiced. The combination was seen in their conduct. There was no more of the easy familiarity of their former intercourse, but they fell at his feet and worshipped him. The biographers of Napoleon, tell how he and Bourienne, the friend of his boyhood, met, when Napoleon was the most famous man in Europe. Napoleon had not seen him since as two poor boys, they had separated after graduation. Bourienne did not force himself on his friend, but Napoleon sought him out and wrote him, begging him to come and be his private secretary. Eventually Bourienne received the letter and went to Paris. Napoleon was reviewing his troops when Bourienne appeared. Remembering his old friend's present exalted station, Bourienne waved aside Napoleon's proffered hand and, dropping on one knee, said, "Sire, I am proud to have the honor of serving you."

I am with you alway. The promise is fulfilled to every generation. The risen Christ remains with all power in his hands to bless and help all who put their trust in him. A traveler in Europe tells of a monument he saw in one of the cemeteries which shows how Christ's resurrection has comforted the mourners in every subsequent age. The monument stands over the grave of a pious lady whose husband, once an unbeliever, had found consolation in his bereavement. Carved on the marble is a coffin with its lid rent. The coffin is empty, and projecting from the broken lid is a Bible and a cross, and underneath are the words in Latin that the angels addressed to the women at the sepulchre: "He is not here; he is risen."

Jesus met them. What a meeting that must have been! They had seen him die on the cross, and they had laid his body in the tomb, yet he met them. Their wonder and awe must have been extreme. It would increase during the following weeks when he appeared and disappeared with such mysterious power. One of Tennyson's beautiful poems describes a wonderful creation of poetic fancy. It is that of a man who ardently loved a beautiful woman, resigning himself to seeing her become the wife of his friend. He repressed his love, but when years afterward, he heard of her death he begged to be allowed to see her in the vault where she had been laid. He looked lovingly on the face, still beautiful, and as he looked he thought he saw the motion of an eyelid. He satisfied himself that he had not been mistaken, and then took the body in his arms and bore her to his mother's house, where after a long struggle she was nursed back to life and health. The husband had fled, that he might overcome his grief in foreign travel, but when he returned his friend made him a great supper, to which all the neighborhood was invited. When the feast was at its height the story was told, and the husband received his wife from the tomb.

We will persuade him. The priests might have complained of the guard to Pilate. It was a high crime for a Roman sentinel to sleep on duty. But if they had complained, the guards would have defended themselves by describing the supernatural event they had witnessed, and this the Jews were especially anxious to keep secret. They therefore bribed the soldiers to confess a crime that they had not committed, and undertook to screen them from punishment. When men have done a wicked thing they do not know what other wicked things they will have to do to hide it. These high priests had to pay common soldiers to tell lies. One of the most thrilling passages in fiction is that of the respectable Bradley Headstone, the learned school-teacher, whose passion caused him to commit a crime, bribing the low, degraded Riderhood, who knew of his guilt, for his silence. The slavery of the educated, cultivated scholar to the blackguardly ruffian who had him in his power, is a vivid instance of the retribution which dogs the wrongdoer.

SOWERS AND REAPERS.

Sermon by Rev. J. B. Hawthorne, D.D., First Baptist Church, Nashville. Text, Eccl. 2 : 1 : } Cast thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days.

IN these words we have a divine promise. It is, of course, understood that the "bread" in this passage means seed. The farmer does not sow bread, but that which makes bread. While reference here is to a well-known fact—the casting of grain upon the overflow waters of the Nile—the language is highly poetical. In the literature of every people, seed is an emblem of something comparatively small and insignificant from which springs something large and magnificent. From a tiny seed comes the bright flower, or the majestic tree and the luscious fruit.

Thought is a seed. A single intellectual conception expressed in word or action, or embodied in painting or sculpture, is a seed from which a world-wide harvest may spring. A great poet says, "A sentence has formed a character, and a character has changed a kingdom." Patrick Henry's exclamation, "Give me liberty or give me death," fell into a rich soil of patriotic hearts and then grew into a harvest which has gladdened one great nation, and given hope to oppressed and struggling millions in other lands. Some years ago I stood in the midst of a great gathering of American laborers and heard one of their speakers quote these words from the pen of Henry W. Grady: "The man who laughs at the power of organized labor is a fool." The thunder of applause which greeted the repetition of that sentiment, and its subsequent appearance upon the banners of labor organizations, showed that Grady had dropped a seed sentence from his pen which was destined to live in the memories and shape the conduct of thousands of his fellow-countrymen. When William Carey, in one of his inspirational moods, exclaimed: "Let us attempt great things for God, and expect great things from God," he uttered a sentiment which for more than a hundred years has been the slogan of Christian warriors in every land.

In one of his strongest and most beautiful parables, Christ tells us that "the seed is the word"—the Word of God. In the moral world he was the greatest of all seed-sowers. He wrote no exhaustive treatises. It is doubtful whether he ever expressed a thought of his mind in writing. He preached no elaborate sermons. He dropped here and there brief utterances which embodied great general truths. In a few well-chosen words he gave to the world a heritage of thought that has vitalized and enriched all the ages that have succeeded him. "Come unto me, all ye that are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "It is more blessed to give than to receive." "As ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them." "Love your enemies." "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." The great truths expressed in these brief sayings have been expounded in millions of volumes and elaborated into countless sermons. They have carried comfort, peace and salvation to numberless souls. They have begotten the world's noblest institutions. They have inspired the holiest and loftiest ambitions, and guided men in the achievement of the divinest undertakings. They have controlled the counsels of cabinets and shaped the policies of nations. Directly and indirectly they have contributed to the civilization of the earth all that is worth preserving. The contribution of one great thought to the world's intellectual treasure, or of one magnetic expression that will quicken the pulses of a nation and inspire a generation of men for a loftier achievement, is worthy of any man's ambition and effort.

Truth is a seed that must be planted. "Cast thy bread upon the waters." Worthless weeds we neither plant nor cultivate. They spring up everywhere in field and forest. But the grain we convert into bread, and the luscious fruits which are bought and sold in our markets are God's blessings on labor. The seeds of error and sin will grow wherever they chance to fall, but truth and righteousness must be sown and nurtured by the hand of intelligence and piety.

In the kingdom of God there are no accidental harvests. Every stalk there has sprung from a seed that was planted. Every head of golden grain is the product of skilful and patient labor. There are no accidental conversions. No soul untaught and unguided by some other human soul, by tongue or pen, ever entered into the fold of God. There is not in the whole world a true Christian character that is not the fruit of the spiritual toil of some Christian man or woman. There never came up a seed in the Lord's garden that was not planted there.

Christ said, "The field is the world, and the seed is the Word of God." The Word of God is the blessed Gospel of his incarnate Son. There is the great broad field of humanity, and here is the seed of divine truth. But how shall this divine seed get into the soil of that great field? It cannot get there by any power inherent in itself. This Gospel will never transport itself from nation to nation and from tribe to tribe of our sinful race. It must be carried. Some creature, human or divine, must take it upon his lips, go hence and proclaim it to the perishing millions.

God will not without some instrumentality put his truth into the hearts of men. How shall the seed be planted? It must be done by God's intelligent creatures. It must be done by men. "Go ye—ye men—into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." "Go teach all nations." It must be done by Christian men—men who have received the divine seed into their own hearts, and within whose souls there has sprung up a harvest of salvation and of imperishable joy and gladness. There is neither religion nor common sense in opposing missions. The church member who expects the kingdom of Christ to grow and conquer the world without the agencies which Christ provided for in his last words to his disciples, is either hopelessly idiotic or wilfully rebellious against the great Head of the church.

From this obligation to plant the seed of divine truth in human minds and hearts, no Christian is exempt. Alas! How many are attempting to excuse themselves from any participation in this sacred work. There are some who treat religion as a question of metaphysics. They cannot reconcile God's decrees with man's free agency. They try to persuade themselves that their inability to do this relieves them of all responsibility. How weak and foolish are these men who attempt to conform their conduct to decrees which are hidden in the infinite solitude of God's infinite being. We need to be concerned only about duty, and when we come to the oracles of God, that is as clear to us as the undoubted sun at noon. Is it the duty of every Christian to teach lost men the way of salvation? Is it the duty of every Christian to aid in sending this Gospel into "the regions beyond?" The answer which God's book makes to these questions is so direct and finite and intelligible that no man of sound mind who accepts the Bible as the revealed will of God, will ever doubt that it is his obligation to aid in giving the redeeming light of the Gospel to the whole world.

There are some who treat religion as a matter of emotion. They measure their growth in grace by their good feelings. Their highest ideal of Christian life is a state of spiritual exaltation, which finds expression in shouts and hallelujah songs. They climb some imaginary mount of transfiguration and remain there, leaving the work of God's kingdom to be done by men and women who have fewer dreams and visions, but more of the grace of giving and doing. Feeling that does not vitalize a man's faculties, and impel him towards duty and usefulness in the world, is worthless.

I believe in what is called "Christian experience." I honor an experienced Christian, provided he is experienced in Christian service as well as in pious emotion. When I say that the brave men who constitute Nashville's fire department are experienced firemen, you know I do not mean that they are men who spend their lives in indolent ecstasy, or in dreaming about victories over great conflagrations. You know I mean that they are men of keen thought and hard labor—men who have acquired constructive skill and practical sagacity in extinguishing flames. When I declare that a certain man in this city is an experienced politician, you know that I do not mean a political dreamer—one who secludes himself from the din and clamor of political strife, and who burns out his life in ecstacies over the victories of some favorite candidate, or in bitter regrets over the misfortunes of another. You know that I mean a man who has acquired wisdom and skill in the organization and management of political movements—a man who has learned how to excite and control the prejudices and passions of great masses of men, and how to make them subservient to a great political scheme. When I speak of an experienced Christian, let it be understood that I do not mean a mere man of feeling, but one who from years of arduous and self-sacrificing service in the cause of Christ is experienced, not only in happy emotions, but in useful labor—experienced in ploughing the soil and sowing the seed in the great broad field of Christian enterprise.

There are others who regard the work of Christ's kingdom as something that can be done by proxy, and who prefer to do the paying while their fellow Christians do the labor. Where in all the revealed will of God is there a line, or a word, which supports the idea that one Christian may hire another Christian to do his share of Gospel work? The Christian whom you hire to do your work must do his own, and in doing that he can do no more. When will such men learn that giving money is only one element of Christian service, and that no man is obedient to the will of God until he surrenders himself with his money to the great work of saving his fellow-men from sin and hell?

The obvious meaning of our text is that just as the Egyptian cast his seed on the water, that it might drop into the soft and porous soil beneath, so we should cast the seeds of Gospel truth, that they may fall into hearts made soft and receptive by the Spirit of God.

Connected with this divine command to plant the truth there is a divine promise: "Thou shalt find it after many days." When the Nile had subsided, and the fields covered by the overflow reappeared, the grain that had dropped into the soft rich sediment beneath the waters sprouted and came forth, and where the flood had been, there were vast fields of green and luxuriant vegetation.

"Thou shalt find it." That means that the seeds of divine truth which you drop into human minds are not lost. They may be hidden beneath floods of evil for "many days," but in God's own time you shall see that they are neither destroyed nor lost. He who never sleeps, nor slumbers, watches them, preserves them, and will cause them to take root, spring up and grow unto harvest. Unchangeable as the throne of the eternal God, and as operative as the law of gravitation, is that great law of the spiritual world, which says, "Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." While the Almighty sits upon the throne of the universe our labor in the Lord can never be in vain.

Let it be understood that God has not promised to bless and prosper any sort of seed that you may choose to sow. It is only the truth that he will prosper. A great deal is taught that is not truth. Men are saved only by believing the truth. Falsehood and error never emancipate a soul from guilt. The truth may be taught unskillfully. A farmer may sow good seed at a time, and in a way, to insure failure. Corn planted at the wrong season, or planted either too shallow or too deep will come to nothing. The sower of Gospel truth should know when and where and how to sow. A few years ago a zealous country preacher boarded a railroad train coming into the city of Atlanta, and in a very boisterous manner began to expound to his fellow travelers New Testament doctrine. He sowed the seed; he sowed the truth, but in the wrong place, and at the wrong time. The result was not only a failure to do good, but a real injury inflicted upon a cause which he loved and desired to help.

Good seed, planted and cared for according to the divine prescription, will not disappoint us. We shall find it, though it be after many days. If not in this world, in the next you shall find the fruit of it. I once saw a very aged Christian die. A few days before he told me of his unconverted son, who had always despised his instruction and laughed at his warnings. When the spirit of the old man had returned to its resting place in the bosom of God, and everything in the death-chamber was wrapped in a hallowed silence, I saw the wicked and defiant son come and take the cold dead hands in his own and say, "O, my father, you did not teach and warn me in vain. By the grace of God, I will meet you in heaven." From that hour to the present I have watched the conduct of that son. I am confident that "after many days" the old man will stand where the everlasting gates are lifted up, and welcome to the marriage supper of the Lamb the wayward child who brought down his gray hairs in sorrow to the grave.

In prosecuting the sacred enterprise of transforming individuals, communities and nations by the divinely appointed means committed to our hands, we often seem to be casting bread upon the waters. We seem often to be wasting our time and energies in undertakings, which to human view appear to be impossible. But to the man who relies upon the promises of a covenant keeping God, and who realizes that behind all human agencies in the Kingdom of Christ, there is a divine and unconquerable energy, nothing that God has required of him is impossible. To some of you, doubtless, the work of preaching the Gospel to a company of convicted criminals, or to a tribe of untutored savages, or to a nation of idolaters, seems as unprofitable as casting bread upon the waters. But there is no class of criminals, and no tribe of savages, and no nation of pagans in which God has not raised up witnesses to testify to the transforming power of the Gospel.

Doubtless you are not ignorant of the fact that Jerry McAuley, the founder and superintendent of one of the most successful city missionary movements ever undertaken in this country, once wore a felon's chain, and slept in a felon's cell. When he died, fourteen years ago, he was in purity of heart and life, the peer of any living man.

I can testify to the truth of this story. A few years ago a man under an assumed name came to a Christian friend of mine and said: "My father died in State prison. My two brothers are now in the convict's camp. My only sister is a prostitute, and a house of ill-repute, and a few years ago I stole from my employer the sum of $2,300. I am a fugitive from justice, and looking for some man in the wide, wide world who has the heart to pity and help so depraved and miserable a wretch as I know myself to be." In response to his pathetic appeal, my friend said to him: "Sir, you need not go further. You have found the man who will help you, if you will follow his advice. I will replace the money which you have stolen, and give you a good paying situation in my business, if you will from this day be an honest man, and allow a little percentage of your income to be used in liquidating your indebtedness." The poor criminal was overcome by this unexpected exhibition of kindness. He gratefully accepted the offer, and up to this day has faithfully fulfilled every promise which he made to his benefactor. Through the ministry of the same man he has become an earnest Christian, and one of the most successful of Sunday School teachers. Such illustrations as these convince us of the saving power of the Gospel.

LIFE IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Some Interesting Facts About Our New Island Possessions in the Far East—A Much Mixed Population—Oppressive Taxation—Our Military Expedition.

IN an interview with Mr. Manley M. Sherman, of Los Angeles, Cal., in the New York Sun, much is related concerning the Philippines that will be read with interest by Americans everywhere. Should the United States retain the islands, they will prove to be a very valuable addition to our territory. Even under the tyrannical oppression of Spain, the exports in 1897 amounted to $30,000,000. With American enterprise and the use of machinery, instead of the slow, laborious hand-work, that amount in a few years might be doubled. At present almost all work is done by hand, machinery being practically unknown. The soil is so rich that it is even profitable to raise crops in the slow, laborious and expensive manner. Being near the equator, the climate is very enervating. The temperature is not so high, the average being about 72 degrees, but the humidity is unbearable during May and June. For some seven or eight months it is so hot that it is almost impossible for anybody to work in the day time. All the work of the day is crowded into three or four hours in the cool of the morning. At 4 or 5 A.M. shops open, and women make their purchases for the day. Then attend to their business, and by 8 A.M. everything is finished. Blinds are put up on all the shop windows, residences are closed, windows and doors fastened, and the streets look deserted. From 8 A.M. until 4 P.M. almost the entire population goes to sleep in hammocks or on cane lounges.

At sundown the shops are opened, the people swarm out into their houses, and the whole town is alive again. Many go to these gatherings in the evening or visit the shops; some take calls or stroll up and down the Luneta, the Fifth Avenue of Manila. Here people of all classes and nationalities are seen taking their evening walks; here by Spaniards, dressed in the latest styles; native Malays, Chinese, Hindoos, Javanese officers and "Bocals," or native officials, all enjoying the cool breezes that usually spring up at sundown.

Manila is a dull dusty old town, and its appearance is anything but inviting, the musty old two-story houses are closed up with their board shutters and heavy doors almost all day long. A very peculiar thing about the windows in Manila is that they are made of small transparent pieces of oyster shell which tempers the hot rays of the sun. All the more windows are mean little things and the stores themselves are nothing like our American stores. They have very few conveniences. "There are Japanese by hundreds. Chinese by scores, and native Malays and Negritos by thousands. They all wear light, flowing garments of gay colored fabrics. Here comes a company of native girls with raven hair and the blackest of black eyes, set off with fresh olive complexions and the ruddiest of lips. They wear black lace mantilla on their heads, and some pretty flower decks their hair. Their dress is of loose, thin red and white fabrics. They go sauntering along behind a parent or chaperon. Spanish soldiers and naval officers in gaudy uniforms are always in the throngs that promenade the Luneta at night. Here there are Europeans in linen suits and bamboo helmet hats. Occasionally one may see an American among the promenaders, but there are fewer than 150 Americans on Luzon Island. The parade continues back and forth until after midnight. Fashion and poverty go side by side."

Everything Taxed.

Taxes in Manila are ruinously high. Every man, after he has become of age, must pay an annual poll tax of eighteen dollars, and every woman fourteen dollars. Almost every business is taxed; farmers have to pay a tax before they can gather the crops; they are taxed also for cutting the own wood, shearing their sheep and for killing their animals for marketing. There are also taxes for marriages and funerals, and upon all articles of furniture, and on stores, mills, factories and theatres.

All these make life very hard for a workingman, who often earns not more than five cents a day. When a man or woman cannot pay the taxes, the property is sold and the amount taken out. If it does not bring the required amount, the individual is thrown into prison. Women are frequently tied to the whipping-posts in some of the smaller towns for neglecting to pay some small tax, on some vegetables or fruits they have raised. These taxes go to maintain Spain's army and navy.

A Land of Earthquakes.

The Philippine group is of volcanic origin. Scientists come from America and England to study the great volcanoes, some of which are the most violent in the whole world, and are in constant eruption. Earthquakes are of frequent occurrence; sometimes as many as eight or ten shocks being felt in a day; but the rule is one shock every ten or twelve days. About ten years ago, Luzon Island was violently shaken by an earthquake, most of the houses were demolished and 2,000 people killed. On Negros Island, an earthquake occurred, in 1860, which killed about 7,000 people and destroyed nearly all the buildings on the island. Gaping fissures were made in the earth, into which the sea rushed, making canals miles long and wide enough to sail a good-sized ship.

Education receives very little attention among the natives. Some of them know absolutely nothing of geography, and as far as the United States is concerned, they do not know whether it is in China, Australia, or South America. They are a very easy-going people, fond of amusements and dancing, and rather inclined to be lazy, and poverty is the rule rather than affluence. "Under a good government," Mr. Sherman adds, "there would never be a suggestion of rebellion and these people could be made prosperous."

Our Military Expedition.

Gen. Wesley Merritt, the new military governor of the Philippines, and who commands the expedition to those islands, is the second officer in rank in the United States Army. He served with distinction in the Civil War on the staff of Gen. Sheridan. In that long campaign he showed himself both valorous and sagacious. He was born in New York City, in 1836, his father being a lawyer by profession. The elder Merritt, however, abandoned law for agriculture, and bought a farm near Bellville, Ill., where the greater part of Wesley's youthful years were spent. He worked on the farm, attended the local school, and helped his father in various ways. He had, by turns, experience as type-setter, publisher, editor and lawyer before his real career began. At sixteen he began the study of law, but a vacancy occurring in the cadet corps at West Point, the influence of Gov. Bissell was secured, and young Merritt's military career opened. Among his classmates were many who afterward became distinguished in the field. Gen. Merritt was married in 1871 to Miss Caroline Warren, of Cincinnati, and became a widower in 1893. He has no family.

Gen. Merritt is a leader in whom the executive and judicial qualities are happily united, and he will doubtless make an excellent Governor for our newly-acquired colony. He will have to deal with a population which includes various nationalities, the Malay predominating.

Rebellions Frequent.

Late advices from Manila report frequent outbreaks by the natives against the Spaniards in the city. Excitable and revengeful by nature, and with the memory of long years of oppression still rankling within them, it is not surprising that the Malays should feel bitter animosity toward their Spanish rulers, whose power is now overthrown by the Americans. Spain contends that over thirty thousand natives will ally themselves with the Spanish troops, to resist our proposed occupation. But this claim is discredited by Gen. Aguinaldo and other insurgent leaders, who declare that the natives will unitedly support the Americans against the Spanish. There is little doubt that, with the 25,000 troops to be placed at his disposal, and with Admiral Dewey's reinforced squadron to support him, Gen. Merritt will be able to occupy the island and to effectively control the disturbing elements among its population.

An Idol-Worshipper Won.

Miss Mabel C. Hartford, of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, writes from Kucheng the following instructive experience: "A few days ago I went to a home where the family were all Christians except one brother's wife. She was a widow, and still clung to her idols. All the family had pleaded with her in vain. I said, I will go in here. I talked with her a short time, and two days later the brother came down to see me. He looked so happy and said: 'Last night I again urged my sister-in-law to give her heart to Christ, and she said, 'Yes, I decided yesterday while Miss Hartford was talking to me to serve the true God.' I know she is in earnest, for she never said anything like this before. I am very happy.' And don't you suppose I was happy?"

Our Flag.

OUR fathers fought and bled and died
To save this flag—to-day our pride.
Their sons, our veterans, strong and true,
Marched 'neath its folds, brave deeds to do.
Now we accept the sacred trust
And promise—come whatever must:
No star shall fail from out the blue,
No stripe shall lose its scarlet hue,
No foe insult on land or main,
No suppliant clasp its folds in vain,
No foot shall trample in the dust
The flag we hold a sacred trust.

Good Reading for Our Boys in Blue.

Friends Who Are Sending "The Christian Herald" to the Front.

NO paper is more cordially welcomed at the military camps than THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Our army chaplains assure us that it is a valuable aid in their spiritual work among the soldiers, and that its influence among the rank and file is always a good one. Already many of our regular subscribers are taking advantage of our offer to send the paper to their friends or relatives in the army at the special rate of 25 cents for a three-months' subscription, or $1 for a year. Those who send it are thus represented on the field, even when they cannot visit the soldier boys in person, and they have besides the assurance that their gift will always be gladly received. In this way, although thousands of miles may intervene, they are ever kept in memory by the soldier lads who receive the paper, and who know that it comes to them with the kindest wishes and the prayers of loving friends at home.

The following subscriptions have been received and the paper in every case is being regularly forwarded.

HELPFUL ANECDOTES

By Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D.

STORING UP POWER.

IT is a great art to know how to use one's off hours to advantage. Many men and women store up in the leisure time from their business, reserve knowledge and strength, which can be drawn up in future emergencies. The Christian should follow the example of Jesus who used his quiet hours for prayer and heavenly meditations that fitted him to respond to the demands made on him by the multitudes.

One of the most notable features of the management of electric light stations during the past few years, is the introduction of storage batteries. During the day the demand for power is small, but from dusk until midnight it is very great. If all the electricity expended during the latter period be obtained directly from the dynamos, both the generators and steam engines must have a greater capacity than would otherwise be required. To meet this necessity a storage battery is added to the plant, and this is charged during the dull hours of business so that at night a part of the supply can be taken from the accumulators and only part need to be generated by the dynamos.

Human Sympathy.

The need of human sympathy and fellowship is universal. There must be something very warped and wrong about any man or woman who does not feel the need of kindly fellowship with their fellows. The Christian church needs to meet this demand of human nature to the utmost extent.

Some peculiarities of the Esquimaux herders employed in Alaska, by the United States government to take care of the reindeer herd, have recently been discussed in government circles, as an outlay of money was involved. This was in special reference to the employment of two herders where one would have been sufficient, as in the matter of watching the herd of reindeer through the night. On investigation it was found that the Esquimaux are afraid of the darkness which is more intense, than that of the long polar night, and one would not watch alone. These men are truly children of nature as they prefer to tell the time by the Big Dipper, deeming that to be the most reliable clock in the universe.

Laying by for the Future.

God has put the spirit of providence into the brains of all his creatures. It is one of the first duties of human life to store up food both for body and soul. An improvident life is a wicked life.

Down in Mexico there lives a woodpecker who stores his nuts and acorns in the hollow stalks of the yuccas and magueys. These hollow stalks are separated by joints into several cavities, and the sagacious bird has somehow found this out, and bores a hole at the upper end of each joint, and another at the lower, through which to extract the acorns when wanted. Then it fills up the stalks solidly, and leaves its stores there until needed, safe from the depredations of any other thievish bird or four-footed animal. A recent observer noticed this curious habit on a hill in the midst of a desert. The hill was covered with yuccas and magueys but the nearest oak trees were thirty miles away, and so this industrious bird had to make a flight of sixty miles for each acorn stored thus in the stalks.

Losing by Dishonesty.

In spite of all the fun and criticism that has been poked at the old proverb written at the top of the copy books a generation ago, "Honesty is the best policy," I still maintain that it is true that honesty is not only the best as a principle, but as a policy as well.

A Dubuque man had lived ten years in a house for which he had paid no rent and no taxes. It belonged to the Gas Company, and he had paid his regularly and the property of the company was transferred to the city. He says himself: "I don't remember how long it was since I stopped paying rent. It was when the gas office was on Seventh street. I went there one day with my rent, and offered it to Mr White, who had charge of the Gas Company's real estate, but he refused to take it and told me that it was to be paid at the City Treasurer's office in the future. I took it up there, and a young man there said he could not take it as he couldn't find record of any such house. He told me that they would notify me when they were ready to take my money. I went back to Mr White, and he advised me to go home and wait until I heard from them. Well, I waited. Nobody came to collect the money until recently, when the city discovered its title and sent a man to collect." The tenant got a day to consider, and promptly skipped. But his experience with a free rent does not seem to be satisfactory, if we may trust his wife. "Yes," says she, resentfully, "he thought it was a snap, and look where he is now—no money, no business, looking for a job, and a family to support. He wouldn't take my advice, and move where business is good, but he hugged his snap and stuck there in that stagnant neighborhood and spent money on repairs for the house, and didn't make any money."

Trust not the Enemy's Music.

It is never safe to receive favors from an enemy. Many Christians have learned by sad experience that the enemy of their souls never bestow gifts upon the children of God without intending to work them harm.

In 1812, a British gunboat was lying near the shore of Mathews County, Virginia. A young boy who hated the British, found a nest of wasps one day, and, securely plugging up the entrances with mud, he cut the limb to which it adhered, and carried the trophy on board the gunboat, to show it to the crew. The curiosity of the crew was at once excited, and they wanted to know what it was. "A hummingbird's nest," said the boy. "Don't you hear them inside?" The crew listened and could hear the indignant wasps keeping up a lively noise. The boy was invited below, and, to show his good will made the boat a present of the nest, cautioning the crew, however, not to let the birds out then, as they would follow him ashore. The crew waited until the boy had gained the shore, then took out the plugs, and the wasps at once proceeded to business. They never stopped work until they had made every one of the crew take to the water. The crew of the gunboat searched the country for the boy, and his fate would have been sad indeed, if they had captured him.

Saving by Giving.

The taunt which the mob flung at Christ on the cross, "He saved others, but himself he cannot save," had a vein of eternal truth in it, which is often illustrated.

A young man in the town of Sing Sing, was walking on the street with a little girl, twelve years old, when the child suddenly screamed. The young man saw a wire hanging down from a pole, and discovered that it had pressed against the lip of the little girl and burned her. He grasped the wire in his hand to pull it away from the girl, and saved her life, but almost immediately dropped dead.

Standing on One's Merits.

If a man wants to know his weaknesses as well as his strength, he needs to go where people do not know him, and where titles or money, or past achievements do not prejudice his associates in his favor.

The story is told of Dr. Temple, the archbishop of Canterbury, that he once entered an East end church at night, and standing in a back pew joined in the singing of a Moody and Sankey hymn. Next to him stood a workingman who was singing lustily in tune. The archbishop sang lustily also, but not in tune. The workingman stood the discord as long as he could, and then, nudging the church dignitary, said in a whisper: "Here, dry up, mister; you are spoiling the show."

A Touch of Human Fellowship.

In the unconventional frontier sections of the great West one often sees realized the truth of the proverb that "one touch of nature makes the whole world kin."

A county clerk was calling the roll of grand jurymen, recently, in a Southern California county. He came to the name of Joe Mandivil. At the sound of his name Mr. Mandivil stood up. Tall, with slightly bent shoulders, and with an air about him that bespoke the rough, but tender hearted frontiersman, he made a striking figure in the court room.

"Your Honor," said he, "I should like to make a statement. I live away up the Colorado River, a long ways above the Picacho Landing."

A few dapper young men about the court room smiled audibly, but the frontiersman ran his hands through his hair and continued: "Fact is, it's four hundred and twenty miles the way I have to come from my home to this Court, and when I received word that I was summoned I didn't have the money for the trip, and was compelled to borrow fifty dollars at two per cent. per month, to pay my fare. I've got three little children out there on the desert, and they're all alone, for my wife died three months ago, and I ought to be home looking after those kids right now."

Strange, but no one thought of laughing; even those well-dressed youths sobered up most surprisingly, and all listened intently while the frontiersman finished his story.

"I've had a little trouble lately," he said simply, "and a lot of assessment work on some mines needs to be done. I ought to be there to do it, and I'd like to be excused."

"And I guess you may be," said the Court, and an hour later Joe Mandivil was homeward bound to his three motherless bairns out on the desert.

The Light in the Window.

When Edward Dunbar was a small boy he lived in New Bedford, Mass., and worked in a factory. His mother lived at the foot of the street on which the factory was located, and as the lad's work kept him away till after dark, she always placed a light in the window to guide his footsteps homeward.

One day the boy took a notion to go to sea, and off he went for a three year's cruise. During his absence his mother fell ill, and was at death's door. She talked incessantly about her boy, and every night she asked those around her to place a light in the window in anticipation of his return. When she realized that the end had come, she said: "Tell Edward that I will set a light in the window of heaven for him." These were her last words. The lad had grown to manhood ere he returned home, and his mother's dying message had such an effect upon him that he reformed, and in the course of his reformation he wrote the song: "There's a Light in the Window for Thee, Brother." This hymn has done a great deal of good, and has no doubt led many people to see the light in the window of heaven for them. The sad part of the story is that Dunbar himself fell into sin again, and became a poor vagabond upon the face of the earth. He died in jail where he had begged lodgings in a Kansas town, and some Christian people erected a marble slab over his grave, on which these words were inscribed: "Here Lies Edward Dunbar, who wrote 'There's a Light in the Window for Thee, Brother.'" It is not enough that we see the light and turn toward it, we must endure patiently unto the end. The crown is promised to the man who overcomes. "Hold fast that thou hast that no man take thy crown."

ROUND TOP, NORTHFIELD, WHERE MANY RELIGIOUS GATHERINGS ARE HELD.

The Power of a Free Spirit.

A fearless soul that is free and untrammelled in thought and movement counts for a great deal more than a much weightier personality that is fettered by conventionalities.

In a big bird store where there are hundreds of birds of many kinds incessantly squawking, chirping, and singing, there is often one that is free. A tiny titmouse. It flits about the store at will. It it wants a drink, it perches on the rim of a goldfish globe, no doubt to the great surprise of the goldfishes, and certainly to that of the human beholders who wonder that it doesn't fall in. It has to bend over so far to reach the water. There is not a cage in the store into which the titmouse does not dare to go. It goes in and out of all the larger cages with perfect ease. It never hesitates to go through the bars of the cage imprisoning the crossest parrot. The titmouse almost flies through these cages, stopping in each perhaps, to eat of the parrot's food, but they never molest it. Parrots that would bite at the finger of a man who should put his hand near enough to them outside of their cage, stand back in fright or amazement when the little titmouse brave dashes in, and perches on their feed cups.

The Northfield Conferences.

The Programme of the Summer Work Now Completed.

PLANS for the Northfield Summer Conferences which consist of a series of conventions and special Bible lectures, are rapidly developing. Mr. Moody's commencement sermon, to be delivered to the graduating classes of the Northfield Seminary and Mt. Hermon School, Sunday, June 12, will be followed that week by the various commencement week exercises.

The World's Student Conference opens July 1, and continues through to July 11. This conference, since its beginning, has been a great power-house, where not only has spiritual power been developed, but the latent power in thousands of young men has been quickened into the highest and truest Christian living. This conference is to have among its speakers a number of teachers Bishop Potter, New York; R. R. P. Mackay, Toronto, Can.; President Augustus H. Strong, Rochester Theological Seminary; Chancellor William McDowell, Denver University; Mr. Robert E. Speer, New York; Rev. Edward Judson, D.D., New York; Rev. J. B. Johnston, England; Prof. E. I. Bosworth, Oberlin College; Mr. S. M. Sayford, Boston; Dr. C. I. Scofield, and Mr. Moody.

The Young Women's Christian Association Conference is to be held from July 13 to 22. Its subject is the consideration of the best methods for the various phases of the Association's work, the training of college women for organized Christian work among their fellow-students and the forming of habits of thorough personal Bible study and daily communion with God. Several of the leaders for the Student Conference will also conduct classes and deliver lectures at that time, namely: Mr. Robert E. Speer, Chancellor McDowell, Rev. Edward Judson, Rev. J. Bell Johnston, Prof. E. I. Bosworth, Dr. C. I. Schofield and Mr. D. L. Moody. Among other speakers will be Mrs. M. E. Sangster, Mrs. Florence Stowell, Mrs. Lucy Bainbridge and Miss Wild, of New York, Dr. Julia Morton Plummer, Boston; and Mrs. Gerald Dale, Jr., formerly of Syria.

From the close of the Young Women's to the opening of the General Conference, and also from its close until the first of September, special Bible lectures will be given each day by prominent Bible teachers. The General Conference for Christian workers opens July 29 and continues until August 18. Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, of England, and Rev. George H. Macgregor will be warmly welcomed again by all who had the pleasure of listening to them during the summer of '97. Prebendary H. W. Webb Pepioe has again been invited for this Conference, and has accepted the invitation.

During July and August, Camp Northfield for Young Men will be open. Mr. Moody suggests that churches, Endeavor Societies and Y. M. C. A.'s each have a tent at Camp Northfield, and keep it filled throughout the season by sending different delegations to stay one or two weeks. Large business houses, he thinks, would find it to their advantage to have a tent and encourage their employees to spend their vacations there in the same way. "I believe we could send fire into all the towns of the eastern states," he adds, "if the Christian people interested in young men would co-operate with us in this." Mr. A. G. Moody, East Northfield, Mass., the Secretary of the Association, will answer all inquiries.
